Now, I do not suppose that the framers of this bill believed that any honest attempt to curtail expenditures of navy-yards would be resisted. I did not suppose that they would be resisted excepting that whenever you undertake to strike at anything in the neighborhood of a Representative or a Senator of course he will rally to the support of that, and the older the abuse the stronger he will rally; but that there should be any general objection to this feature giving the Secretary of the Navy the right for the time being to shut up a yard and report the reasons that he acts upon to Congress, I did not suppose. That is all there is in this provision. The Secretary may shut up a yard and transfer the property and report to Congress his reasons, and there is nothing inconsistent between this and the amendment just adopted on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts. That, in fact, is the continuation or rather the afterpiece of this clause in the bill. The Secretary may go on if he chooses; he may shut up one, two, or three yards, and report to Congress, and the Senator from Massachusetts comes in with his amendment that a commission shall report to Congress what of these yards shall be sold. Now, the question we are being confronted with is whether we will go on and will keep up nine navy-yards that have in the last seven years cost us in expending $11,957,000 of the public funds $10,506,000 and over. In other words, is it good thrift for a man engaged in business who does a $100,000 business to spend $95,000 in doing that business? Senators cannot get away from that. The question whether you give too much power to the Secretary of the Navy does not come in here. This power that the Senator from Delaware referred to, in order perhaps to arouse some political feeling, in the matter of putting men at work at these places just before an election, is a power he has now. This has nothing to do with that. That is a power not touched anywhere. That must rest with the wisdom and good faith and fidelity and good sense of the Secretary of the Navy. This has nothing to do with that. This simply says that if the Secretary finds in the interest of economy that we do not need actually all these yards he may close them, transfer the property somewhere else, and then report to Congress. Does that leave us defenseless? The Senator from Delaware objects to that because there may be danger. Why, Mr. President, if I had time to go over the facts I could show that almost all these navy-yards instead of being a defense are only an invitation. I have a navy-yard in my own State. I ought to be rallying here as a navy-yard Senator to try to keep it, and I ought to want ships to go there to be repaired, I suppose, and I ought to want to keep up the proportion spent in repairing it, in order to make, as the Senator from New Hampshire says, the necessity for a navy-yard. He finds fault because Senators have voted to keep in the proposition limiting repairs, because he says that takes away the necessity for a navy-yard.

That is the theory on which resistance to this bill runs; you must make a necessity for a navy-yard and then keep the navy-yard. Notwithstanding I have a navy-yard in my own State, I wish, and I have been trying to do it for ten years, that the first steps should be taken for reducing these enormously expensive yards, and you never will do it until you first get some of them shut up, have the facts reported to Congress, and let them act upon the subject, and if the Maine navy-yard goes, let it go. In my judgment, with a yard at New York and a yard at Norfolk and a yard at Mare Island, we have got every navy-yard that the country needs, either for defense or construction, and work could be better done at these great yards than by distributing it all around, and making these, as they have been called, political asylums in so many States; but we never shall do it unless we begin now.

Mr. HOAR. I want to ask the Senator before he sits down whether he understands the word "perishable" in line 375 to qualify the term "stores and property?" That is, can only perishable stores and perishable property be transferred, or all other property of every description?

Mr. BUTLER. It evidently means property of every description.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know about that.

Mr. HALE. It is not intended that the Secretary shall transfer anything excepting the movable, portable property. He cannot transfer the great plant and the great establishment that makes the navy-yard under that provision. It is perishable stores and property that he may transfer.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the point of difference.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator any objection to making that plain by repeating the word "perishable" before "property," in line 376?

Mr. HALE. All right.

Mr. HOAR. Let that amendment be made.

Mr. HALE. All of that great question about the plant will come up under the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts hereafter when the report is made.

Mr. HOAR. Then I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment which he will state.

Mr. HOAR. At the beginning of line 376 I move to insert the word "perishable" before "property."

Mr. HALE. If I wanted to transfer all the property I should have said, "He may transfer all property and perishable stores."

Mr. HOAR. I have no doubt that is the meaning of the bill now and is the meaning of the committee, but a good many gentlemen think otherwise.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the clause will be so modified. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to strike out the proviso.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, nine navy-yards may be too many for the United States in its present contracted condition, with its small population of only fifty million people. The nine navy-yards which were established here, however, were established under very economical and very wise administrations, and they ought not to be very lightly dispensed with. The Senator from Massachusetts has obtained the consent of the Senate to vote into this bill an amendment by which a commission of three is to be appointed to consider the question and to report to Congress their conclusions as to whether any navy-yards, and which of them, ought to be dispensed with. After having voted that amendment upon this bill it is altogether proper, and indeed it ought to be a matter of respect, that we should give that commission, when it shall be raised, the consideration of the question of the dismantling of these navy-yards. If in the mean time the Secretary of the Navy should commence the work of dismantlement and demolition by the transfer of the plant or whatever it is belonging to any navy-yards to others, and should close some up, the commission will have very little option, very little determination. The Secretary of the Navy will have practically decided the whole question before the time the commission comes to act.

I think we ought to defer this matter, particularly after the Senate has taken a much wiser line of action in the appointment of this commission, which I regret does not consist of five persons or nine persons instead of three, so that we could have the benefit of more experience and more ability in the management of this very important subject.

The Senator from Maine in the enumeration of the navy-yards that he thought were quite sufficient for this country omitted, I suppose by design, the navy-yard at Pensacola, the only place in the Gulf of Mexico where we can have a navy-yard to any advantage to the Government. I suppose really it is one of the purposes of this bill in its present form to discontinue the navy-yard at Pensacola, a navy-yard that lies closer to the live-oak timber, to the pine timber, to the great production of iron in this country at cheap rates than any other in the American Union. There is no one that can compare with it.

We are now at peace. Perhaps we may remain so. We flatter ourselves that we are never to have a war in this country; that there is no occasion for our preparing for defense against Spain or against England or against any other power. These powers hold the outposts of the sea all around our coast, commencing with the Caribbean Islands and going up to Newfoundland. They look down upon our ports, and, as was observed the other day, they can in four days' sail concentrate a fleet from any of their points upon any port of the United States that they choose. Well, a navy-yard may not be necessary for the building of ships, but it certainly is very necessary for the repair of ships. The navy-yard at Pensacola is well defended. There was scarcely any other reason for building Fort Pickens at the mouth of the Pensacola Bay than to protect the American navy-yard that is there. Pensacola at the time that fort was built was a very inconsiderable village, and there is no internal communication by water, nothing but a few railways into the interior of the country from that point. We have Fort Pickens and we have the navy-yard there; and one of the purposes, as I understand it to be avowed here to-day, is the discontinuance of that navy-yard.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States had better look wisely to that subject before they act, or before they put it into the power of a Secretary of the Navy by dismantling a yard to lead to the conclusion and to force the conclusion upon the country that that yard is after all to be abandoned. We cannot afford to give it up. If we had a fleet now engaged with an enemy in the Gulf of Mexico, a point that is just as open to attack and as liable to be attacked as any, we have no place of retreat for a dismantled or a shattered ship, except the harbor of Pensacola, for her to be repaired in.

Mr. BECK. I agreed in great part with the committee in regard to this provision, and having done so I desire to state in a few words why.

I was one of those who believed, as I believe now, that the most useless, the most expensive, and the most corrupting of all the influences connected with any of the Departments of the Government are the navy-yards under the present system of management, with their abuses and complicated machinery. I believe it was contended in committee—and I shall so vote—that there ought to be only four navy-yards, one at Mare Island, one at Pensacola, one at Norfolk, and one at New London or some other point on that coast; that all the machinery we are using now is absolutely corrupt, absolutely wasteful, and absolutely extravagant. No better argument can be made if a man were to speak a week than the Senator from Maine made the other day in just the statement of this single fact; I will read it again as my argument:

What does the Senate suppose it is costing now to maintain these navy-yards, where in the aggregate the amount of Government work to-day or for a year past has not been more than two or three million dollars? Let me give some of the figures:

Annual cost of civil employes of the several navy-yards:
Washington $99,168 50

Not including the laborers, not including the men who are at work doing the Government work, but the mere civil force, the clerks and writers and assistant clerks and watchmen.

We have been spending $99,168.50 a year on this navy-yard, Senators. We have spent in Boston, $76,588.40; in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, $34,322.95; at Mare Island, $41,823.15; at League Island, $30,415.25; at Pensacola, $13,795.50; at Norfolk, Virginia, $34,916.35; at New York, $47,885.75; total pay of civil force to keep running and open these navy-yards, $378,015.85 every year; and in addition to that there are kept at these yards naval officers costing, at Portsmouth, $70,500 a year; at Boston, $102,970, and in the receiving-ship there, $27,400; at the naval station at New London, where there is no more of a navy-yard than there is here in the Botanic Garden, $24,300 for officers sent there; navy-yard in New York, $148,450 a year, and on the receiving-ship there, $32,624; navy-yard at League Island, $100,940 for naval officers every year, receiving-ship, $22,400; navy-yard at Washington, $92,760, and the receiving-ship, $11,800; navy-yard at Norfolk, $82,450, receiving-ship, $26,000; navy-yard at Pensacola, $27,820; navy-yard at Mare Island, $77,580; receiving-ship at Mare Island, $22,100; total every year, $870,094 of expenditures for salaries of naval officers at these navy-yards; and the grand and disgraceful total is that in spending $11,957,803.65 of the Government money at these different yards during the last five years it has cost the Government to spend that money $10,566,171.79.

If any exhibit can be made worse than that I do not know how to make it. If anybody can show why half a dozen useless navy-yards are maintained in this country in the face of these facts, I should like to see it done.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will state to the Senator that during the time when the ablest minds and the greatest economists who ever lived in this country, who sat in this body, exercised power in the Senate, every one of these navy-yards existed.

Mr. BECK. Oh, yes; and at that time they were building the Maysville road, from Maysville to Lexington, when there was a little tavern on it every three miles, and the road was covered with wagons. Times have changed. We are not building wooden ships to any great extent now, as we did years ago. When the League Island yard was established where it is now and the navy-yard at Philadelphia was sold it was simply a disgraceful job.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether he thinks the Secretary of the Navy ought to be allowed to dispose of this entire subject when we have raised a commission by an amendment put in this bill for the purpose of considering it?

Mr. BECK. I am very glad a commission has been raised. I think it is the first step in the right direction. I never expected to see the party in power willing to consent to the abolition of these navy-yards, and when they are willing to reduce them I am going to stand by and help them.

Mr. HALE. The sooner it is done the better.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Committee on Appropriations has reported a sum for maintaining a civil establishment in the various navy-yards, and a fierce assault has been made from time to time upon this small establishment. I want to call the attention of the Senate to just the process by which they propose to reduce the expenses in the various navy-yards. They simply take the amount estimated by the proper officers of the Government and divide it by 2, without any regard to propriety, expediency, or anything else. They take the sum recommended by the proper officers of the Government and divide it by 2, and that is the way they propose to do it. They have not gone to inquire whether the reduction is profitable, expedient, or wise, but they have divided the estimate by 2. If they want to reduce the expenditures in the various navy-yards—and I agree with them entirely as to the wisdom and propriety of that—let me suggest to them how they can do it.

How are you charging up the amount of these navy-yard expenditures? Take the Washington navy-yard; there is $104,560 annually spent for the naval officers stationed there. I ask if that is a fair charge to the navy-yard? What else have you got for these officers to do? You have got the officers to pay anyway under the law, and an appropriation in this very bill provides for the payment of these officers. They are detailed for duty at the various navy-yards, with the full understanding that there is not much for them to do.

Mr. HALE. And you will not let us cut them down.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am perfectly willing that you shall cut them down. I am in favor of cutting them down. I have voted every time for an intelligent reduction of a top-heavy navy, and I purpose to do it until the end.

Take, for instance, the Kittery yard, in the State of the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the sub-committee. They propose to divide by 2 the $34,000 which are expended there annually in the civil establishment, and the result is of course to turn out of employment a few men who are, in my judgment, nearly all of them absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the affairs of that yard. Take the force at the Kittery yard, take the officers detailed there for duty in a year of the war when a large amount of work was being done; take the year 1863. The whole number of officers at the Kittery yard was eight line officers and seven staff officers. At the present time, take the year 1882, the total number of officers stationed at the Kittery yard is twenty-eight. If by giving a portion of these officers some other duty you save the amount of their salaries in the expenses of the navy-yard then why not detail thirteen of them, the difference between fifteen and twenty-eight, for some other duty, and it will save more in the expense of the navy-yard at Kittery twice over, many times over, than the whole amount proposed to be saved by dividing the civil appropriation by 2; you can save nearly twice as much as the committee save by cutting down this appropriation for the civil establishment, simply, the difference in pay between these officers upon active duty and upon waiting-orders pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.
Mr. ROLLINS. To explain this matter, I submit the following tables:

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to make any speech in five minutes on this subject. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that there is a singular want of logic resulting from the arguments made here on the subject. The Senator from Kentucky thinks that the navy-yard at Pensacola ought to be retained. He concludes, therefore, that this bill is right which gives the Secretary of the Navy the power to abolish it. I do not see that there is any reason of that kind about it. The Senator from Maine says it has cost $9,000,000, I believe, to expend $11,000,000 in the last ten years at all our navy-yards, and therefore all the navy-yards of the United States ought to be abolished; they are an evil, or some of them are evils, and the discretion should be given to the Secretary of the Navy to abolish them. But there is no reason in that kind of argument. The Senate of the United States ought not to act upon propositions so inconsequential and unreasonable as those.

There is no information given but that these navy-yards may promote, as in the opinion of well-informed men they do promote, properly used, the reconstruction of the Navy so as to be a protection for that civil marine which is destined under wise legislation soon again to appear upon the waters of the world. It needs no argument to show that the coast of Florida and Louisiana and Texas and the great commerce of the Gulf of Mexico ought to be protected by legislation requiring a navy-yard to be kept there. What reasonable man will say that the two or three thousand million dollars' worth of commerce which floats upon the Gulf of Mexico shall be exposed without the possibilities of the repair of a ship of war in case of war? Sir, there is no reason in such propositions as these.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. HALE. Let it be reported as amended by the insertion of the word "perishable."

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "cents," in line 367, it is proposed to strike out the following provisos:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy shall find that work at all the navy-yards now maintained cannot be carried on with advantage to the service and economy to the Government he shall suspend work at those yards where he finds it can best be dispensed with, and shall close such yards and transfer all perishable stores and perishable property therefrom to other yards for use therein, and report the facts and the reasons governing his action to the next session of Congress; and at the yards so closed only such officers and employees shall be retained as are necessary to preserve and take care of the property of the Government, and all other persons shall be transferred or discharged, and no deficiency shall be made for maintenance of, or for the civil establishment at, navy-yards: Provided further, That the navy-yard at Washington, District of Columbia, may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be maintained as a manufacturing yard, and that work may be continued in the rope-walk in the Boston navy-yard: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be held to interfere with the permanent improvement of any navy-yard as now authorized by law, or the expenditure for such purpose of any money appropriated by Congress therefor.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] I should vote "yea," if he were here.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 24; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. The cost of maintaining the navy-yards last year amounted to four hundred and fifty-odd thousand dollars. The average cost for the past five years has been $492,000. The spirit of economy which seems to have moved the committee has gone so far as to put the allowance in this bill at $270,000. I do not well understand how we can expect to maintain those yards and take care of them properly at so low an estimate, if any confidence is to be put in the bureau officers of the Department. The estimate of the bureau for the maintenance of the yards is four hundred and forty-odd thousand dollars. I therefore propose to amend the bill, in line 361, by striking out "two" and inserting "three." This is an amendment which I submitted heretofore, and it is in accordance with the estimates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 361, in the appropriation "for general maintenance of yards and docks," after the word "boxes," it is proposed to strike out "$270,000" and insert "$370,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONE.]

Mr. HALE. That is simply changing the appropriation for only one bureau, the Bureau of Yards and Docks. The House put it at $220,000, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, after a hearing, added $50,000, making it $270,000. The Senator from Virginia now comes in and proposes to make it $370,000, thus adding $100,000. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays. I shall not take any more time.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What was the amount appropriated last year?

Mr. HALE. Four hundred and forty thousand dollars. The committee believed that all of the yards could get along with half the money they have been spending heretofore, and the appropriation was cut down in the House $100,000. We made an exception of this bureau and put it up to $270,000, an addition of $50,000. Now it is proposed to add $100,000 more. If the Senate wants to do that and give that money, all right.

Mr. BECK. I want the yeas and nays on the proposition of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HALE. I have called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BECK. I only want a yea-and-nay vote on it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, because I do not think that the sum named in the bill is sufficient to maintain the establishment for which it provides. It may appear to the country to be economy to let public property go to destruction that has cost so much money to bring it into life and existence, but I do not regard that as economy.

I wish to say one word about the navy-yards. I did not know until very lately that it was in the programme to destroy the only navy-yard in our Mediterranean, the yard which naval opinion of the highest order and character has uniformly upheld, of which Farragut said it would be worth a war to maintain it. So great an Englishman as the celebrated Mr. Burke, in the English House of Commons, when the English acquired Florida and the great naval station of Pensacola, put his finger upon the map and said it was worth a million and a war to acquire it. That is in the programme of abolition. Is there statesmanship in thus abolishing a yard which was located under the dictates of the soundest wisdom and the highest naval and military skill that ever controlled the public affairs of this great country, which the great council which sat at Memphis in 1843, presided over by Mr. Calhoun, had pronounced an indispensable necessity to the protection of the great commerce of the valley of the Mississippi? For certain ends and purposes which are not within my comprehension, upon the line of bogus economy it is proposed to put out of existence a yard like this where $10,000,000 of the public money have been expended for the public good, to gratify the notion of some modern economists whose opinions, in my judgment, are worth nothing.

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise the point of order on the amendment under Rule 27. It is not in order, and I make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri makes the point of order upon the amendment under Rule 27.

Mr. MAHONE. When an amendment is based on an estimate of the bureau I would ask whether it is not in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment proposed in pursuance of the estimate of the head of some one of the Departments? That is a question of fact in regard to which the Chair is not advised. If it is not, the Chair will hold the point of order well taken.

Mr. MAHONE. I will state that this proposition was made in pursuance of the estimate of the bureau.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires if it is the fact that it is proposed in pursuance of the estimate of the head of some one of the Departments?

Mr. HALE. The original estimates, I am bound to say, cover the amount embraced in the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that is true, the Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to say that the estimate of the Navy was this amount?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. The estimate made to Congress?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not so understand it.

Mr. HALE. The estimate was made in accordance with the old method of running these yards, not with the idea of any reduction anywhere, but upon the same basis of appropriations as were made last year.

As the Senator from Florida has brought the Pensacola navy-yard on the carpet I want to read here, and that is all, the report on that yard from the Navy Department:

THE BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C. July 13, 1882.

The bureau has the honor to inform the honorable Secretary of the Navy, in response to the inquiry, that the navy-yard at Pensacola, Florida, contains 834 acres, and the total cost of improvements thereon to June 30, 1882, is $6,339,225.96.

The bureau has no means of knowing its present value.

Very respectfully submitted.

EARL ENGLISH,
Acting Chief of Bureau.

The only work in progress at the Pensacola navy-yard for this bureau is the preparation of the Canonculus for being towed north. When this is completed the bureau has no other work for said yard.

The civil officers at present at the navy-yard at Pensacola are the following:

Admiral Porter says:

The Pensacola yard has been partly rebuilt since the late war. It would be of great assistance in case of war, always providing we had a fleet to protect it, for the station is within easy gunshot of an enemy, and could soon be destroyed. The bar at Pensacola, from some unknown cause, has, for the past few years, been extending seaward, and it is surmised that the channel may so change that heavy ships will be unable to enter the port. There has never been more than twenty-two feet of water on the bar. Pensacola has been called the key to the Gulf of Mexico; it might as well be called the key to the Caribbean Sea. Key West is the key to the Gulf, and is the best site in that quarter for a naval station. Our vessels seldom visit Pensacola, but constantly call at Key West for supplies. We have simply a coaling station at this latter point; but in all our trouble with Spain our ships have always rendezvoused at Key West. Whatever we do with regard to using Key West as a naval station, we should so defend it that no enemy could get possession of the place unawares. It is easy of access and difficult to blockade, and no vessel can pass Key West with a proper lookout-ship without being observed.

And yet it is thought we ought not to cut down the expense of the Pensacola navy-yard.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I would be glad if the Senator would permit me to say just one word.

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I do not desire to hinder the Senator. I have only read from the records of the Department.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think that is a very small expenditure at a great yard. I am very glad the Senator read the record.

Mr. HALE. What are the civilians doing there, the long list I read?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. They are all good Republicans.

Mr. HALE. I want to strike them out, no matter if they are Republicans.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not know what they are doing. I suppose their services are necessary for the maintenance of that yard.

Mr. HALE. But the authorities of the yard say they have no further work after they get the Canonius out. There is no further work, and it is an abuse to keep up such an establishment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That yard has been for years the protection of our Mediterranean. I have nothing to say against Key West. Key West is an island in the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. HALE. Admiral Porter says it is a most important point.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Access to Key West is impossible except by water. I know it is on record as the opinion of Admiral Farragut that no place in the Gulf is better suited for a yard than Pensacola. It was the deliberate judgment of Commodore Stewart and all the old officers that it was the only place, if any defense was to be made in that great sea. It was under their recommendation that the yard was established. I do not know precisely the sum of money, whether six or eight or nine million dollars, that has been expended there; but two of our best ships were built there.

If the Government, in the exercise of the discretionary power now residing in it, concentrates its labor and its work at other yards and gives nothing to the only yard of the South, that ought not to be put forth here as a reason for cutting down the few employes who are annually maintained there. Ships stationed in the Gulf of Mexico have passed that yard from Vera Cruz which might have been repaired at that yard, and they were made to travel 1,500 and 2,000 miles to have the repairs done at a favored yard under this discretionary power.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MAHONEY.]

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 7, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—7.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. At the end of line 314 I move to add:

The Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, furnish to the American Ordnance Company fourteen smooth-bore iron guns, of the Rodman, Dahlgren, and Parrott models, of not less than 9-inch bore, and four gun-carriages, and the use of instruments for testing the velocity of projectiles, for the purpose of making tests and experiments in the improvement of heavy ordnance: Provided, That the Government of the United States shall not incur or be liable in any event for any expense in the conduct of such tests or experiments; and, after the same have been completed, and not later than the 1st day of January, 1883, said guns and gun-carriages and instruments shall be returned to the United States; and said American Ordnance Company shall not be liable for any damage said guns or gun-carriages may sustain in the conduct of such tests or experiments, or in consequence of any alterations made in the same.

I have the favorable recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy upon a proposition that was submitted by the American Ordnance Company to take fourteen of the guns which are obsolete in their pattern, and which must be converted to be of any service at all, and convert them without any expense to the United States Government, and to make experiments with them also without any expense to the Government, and to return the guns at the end of the experiments with whatever information may be obtained in this way. The proposition which was submitted is one of very great value, I think, to the country. That is my opinion about it. Of course it is not the opinion of an expert, a scientific man, but it is predicated upon a state of facts which is unquestionably true, and which, being true, reveals the most important discovery, I may say, that has yet appeared in the history of the world, as I conceive, in the framing of guns and projectiles of heavy caliber.

The particular plan upon which this is sought to be done has been heretofore experimented upon under the supervision of officers of the Navy, and the fact, as revealed by the experiments which the officers of the Navy themselves have reported to the Government, is that "the inventor has succeeded in penetrating fifteen inches of iron and fourteen feet of hard gravel in addition with a charge of only seventy pounds of powder, a performance which has never been equaled, not even approached with less than three times the charge of powder, even with a gun of one-third greater weight and nine times the cost."

I present for insertion in the RECORD the proposition of this company:

312 SIXTH STREET, WASHINGTON, July 5, 1882.

SIR: Acting for myself, and as the duly authorized agent, expert, inventor, and technical superintendent of the American Ordnance Company, I make the following proposal to the Navy Department, namely:

First. We propose to conduct an elaborate and decisive series of practical experiments for the solution of the "ordnance problem" with a view to putting the Navy Department in possession of positive practical knowledge in relation to phenomena of great importance to the service, entirely without cost to the Government, except that we stipulate for the contribution of a few cannon of large caliber and certain ordnance to be hereinafter specified, to be used for the promotion of the object contemplated, all to be drawn from stock on hand of obsolete kinds, together with the privilege to utilize for the furtherance of the laudable enterprise (so far as the said use may be found not to interfere with any more important need of the Department) such tools, machinery plant, power, floor room, and shelter as may be found convenient or necessary for the purpose among the appliances and facilities afforded by the United States navy-yard at Washington; together with the services and co-operation of such officers as may be selected and detailed by the Secretary of the Navy for the duty of being present to witness and record the progress of the work, the methods practiced, the cost in detail, and the results obtained, not only while the ordnance is being prepared but as well throughout the continuation of the experiments which are to follow according to specifications hereinafter written.

Second. We also propose and stipulate that any instruments required for the determination of pressures of gases of gunpowder, or instruments to be used for the determination of velocities of projectiles, as well as electro-magnetic machines, priming and fuses, such as are used for igniting charges for the cannon or shells, as may be on hand in possession of the Navy Department, or necessary for use during the experimental or test-firing of the guns, shall be supplied for the purpose by the Navy Department, so far as unexpended, to be returned to the Department after all the experimental operations are completed.

Third. All cannon and ordnance to be supplied by the Navy Department shall be according to the following specifications, namely:

Four 15-inch smooth-bore cannon of those cast hollow, and cooled from the interior according to the Rodman system or plan.

Four 11-inch smooth-bore cannon of the Dahlgren model, one of these cast solid and three cast hollow, and cooled from the interior according to the plan known as the Rodman system or plan.

Four 11-inch smooth-bore cannon of the Dahlgren model.

Two Parrott 150-pounder rifle-guns.

It is desired that all of the above cannon shall have been cast of metal of approved density and tensile strength; that each of them shall have been subjected to the ordinary proof, and it is preferred that they shall all of them have been cast and proved more than six years ago, and subjected to no additional test of firing since, and it is hereby stipulated on the part of the parties making this proposal that the agent and superintendent of the American Ordnance Company shall have submitted to him a list of the serviceable guns of the above calibers on hand, together with the record of their proof, the tensile strength and density of the cast-iron of which they were made, and that the privilege of selecting the guns to be used for the proposed experiments shall be accorded to him.

And the Navy Department shall also supply one pivot or truck sliding carriage, for each caliber of gun supplied as above, and no other supplies, privileges, or ordinance will be required from the Navy Department than those above specified.

Fourth. In and for the considerations above specified the parties making this proposal will proceed to convert the smooth-bore guns of the three calibers into combined rifle and smooth-bore guns, one of each caliber on a different plan, as follows:

One 15-inch gun, one 11-inch gun, and one 9-inch gun into muzzle-loading combined rifle and smooth-bore guns, retaining the same caliber the guns have when put in possession of the parties making this proposal.

One 15-inch gun, one 11-inch gun, and one 9-inch gun of those delivered in accordance with the terms of this proposal will be converted into a muzzle-loading, long-bored, combined rifle and smooth-bore gun.

One of each of the three calibers will be converted into breech-loading, long-bored, combined rifle and smooth-bore guns, retaining the same calibers each has when delivered to the parties making this proposal, and one of each of the three calibers of smooth bores will be converted into chambered breech-loading, long-bored, combined rifle and smooth-bore guns.

The 15-inch gun will, in this latter case, be reduced in caliber to eleven inches, the 11-inch gun will be reduced to a caliber of nine inches, and the 9-inch gun will be reduced to a caliber of seven inches.

For all the guns converted into long-bored, breech-loading, combined rifle and smooth-bores automatic carriages will be provided by which the recoil of the gun will be directed in the plane of the bore, and the gun by the force of its recoil will be run forward into battery, the loading position, automatically.

One of the Parrott (150-pounders) specified will be converted into a muzzle-loading combined rifle and smooth-bore of 9-inch caliber; the other into a breech-loader of the same caliber and kind.

Fifth. The parties making this proposal will, when afforded the facilities of the Washington navy-yard, proceed to convert the above guns as specified and manufacture the automatic carriages of the kind specified entirely at their own cost for materials, labor, superintendence, transportation, &c., and will promptly supply all the powder, projectiles, iron plates for targets, a floating battery on which to mount, and from which to fire all the guns specified, after conversion, and no charge whatever will be made against the Government or the Navy Department at any time, other than the use of the facilities stipulated for in the navy-yard, the guns, carriage, and implements of obsolete kinds to be supplied by the Navy Department; the use of instruments, and the attendance of officers detailed to be present, observe and record the operations, and report the facts.

Sixth. The parties making this proposal will take care to secure a complete photographic record of all the operations under the terms of this proposal and will secure photographs of all the guns before and after conversion, of guns, carriages, implements, cartridges, projectiles, targets, battery, and witnesses present, before and after firing each gun; and in addition to this will cause a written record of all the material facts which may transpire from the beginning of the work of preparation to the termination of the experimental firing.

Seventh. The parties making this proposal confidently believe that the result will be to show that an armament for the Navy may be provided by conversion of guns on hand of far greater power than has ever before been offered to the Navy Department, of absolute endurance even when fired with the greatest possible rapidity for thirty or more rounds in succession; of extraordinary effectiveness as affording facilities for the use and utilization of spherical shot and shell or rifle projectiles at will, and of such cheapness and readiness of preparation as altogether to leave nothing to be desired for the present or future.

It is believed that the 15-inch gun converted on the simplest plan contemplated by this proposal, namely, to a muzzle-loading combined rifle and smooth bore, when used with the improved projectile, to which it will be adapted, and with the improved powder it is the intention of the parties to use, will easily penetrate twenty inches of iron at one-mile range; that it will be at the same time as effective as a smooth bore as it has been before conversion; while its endurance, on account of the improvements to be utilized in the mode of inserting and ejecting its always centered projectiles, together with the use of the improved powder before referred to, will be rendered perfectly reliable, while the total cost of the conversion will be less than $500. The general and principal features of the plan of conversion—now, however, greatly improved—have been already subjected to test, and it has been proved that the power of the gun is at least quadrupled. In fact, the inventor has succeeded in penetrating fifteen inches of iron and fourteen feet of hard gravel, in addition, with a charge of only seventy pounds of powder, a performance which has never been equaled, not even approached with less than three times the charge of powder, even with a gun of one-third greater weight, and nine times the cost.

It is believed that the other conversion of 15-inch guns, specified above, will provide very cheap and reliable guns, capable of piercing thirty inches of iron at one-mile range.

The 11-inch guns will, it is believed, be found capable of penetrating from fifteen to twenty-two inches of iron at one-mile range, and the writer has already succeeded in penetrating sixteen inches of iron through and through—with three feet of hard gravel in addition—with a Parrott 150-pounder gun converted to a 9-inch caliber combined rifle and smooth bore. The projectile weighed two hundred and three pounds, and the charge of powder was only forty pounds.

The Secretary of the Navy, in referring to these results observed during practical official experiments conducted for the Department, said: "The penetration of the projectiles invented and fired by Mr. Wiard in these experiments show a result, both at short and long range, unequalled in the history of heavy ordnance, illustrating at once the correctness of his manner of rifling, and the fact that his projectile is the best yet invented for that purpose; and it is evident to any one that the valuable data recorded by the officers detailed to witness these firings could only be obtained as the results of these or similar experiments."

There is no gun of its weight or caliber in the world to-day—in fact not one made by any one, of any material, or at any cost, which can equal this performance with any charge of any known kind of powder.

The writer, the inventor of this wonderful gun, has made such improvements since that he now confidently believes that he can penetrate an equal thickness of iron with one-half the charge of powder previously used.

Eighth. No other remuneration, except as above specified, and the condition that all the debris of projectiles and targets, the specified guns supplied by the Navy Department and all the appliances supplied by the parties making this proposal, shall become or continue to be the property of the parties represented by the undersigned, to be disposed of according to their discretion, after all the work and experiments have been completed according to the terms of this proposal will be required or expected by.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

NORMAN WIARD,

For self and as Superintendent and General Agent of the American Ordnance Company.

312 SIXTH STREET, WASHINGTON, July 15, 1882.

Mr. SECRETARY: Senator Logan was kind enough to inform me yesterday that naval officers considered that part of my proposal of the 5th instant to be objectionable which refers to the use of the facilities and appliances of the Washington navy-yard for the conversion of guns, &c., as conflicts might arise during the progress of the work such as would be disagreeable. I deprecate that possibility as much as any one can, and therefore amend my proposal.

I now propose to convert the guns, supply all the labor, materials, projectiles, powder, the floating battery, the iron targets, transportation, &c., in fact to prepare for and conduct the experiments entirely at my own proper expense, provided the Navy Department will supply me with the guns, carriages, and instruments specified in my proposal of the 5th instant, and detail proper officers to be present, witness, and record all the particulars of the preparation, material, character, and cost, as well as results, with instructions to report facts, without mere opinions, and not to interfere with my plans, "not even by advice."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NORMAN WIARD,

For self and the American Ordnance Company.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CHANDLER, Secretary of the Navy.

I have only one further remark to make on the subject. These things have once been accomplished; they have been accomplished by design; they have been accomplished through the genius of an American citizen; and having been once accomplished, they can be accomplished again. What has been done on scientific principles with certain results, of course can be repeated. If the Government of the United States can get the advantage of such inventions, such enterprise, and such exhibitions of genius at so little cost, I can see no reason why we should not avail ourselves of the opportunity. These fourteen guns can be taken of obsolete pattern, as I have observed, with four gun-carriages and instruments to measure the velocity of the projectiles, and they can be converted, experimented upon, and returned by the American Ordnance Company, which I understand is a strong company, strong in its wealth and its enterprise. They can be returned by the 1st of March, 1883, the Government losing nothing at all, and gaining the advantage of the experiments and the proof of the fact whether or not these experiments are to be made successful in the armament of ships and the heavy forts upon the coast.

It is useless for us to undertake to build a navy, as we all confess we must do, unless we have some better armament than we have now. The truth is we have not an efficient gun in the United States Navy to-day as against the iron-clads of Italy, of Spain, of England, Germany, or even Chili. We have not an efficient gun in the American Navy. We have but one sea-coast gun, a gun of 20-inch caliber, I believe. We have a gun of one hundred and twenty tons in New York, a smooth-bore gun, which is the only one we can boast. We have no other guns for sea-coast defense. In respect to ordnance, we are just as powerless as the Indians are against the Army of the United States to-day. It seems to me that the Senate ought to devote its attention upon every opportunity that it can in making such experiments as may lead to better armament than we have.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to one fact. In the siege of Alexandria the other day, which is said to have been one of the most remarkable of all the naval exploits in history in the particular of its being an engagement in which the heaviest missiles were thrown, and in the largest number, one of the British ships, firing at very slow time, perhaps not repeating its fire oftener than twenty minutes' interval, was compelled to retire after one day's action and go to an island in the Mediterranean Sea for a new armament. She had eighty-ton guns on board of her, with the most approved modern appliances; every shot she expended cost the British Government a thousand dollars; and yet at the end of a single day of slow action that ship was compelled to retire to an island in the Mediterranean, where they had reserves of artillery, for a new armament. The result will be shown when the report of this naval engagement at Alexandria comes to be made up by scientific men, as the actual facts as stated prove, that there is something even among the English guns and German guns and French guns which is still very imperfect, and which I trust very much will be supplied by American genius.

I have confidence in the capacity of our inventors to accomplish and master any improvement that needs to be mastered for the success of our Navy in the future and for the defense of our coast, and I desire that the Senate shall accord this little experiment to be made without any other expense at all except the bare use of guns that are obsolete, so that we may see whether this thing which has been done under the observation of naval officers may not be repeated.

Mr. HALE. I must make the point of order. I did not wish to interfere while the Senator was making his interesting statement.

Mr. MORGAN. I think, if the Senator will allow me, the point of order is not well sustained when we come to consider the proposition which I submitted here, with the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, which is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, July 15, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a copy of an additional letter to this Department from Mr. Norman Wiard, in relation to his proposition in reference to the conversion of unrifled guns now owned by the Department, for the favorable consideration of the committee.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,

Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

You cannot make an estimate of that; there is no sum of money to be estimated; you could state only so many guns of a certain obsolete pattern asked for, and when the Secretary of the Navy recommends a favorable consideration to the committee I should think that would fall within the rule which allows such amendments in the event that they are upon the requirement of heads of Departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine insist on the point of order?

Mr. HALE. The trouble with the proposition is that it allows this man to come into possession of Government property and gives him control of it for a time. As to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, it is not a thing that has been recommended from the Department for an appropriation. I take it it is simply transmitting these papers. I looked over all the papers very carefully, and I made up my mind that it was not a safe thing to do.

Mr. MORGAN. I say to the Senator from Maine that it is merely a loan of goods to be returned in specie. It is merely a loan of goods; that is all.

Mr. HALE. I should be afraid they would never get back.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Peter Cooper, of New York, is a member of the American Ordnance Company. The company is entirely responsible, and it is merely asked to make these contributions for the purpose of testing the question.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to be understood in making that remark to indicate any lack of confidence in these gentlemen, Mr. Cooper and others; but when you put out these guns for experiment you run all the risk, of course, of their being destroyed or impaired and never getting them returned. I think it is not a safe thing to put on the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. The Secretary of the Navy can require any bond he pleases for the return of the guns; there cannot be possibly any loss at all to the Government.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read. Let us see how far it goes.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment of Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator explain to me that part of the amendment which refers to the tests, which comes immediately after the provision about the guns?

Mr. MORGAN. First of all it is entirely discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy whether he will allow these guns to be used or not.

Mr. HALE. I see the amendment does not go so far as I thought it did. Let the Secretary read the first part of it again.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, furnish to the American Ordnance Company fourteen smooth-bore iron guns, of the Rodman, Dahlgren, and Parrott models, of not less than 9-inch bore, and four gun-carriages, and the use of instruments for testing the velocity of projectiles, for the purpose of making tests and experiments in the improvement of heavy ordnance.

Mr. HALE. What is meant by the use of instruments?

Mr. MORGAN. There are instruments of a very delicate manufacture, which cannot be obtained otherwise.

Mr. HALE. Governmental instruments?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; but very cheap. They do not amount to anything. They are electrical instruments merely for testing the velocity of the shots.

Mr. HALE. They are instruments on hand?

Mr. MORGAN. The instruments are on hand.

Mr. HALE. The proposition as presented originally went a great deal further and comprehended the use of navy-yards. I think as it now reads it does not comprehend the use of navy-yards and turning loose men in the yards.

Mr. MORGAN. Not by any means.

Mr. HALE. As it does not, and is limited as I find it is, I shall not make the point of order.

Mr. MORGAN. I am much obliged to the Senator. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. After line 578 I move to insert:

If the Navy Department advertises or asks for proposals for the completion, repair, or construction of any iron, steel, or wooden vessels, the Navy Department, by its proper officers, shall also make proposals or estimates for the same work, both as to the cost of the same and the time required for such work; and if such proposals or estimates of the Navy Department shall be less than that of any private bidder, such work shall be done by the Navy Department, in accordance with such estimates or proposals.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine, who has charge of the bill. On the fourteenth page the sum appropriated is $700,000, where the amount estimated for by the Department is $896,000. I am in favor of very rigid economy in the Navy Department and in all other Departments, but I desire to know why it is not thought expedient to appropriate a sufficient sum of money to the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, so that at least they may have money enough to buy the coal necessary. I am informed from the Department that it will be necessary to resort to other means of reducing expenses rather than those suggested in this bill. The expenses will have to be largely reduced to answer. If the bill is passed in its present form several vessels on foreign stations will have to be recalled; otherwise a large deficiency will be created. What I desire to know is why the Committee on Appropriations determine to so cripple the operations of the Navy so that we cannot maintain abroad even the small number of ships that we have, but they must be called home. Do they propose really that there shall not be purchased for the use of the Department a sufficient amount of coal? In regard to this appropriation, which covers not only the coal but canvas, leather, iron, cables, &c., all such expenditures, do they propose really that no more money shall be appropriated than is sufficient for the coal, leaving all the rest out?

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator has he any letter from the head of the Department or the head of the bureau stating with circumstantiality why this amount of $700,000 is not adequate?

Mr. ROLLINS. I have a copy of a letter here from Commodore Earl English, who is the head of the bureau, addressed to the Secretary of the Navy, which I will have read if the Senator desires.

Mr. HALE. Is there anything from the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. ROLLINS. No; I do not think there is.

Mr. HALE. That is a letter from the commodore to the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. ROLLINS. It is a copy of a letter from the commodore to the Secretary of the Navy, but it states the fact. We will put it in the RECORD if the Senator wants the information. It is not necessary to read it.

Mr. HALE. No; it will be printed.

The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING,
Washington, July 8, 1882.

SIR: The bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, as it passed the House of Representatives appropriates but $700,000 under head of "equipment of vessels."

The amount originally estimated for under this head was $896,000, which amount the experience of the past year shows to be the least that will possibly keep about the number of cruisers and training-ships at present in commission, even by reducing expenditures for labor by suspending work in some of the navy-yards as is proposed.

Should the bill as at present become a law, either several of the vessels now on foreign stations will have to be recalled or a large deficiency created for their maintenance, in view of which fact I deem it of the utmost importance that the appropriation should be increased to the amount originally estimated for.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
EARL ENGLISH, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CHANDLER, Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. ROLLINS. I will move, for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate—

Mr. HALE. I will say that this amount is a reduction of $125,000 on this bureau from last year. The Navy has all the time been lessening somewhat; the number of ships to be maintained is less; and the committee in the House who reported the bill believed the bureau could get along with $700,000. Our committee also on examination believed and hoped that the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting could manage for this year with $700,000. I think it will be pretty snug work for them; I think they will have to economize.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let me ask the Senator from Maine does he really think that the bureau can get along with $700,000?

Mr. HALE. I think they will have to economize; I think they will have to cut off some items, and I am by no means certain that there may not be a small deficiency; but we thought it worth the while to give them this as the House had not increased the amount, and let them try to get along. I hope that they can. I am bound to be frank about this thing, and to say that I am by no means certain that there will not be a small deficiency.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think there will be quite a large deficiency. I call the attention of the committee to it. If they have no objection, I move to increase the appropriation to $896,000.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I notice that the bill as it now stands provides for one hundred and seventy doctors in the Navy and one hundred and seventy engineers. Therefore we have in a steam navy one doctor for every engineer. I think this illustrates the brilliancy of the minds which originated this proposed reorganization of the Navy. The full complement of a steam war ship with respect to engineers is five engineers to one ship. I suppose there never was a ship that had five doctors upon it, at least they are not necessary. In time of war the complement of doctors to a flag-ship is three. Whoever prepared this bill has cut down the engineer corps, according to the tables which have been read here, about one-half. According to the Navy Register they cut down the engineer corps from two hundred and thirty-three to one hundred and seventy. As we have no right or power in the Senate to amend this provision which the House has sent to us, I see no other way of remedying the matter except to strike out all the text which relates to the engineer corps.

Mr. ROLLINS. Did the Chair entertain the motion I made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand that the Senator made any motion.

Mr. ROLLINS. Certainly; I rose for that purpose. I move to amend by adding after the words "seven hundred," in line 325, the words "and fifty," making the appropriation for equipment of vessels $750,000. That will be more than a hundred thousand dollars less than the estimate.

Mr. PLUMB. I rather hope on the whole that the Senator who has charge of the bill will feel inclined to agree to some amendment increasing that amount. He says it is a little close, and in a matter of that kind, embracing this large variety of objects and embracing the essential one of furnishing coal to vessels, I think it would be unwise to run the risk of a deficiency, if not a cramping of the service in that particular.

Mr. HALE. I felt the force of the objection in what I said before. It is a snug appropriation, I think myself. How much does the Senator from New Hampshire move to increase it?

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to increase it only $50,000. That is very modest.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Who has the floor, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. HALE. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire was first in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand that the Senator from New Hampshire offered an amendment, and in the mean time he recognized the Senator from California.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Senator from California is a very amiable gentleman, and I know he will allow me to have a vote on my amendment. It will lead to no further debate, I am sure.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Certainly; I will yield.

Mr. HALE. If the Senate sees fit to put in the additional $50,000 I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Now, I will resume. I propose to amend by striking out beginning in line 93 down to and including line 104. I think this is an unreasonable and unwarrantable reduction in the engineer corps, and if this matter could be yet referred to a commission to adjust these grades properly I do not think such a reduction would be made; but I understand there ought to be a probable reduction in the medical corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from California will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the paragraph beginning in line 93, in the following words:

That the active list of the engineer corps of the Navy shall hereafter consist of ten chief engineers with the relative rank of captain, fifteen chief engineers with the relative rank of commander, forty-five chief engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander or lieutenant, sixty passed assistant engineers, and forty assistant engineers, with the relative rank for each as now fixed by law; and after the number of officers in the said grades shall be reduced as above provided, the number in each grade shall not exceed the reduced number which is fixed by the provisions of this act for the several grades.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not say but that there may be too many engineers in the Navy. What I do say is that in this attempted reorganization the authors of the bill have not made reductions in the proper ratio as between grades. The reduction in the engineer corps, I think, is very much too great. There might be some reduction.

Mr. HALE. This now comes not to the line. Senators will remember that all through the discussion there has been a good deal said about the line; that it ought not to be reduced while the staff could be. We have come to the staff, and of course there is opposition to reducing that. I should like to keep on an even keel, if possible, and not discriminate either for or against the staff. There are a good many old questions which have arisen in the Navy in years past that got up considerable feeling between line and staff; and for one I want to be entirely dispassionate about the consideration. I will state the way this corps was left by the House.

Mr. MILLER, of California. This is no affair between the line and staff. I called attention to the fact that we have by this bill as many doctors as we have engineers in the Navy, both belonging to the staff corps.

Mr. HALE. The engineer corps now consists of ten chief engineers. They have all been left. Fifteen chief engineers with the relative rank of commander; they have been left. Forty-five chief engineers with the relative rank of lieutenant-commander; they have been left. One hundred assistant and passed assistant engineers. The one hundred were put in by the House in the place of what are now one hundred and sixty. Then there are now eighty-seven passed assistant engineers and thirteen passed assistant engineers of two kinds, making one hundred, and sixty-one assistant engineers, making one hundred and sixty-one. The House cut it down to one hundred, leaving one hundred assistant engineers. The Senate has only changed that in dividing them according to ranks, and giving sixty passed assistant engineers and forty assistant engineers, leaving it where the ranks now are of the one hundred and sixty, at one hundred, or a reduction of sixty. Whether that is too much or too little of course is a question for Senators to consider according to their information.

The engineer corps is large and increasing very largely. Including the cadets at the Academy it is three hundred and seventy-nine now, against less than twice that number in the British navy, where they have ten times as many ships as we have. It is ten to each ship that we maintain, and we believed that it might be reduced in this number of sixty.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If we had ten engineers for each ship, it would be two hundred and thirty-three in all.

Mr. HALE. I say including the cadets at the academy we have three hundred and seventy-nine; they are being taken out a quarter of them every year; they are officers of the Navy; they are being educated at Government expense; they are being injected into the service, and according to all estimates and all figures, and I take this from a paper prepared by naval officers which has been given me, and I have examined it, taking them altogether it is ten to each ship.

I think it is better to leave that. I do not think that a reduction of sixty out of the whole number of three hundred and seventy-nine is a large one. I think the engineer department can get along with that.

If I have anything to do with this matter subsequently in committee of conference or elsewhere, and upon consideration am led to believe it ought not to be reduced more than fifty or forty, then I certainly shall be in favor of making it so. It leaves the whole question open to be considered hereafter, because while we have left the numbers of the House we have changed their designation, so that the matter is not foreclosed by our adopting this amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill why he has not classified the engineers and all the staff officers as he did the surgeons? He gives surgeons of the first, second, and third class, and then in the pay corps and among the engineers he maintains the old classification of assistant, passed assistant, &c. I think it would have been just as well to have classified all these staff officers as first, second, and third class.

Mr. HALE. The paymasters?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; all in the same mode, and do away with the term "passed assistant."

Mr. HALE. I see no objection to that. It is only a matter of designation.

Mr. HAWLEY. As three o'clock will come pretty soon, and there cannot be a word of explanation after that of any amendment, I intend to offer an amendment, as I can do after three.

Mr. HALE. What would the Senator have instead of "assistant" and "passed assistant?"

Mr. HAWLEY. I merely make the suggestion. It can be attended to in conference.

Mr. HALE. I see no objection to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think at three o'clock I shall move to strike out the words "or furlough," on page 29. As the clause stands now it gives the Secretary of the Navy the right to put officers on leave of absence or waiting orders, which is all right, but it is also added "on furlough," that is, half-pay, and it is court-martial pay, and when put on it is rather a punishment to the family than to the officer himself. I do not like to see the Secretary of the Navy have power to put upon an officer in this easy way what is in reality a punishment that may drive him out of the service. If on furlough is an officer at liberty to go for years into other business, and yet be on a sort of reserve list liable to be employed, to be called on duty at any time?

Mr. PLUMB. Let me call attention to the fact that the Senator from Delaware gave notice that he would move to strike out the words "on furlough."

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not know that.

Mr. HALE. Let me say, as it is almost on the stroke of three, that the Senator is mistaken as to this being fundamentally a punishment. By section 1442 of the Revised Statutes the Secretary of the Navy has authority to place on furlough any officer on the active list of the Navy. I know that it has been generally understood that that is nothing but a punishment grade on half pay; but it is not so. It has fallen largely into disuse. The committee, when it looked at the list of pay and found that almost all officers who are on shore pay are put upon shore duty, proposed that the Secretary may, if there is not really work for them to do and if he cannot specify what the work is, shall have this authority, which I will read so that Senators may see:

No officer of the Navy whose pay is appropriated for in this bill shall be employed on any shore duty—

That pay is almost as much as sea pay.

No officer of the Navy whose pay is appropriated for in this bill shall be employed on any shore duty unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that the employment of an officer on such duty is required by the public interests, and shall so state in the order of employment, and also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue; and all other officers, when not at sea, shall be placed on leave of absence, or waiting orders, or on furlough.

It gives the Secretary of the Navy discretion to give them these different pays.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me ask for information if the expression "on furlough pay" has not a different bearing from the expression simply "on furlough?"

Mr. HALE. No, they are all put here: "shall be placed on leave of absence, or waiting orders, or on furlough." Furlough pay is half pay.

Mr. HAWLEY. When an officer is placed on furlough pay he is placed on furlough. Has he an indefinite leave?

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator state that question again?

Mr. HAWLEY. If you put an officer on furlough pay—I am not familiar with this matter, and am therefore asking for information—I should suppose that he was on a sort of unlimited leave. If you place him on furlough pay is he or not just as liable to an order at any moment as an officer on waiting orders?

Mr. HALE. I do not know how that is, but I take it if an officer is put on furlough he gets furlough pay, and I suppose he is subject to orders at any time.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I understand so, unless there is a time fixed; and leave of absence is where a time is fixed.

Mr. HALE. They are all technical terms. Furlough pay is just half; leave-of-absence pay is better; shore pay is better still. Sea pay is the largest, and shore pay is almost as much as sea pay. This gives the discretion to the Secretary of the Navy. If he can find employment, and can certify it, then these officers can be placed on shore pay, which is almost as much as sea pay. If he does not do that then it gives him the discretion to put them on leave of absence, on waiting orders, or on furlough.

Mr. MILLER, of California. On furlough he gets half pay, and on waiting orders he gets shore pay.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of three has arrived. The vote will be taken on the pending amendment and amendments that may be offered hereafter without debate. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] to strike out all after the word "paymasters," in line 92, down to and including the word "grades," in line 104.

The amendment was rejected—aye 7, noes not counted.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer the following amendment, to be added after line 130:

Provided, That all laws and parts of laws providing for promotion and increase of pay upon the retired list of the Navy be, and they are hereby, repealed.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me a moment, I wish to say that I should like to have that amendment explained. We occupied one hour this morning really in violation of the agreement made on Saturday about the time when we should enter upon the consideration of this bill. I now propose that the Senate unanimously consent that the time for five minutes' debate shall be extended for one hour.

Mr. HALE. Oh, Mr. President, I kept an account of how our time was occupied this morning. The morning business was gone through with, and the only additional time taken was by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY,] who spoke fifteen minutes not on morning business. The time was extended to that extent; but I shall have to object to its being extended an hour. I have no objection now, on the consideration the Senator from Alabama raises, that we lost those fifteen minutes, to this amendment being explained. I will not make the point at present, but I do not want to agree to any particular extension.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will allow me to say that I understood the agreement, and I think the RECORD bears me out, that we should commence the consideration of this bill immediately on reading the Journal this morning. We did not do it for an hour.

Mr. HALE. I stated that I should ask that, and I did ask it this morning, and the Chair decided it could only be by unanimous consent that that motion could be made during morning business. So I was obliged to wait until morning business was completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan rose to morning business and offered a resolution.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama will permit me to suggest that the agreement to take the vote was made; unanimous consent was asked for and given and announced by the Chair. The whole thing was over as far as that was concerned; and then after that the Senator from Maine got up and gave notice that he should ask the Senate to begin immediately after the reading of the Journal. So nobody could have been governed in consenting on his suggestion, because we consented before he made the request.

Mr. HARRIS. The RECORD will show the exact fact to be as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The agreement as stated in the RECORD is as follows:

Mr. HALE. I will agree to three o'clock, although I think when the time comes the Senate will be very glad to vote at two o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the agreement that at three o'clock on Monday the vote shall be taken without further debate, on amendments pending and amendments thereafter offered, and on the bill? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HALE. I shall move to take up the bill directly that the Journal is read on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and announces that the agreement is made as stated by the Chair.

Mr. HALE. Under the consideration of the time we lost this morning I shall not ask that the agreement be enforced while this amendment is being explained. It might have been explained by this time.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill is new in many features. The bill will be strengthened in conference if Senators having amendments have five minutes to explain them. I have no amendment to offer, no speech to make; but the action of the Senate will be much stronger in conference if Senators who present amendments are permitted five minutes during the coming hour to explain them. I will reduce it to thirty minutes if Senators wish.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not ask for any particular extension. Let the Senator from Kansas go on and explain this amendment briefly. He could have had it done before this time.

Mr. MORGAN. All right

Mr. PLUMB. The simple proposition is that we shall stop promotion on the retired list and the consequent increase of pay. I do not think there is any controversy about that.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no increase of pay in consequence of promotion on the retired list. The law prohibits it, and the Executive has followed the law.

Mr. PLUMB. Then the amendment I have offered will do no harm.

Mr. ANTHONY. It will do no harm if it merely re-enacts the existing law.

Mr. PLUMB. But it stops promotion, because that gives a claim for the consequent pay.

Mr. ANTHONY. No claim for increased pay has ever been made by reason of promotion on the retired list?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. ANTHONY. No. If I am mistaken the Senator can point out my mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

Mr. ROLLINS. Is it in order for me to move to amend that by adding the amendment which I proposed on Saturday last?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Kansas might as well propose that a captain should not have the pay of a commodore. The law expressly states that there shall be no increase of pay by reason of promotion on the retired list, and I defy the Senator from Illinois to give me a single case where an officer on the retired list has received an increase of pay by reason of his promotion on the retired list. Such officers have received an increase of pay by special acts and by general acts, but never by reason of promotion on the retired list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I offer an amendment, to come in as an additional section.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the amendment just carried mean that officers promoted on the retired list shall be degraded?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not permitted to answer.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will ask the Senator who offered the amendment if he proposes that officers who have been promoted on the retired list shall be graded to their old rank?

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all. It operates simply upon the present condition.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think the amendment expresses that.

Mr. ALLISON. Put in the word "hereafter."

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment simply repeals the law and does not disturb that which has been done. It simply repeals the law.

Mr. LOGAN. I offer an amendment as a new section:

SEC. 5. That all laws and parts of laws authorizing prize-money to the Navy, or any of its officers or men, for any capture or destruction of any vessel, ship, or any other property of any character whatever, are hereby repealed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I raise the point of order on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 238:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Postmaster-General, together with three Senators and three Representatives in Congress, to be appointed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses, be, and they hereby are, constituted a commission to inquire into the practicability and expediency of securing the construction in the United States of iron or steel ocean steamers for commercial purposes, upon such models and with such strength and speed that they may be readily converted into efficient ships of war when needed for such uses; and into the advisability of encouraging the construction of such vessels, and their maintenance in regular steamship lines over the highways of ocean commerce, by paying a fair and just compensation for carrying the mails therein to and from foreign countries, upon the condition that they shall be built in the United States and owned exclusively by American citizens, under the supervision of the Government, and subject to be taken by it, at a reasonable price, whenever needed as ships of war; said commission to report to Congress their conclusions on the matters herein submitted at as early a day as is consistent with the due investigation thereof.

Mr. LOGAN and Mr. COCKRELL. Point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out in line 30 the words "or cadet-engineers."

Mr. HALE. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HOAR. The bill as it stands will destroy the power to appoint cadet-engineers entirely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not understand the amendment. Let it be reported again.

The amendment was read.

Mr. HALE. The engineers are to be educated in the main class.

Mr. COCKRELL. But this permits the existence of a certain class not appointed in the way here prescribed, additional to the whole number.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am opposed to it.

Mr. HOAR. It leaves the cadet-engineers just as they are now. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROLLINS. I offer the following additional section to the bill, and I do not think there will be any member of the Senate on the Appropriations Committee who will object to it:

That hereafter the chiefs of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, of Steam-Engineering, of Provisions and Clothing, and of Medicine and Surgery, in the Department of the Navy, shall be appointed by selection from the officers of the corps to which they belong whose relative rank is not below that of commander.

Mr. LOGAN. Explain that; let us understand it.

Mr. ROLLINS. It does not change existing law, but makes clear what the law now is.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MAHONEY. I propose to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "repair" the words "yards and docks;" so as to read:

That hereafter the chiefs of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, of Yards and Docks, of Steam-Engineering, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is accepted.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Let us have the entire amendment read.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. Let it be read as it stands.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That hereafter the chiefs of the Bureaus of Construction and Repair, of Yards and Docks, of Steam-Engineering, of Provisions and Clothing, and of Medicine and Surgery, in the Department of the Navy, shall be appointed by selection from the officers of the corps to which they belong whose relative rank is not below that of commander.

Mr. BUTLER. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. ROLLINS. Too late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any amendments made as in Committee of the Whole upon which Senators desire a separate vote; or shall the question be taken on the amendments in gross?

Mr. MILLER, of California. There is an amendment in line 171, page 8, changing the lieutenants to two hundred and twenty-five, on which I wish a separate vote. The committee offered an amendment in line 171 raising the number of lieutenants from two hundred to two hundred and twenty-five. Upon that I desire a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be reserved.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It will be remembered that I moved to strike out the whole of this paragraph in regard to lieutenants and I was ruled out of order because the committee had proposed an amendment which had been adopted. My object now is to move to strike out all this paragraph.

Mr. HALE. That cannot be done. There can be a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There can be a separate vote on whether the words shall remain in or not.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Then I make the point on the whole clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California wish the amendment of the Committee of the Whole non-concurred in?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask whether, if it be concurred in, it will be in order to move to strike out this paragraph?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; it stands as the text of the bill and can be moved to be stricken out.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment proposed by the committee to strike out and the words proposed to be inserted were treated as one amendment. An amendment to strike out and insert is indivisible, and the whole amendment was ruled out of order. Then subsequently, on the motion of the Senator from Maine, the words "and twenty-five" were added after the words "two hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ruled out nothing but from line 175 down.

Mr. HARRIS. If I am not mistaken, I was in the chair when that question of order was raised, and the Chair held that it was one amendment, that the amendment was legislative in its character, and the amendment to strike out and to insert being one amendment and indivisible the whole amendment was out of order, which left the text of the bill just as it came from the House. The only amendment that clause contains is the words "and twenty-five" put in on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. And then after that the clause was adopted as amended and is so reported by the Committee of the Whole to the Senate; so that the only question, it seems to me, following the line of the Senator from Tennessee, is whether that amendment shall be agreed to by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary says not. A motion to strike out can be made in the Senate. It amounts to the same thing exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask if any other amendment is reserved?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any amendment that any Senator wishes a separate vote upon?

Mr. HALE. I will reserve the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] about the iron-clads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be reserved.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to page 23, line 546, and ask whether in his judgment it would not be better to strike out the two words "either of?"

Mr. ALLISON. That is a new amendment to be offered.

Mr. ROLLINS. That will leave the discretion with the Secretary of the Navy and the advisory board.

Mr. HALE. It is well enough to strike out those two words. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear what they are.

Mr. HALE. The bill reads:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to cause either of the said cruising vessels of war aforesaid to be provided with interior defective steel armor, &c.

Striking out the words "either of" leaves the discretion to apply to both vessels.

Mr. ROLLINS. With the consent of the advisory board.

Mr. HALE. I see no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. That changes the character of the bill from one to two.

Mr. LOGAN. If it is good for one, it ought to be for both.

Mr. HALE. I see no objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand there is no objection to that amendment, and it is considered as adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not receiving amendments now. The question is on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Does the Senator from Kentucky wish a separate vote on any amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the adoption of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the one specially reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now proposed to strike out the words "either of," in line 546, as proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS.]

Mr. HALE. That can be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that amendment is made. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] reserved a separate vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] in relation to the iron-clads.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What has become of mine?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That being in the text of the bill, according to the decision of the Chair, can be acted on after we have got through with the other amendment. The Senator can then move to strike out that clause.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the reserved amendment made on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] Shall it be read, so as to be understood?

Mr. BROWN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. And then let us have the yeas and nays on it.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, after the word "and," in line 601, to insert:

That no further steps shall be taken or contracts entered into or approved for the repairs or completion of any of the four iron-clads aforesaid until the further order of Congress; and the naval advisory board created by this act is directed to report in detail by the 1st day of December, 1882, as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing the engines, armor, and armaments of said iron-clads, and whether any changes in the original plan or plans should be made, together with the cost of the completion of each according to the plans recommended, if the completion of any of them is recommended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] calls for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask if this is debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; nothing is debatable under the agreement of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to debate it unless it is in order to do so.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It can be debated by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course unanimous consent can be given.

Mr. LOGAN. I know I cannot get that. I merely wanted to show the reports of the officers.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.]

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague [Mr. LAMAR] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana has voted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I was trying to get the attention of the Chair to say that I am reminded that I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.] I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote is withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 23; as follows:

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] now moves to strike out the following words:

That the active list of lieutenants in the Navy shall hereafter consist of two hundred; and until the number of lieutenants now on the active list of the Navy shall be reduced below the number of two hundred no promotion shall be made—

Mr. HALE. If the Chair will allow me, that is not the way the section is left. On my motion the "two hundred" was made "two hundred and twenty-five," and that is the way it is now. I hope it will not be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is right—to fill vacancies occurring in said grade: Provided, That no lieutenant now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of the provisions of this act.

Those words are in the bill, and the Senator from California moves to strike them out.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to strike out.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the question now is whether the amendment made in Committee of the Whole shall be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; those amendments have all been concurred in. The occupant of the chair ruled that these words remained in; and therefore there has been no opportunity to strike them out. What difference does it make?

Mr. ALLISON. The only reason I made the inquiry, if the Chair will allow me, was that I did not know whether to vote "yea" or "nay" on the statement made by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If you are against striking out, you vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. Anybody who wants it to remain at two hundred and twenty-five votes "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Or who wants the clause to remain at all. The Senator from California moves to strike out the whole clause.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Any one who wants the law to exist as it is now will vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Chair state now what we are to vote upon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whether to strike out the words from line 168 to 175, which are retained in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Except that the "two hundred," in line 175, is changed to "two hundred and twenty-five."

Mr. MILLER, of California. The question is whether the lieutenants shall be reduced on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is whether this clause shall be stricken out.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire what will be the effect of striking out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It takes the clause from the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It leaves the law as it is now.

Mr. HALE. It leaves no reduction of the lieutenants if these words are stricken out. On my motion the number was made two hundred and twenty-five.

Mr. ANTHONY. Two hundred and eighty is the present number. The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAMDEN.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 33; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAYARD. On page 22, line 520, after the word "contractor," I move to strike out the words, "but shall in all things be subject to the order and direction of said Secretary."

As the words stand they will make the naval advisory board subject to the order and direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HALE. I do not think those words ought to be there. I have no objection to their going out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I now move, on page 39, line 13 of section 3, after the words "waiting orders," to strike out "or on furlough."

Mr. HALE. I hope that will not be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRIS. What effect will the amendment have?

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to have an explanation of the effect of this amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I will state—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Delaware giving an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. HALE. If he does I shall wish to say something.

Mr. BAYARD. I have been absent from the Senate attending to duty elsewhere, and I forgot that the hour had arrived for voting without debate.

Mr. HALE. I am not objecting to the Senator's stating the force of the amendment, provided I may briefly reply. ["All right."]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the two Senators will be allowed to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senate will observe that this part of the bill is novel. It provides that—

No officer of the Navy whose pay is appropriated for in this bill shall be employed on any shore duty unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that the employment of an officer on such duty is required by the public interests, and shall so state in the order of employment, and also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue; and all other officers, when not at sea, shall be placed on leave of absence or waiting orders or on furlough, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem required by due economy and the public interests.

The condition of our Navy now is that when an officer is at sea he is held up in the Senate to opprobrium because there are too many on the ships, and yet when he stays on shore he may be placed on half pay at the discretion of the Secretary by being placed on furlough. Leave of absence gives a man three-fourths, waiting orders gives a man two-thirds pay, while furlough gives a man half-pay.

I have known after investigations have been made in times gone by in the Navy Department that the officers who had given testimony displeasing to their official superiors were disgraced by their reduction to half pay by being placed on furlough, and they have had to engage in trade for their support. I do not see why this discretion should be given to place an officer or a class of officers on half pay. There is no getting over the fact that throughout this bill there is an evident animus against the personnel of the Navy. It is sought to be lessened in numbers, shortened in proportions, and constrained in its action, because there are not ships enough to give them employment where ships ought to be employed. Whose fault is that? Are the officers of the Navy in fault? Have they deteriorated in character or professional accomplishment? Not at all. No one who knows them, no one who takes the standard of graduation at the academy, but will say that there is rather more required in point of scientific acquisition than ever before. But because there has been a maladministration of naval affairs, because the ships have been allowed to go to nothing and have never been replaced, and because the great expenditures have been wasted, and because the officers have been continued to be graduated, and therefore the personnel of the Navy is large, I do not think it well or wise to cripple the other head because one has been crippled, and to bring down the number and character of the personnel because the ships are wanting.

Therefore it is that I do not wish to see the officers, however numerous they may be, left to the discretion of one man or one set of men, and put on shore pay, or leave of absence, or waiting orders, or reduced to furlough. There has been a discrimination heretofore, as I have heard; I do not want it to occur again, and therefore I do not see why an officer should be placed on furlough. I think putting him on leave of absence or waiting orders is quite sufficient, without putting him on half pay. It is understood that to many of these men a condemnation to half pay is a condemnation to great suffering. There are others to whom a furlough is an absolute relief, because they have other pursuits or other professions, and they can go on and make more than they can make in the Navy; but, on the other hand, I have been informed of many cases of great personal hardship and suffering from reduction of pay.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there is no such issue raised here in the bill as that which disturbs the Senator from Delaware. Furlough and furlough pay are recognized not as punishment, not as disgrace, but as one of the grades of pay, and the lowest.

In section 1442 of the Revised Statutes it is provided that—

The Secretary of the Navy shall have authority to place on furlough any officer on the active list of the Navy.

Pay goes to officers of the Navy in this order: sea pay, shore-duty pay, leave or waiting-orders pay, and furlough pay. The object of this provision, which reads thus—

No officer of the Navy whose pay is appropriated for in this bill shall be employed on any shore duty unless the Secretary of the Navy shall determine that the employment of an officer on such duty is required by the public interests, and shall so state in the order of employment, and also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue—is in some degree to try to limit what has grown up to be almost universal in the Navy. When a naval officer comes in from sea he desires to be put upon the highest pay, no matter what he is doing. It has been found that there are not places enough for this highest pay.

The law recognizes three grades of pay, shore duty, waiting-orders, and furlough; but the returns of the Department show that while nine hundred and thirty-four officers are on sea duty, even a larger number are on shore duty, and it is difficult to find anything for them to do. The grades of pay are as follows: For a rear-admiral, $6,000 on sea, $5,000 on shore duty, $4,000 on waiting orders, and half pay or $3,000 on furlough. Everybody pushes to get on shore duty, and almost everybody gets on shore duty, as the returns show.

All that this provision which has excited enmity provides is that if the Secretary can find and can certify that there is a duty actually to be performed that entitles a man to shore-duty pay, he shall be put on it, and then the rear-admiral will get $5,000 instead of $6,000, and the commodore will get his $4,000 instead of $5,000, and the commander will get his $3,000 instead of $3,500, but if he cannot certify and cannot find this increased pay with a duty accompanying it, all it prescribes is that in the discretion of the Secretary they shall be put—where? On one of the three remaining pays; that is, leave-of-absence, waiting-orders, or furlough. That is all there is of it. It simply provides that all these different pays may be adapted to the needs of the Navy as the Secretary shall determine. There is no punishment about it. You may say that a man who is on waiting-orders pay is punished because he does not get as much pay as the man who is on shore duty, but it is not as a punishment, and anybody who invokes any instance in the past where there has been favoritism granted is simply dealing ad hominem with the case, and is not considering the broad principles that underlie this provision.

It is a good provision. It is intended if there is duty of this higher grade for the naval officer on shore to perform, that he shall be sent there; and if he cannot, and the Secretary cannot so determine and cannot so certify, then he will be put on leave-of-absence or waiting-orders, or furlough pay, if there is nothing else for him to do. The idea of punishment is artificial and got up; there is no intention of the kind. With that, I leave it to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Mr. BAYARD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.]

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—27.

| Garland, | Hoar, | Miller of N. Y., | Vance, |
| Groome, | Johnston, | Mitchell, | |

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. On page 23, line 552, I propose to insert between the words "proper" and "notice" the word "public;" so as to read:

Before any of the vessels hereby authorized shall be contracted for or commenced the Secretary of the Navy shall, by proper public notice, invite all engineers and mechanics of established reputation, and all reputable manufacturers of vessels, steam-engines, boilers, and ordnance, &c.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. Would the Senator object to my modifying the amendment so as to say "by proper public advertisement and notice?"

Mr. HALE. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I move to insert the words "advertisement and" before "notice."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 138) for the relief of James Burke;

A bill (S. No. 346) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation;

A bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Mott, administratrix of the estate of Danford Mott;

A bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of the widow of George W. Flood;

A bill (S. No. 412) for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead; and

A bill (S. No. 1959) granting the right of way to the Arizona Southern Railroad Company through the Papago Indian reservation in Arizona.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Washington Light Infantry Corps; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain lands adjacent to the town of Pendleton, in the State of Oregon, belonging to the Umatilla Indian reservation, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 6722) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. PLUMB submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 5812) to establish post-routes; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

LOAN OF TENTS TO WASHINGTON LIGHT INFANTRY.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask to take from the table the joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives in reference to loaning tents to the Washington Light Infantry Corps, so that it may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the House bills on his table, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the sundry civil bill be taken up and then I will yield. ["Agreed!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Washington Light Infantry Corps.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that it be passed at once.

The joint resolution was read three times, and passed.

FORT BENTON MILITARY RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R.

No. 5222) to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes.

Mr. FARLEY. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state that the Committee on Military Affairs has reported favorably a bill of the same title, which I have compared with the House bill, and they are verbatim the same. The Senate bill was unanimously reported by myself from the Committee on Military Affairs, and is now on the Calendar.

The bill was read three times, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now move that the bill (S. No. 1499) to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed, so as to be taken off the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain lands adjacent to the town of Pendleton, in the State of Oregon, belonging to the Umatilla Indian reservation, and for other purposes, which was, in section 6, line 1, to strike out "three thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred."

Mr. SLATER. I move that the Senate concur with the House in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to Senators that I think for the facilitation of our business it is important that we should proceed with this bill until it is concluded, without interruption.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. To-night?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not say to-night, but I hope the bill can be concluded to-morrow. I will not ask the Senate to sit to-night upon the bill, if we can go on with it for a couple of hours now.

I wish to say in the beginning that this bill simply appropriates for the necessary operations of the Government. There are no questions involved in it such as were involved in the naval bill, no question of reorganization, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations has eliminated as far as possible all clauses looking to legislation. Therefore I ask in the beginning that, in order to facilitate this bill, Senators will agree by unanimous consent that the five-minute rule of debate may be applied to it. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If it be true, as stated by the Senator, that there is no matter of controversy involved in this bill, no legislative provisions likely to lead to discussion, why the necessity of applying the five-minute rule?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no wish other than what is common to Senators. We are all interested in getting away from here as soon as the public business is completed, and I trust there will be no objection to the proposition I make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the five-minute rule of debate be applied to this bill and all amendments to it. Does the Chair hear any objection?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think I shall have to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska objects.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a word of explanation to make on the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Chair understand the Senator from Nebraska as objecting to the five-minute rule?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; but I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska withdraws his objection. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, that the five-minute rule of debate be applied to this bill and all amendments to it.

Mr. MORGAN. I renew the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama renews the objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, I shall be obliged then to go on the best way I can with this bill. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be considered first, and that they may be acted on as the reading progresses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, which is to read the bill in the usual way with appropriation bills, acting on the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations as they are reached in order in the reading; and after the amendments of the committee are gone through with, the bill will be open to individual amendments? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill as it came from the House appropriated $23,976,783.66. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have added to that sum $1,788,040.83, so that the total amount of the bill as reported to the Senate is $25,764,824.49. This is a general statement. I have a detail of the reductions and of the increases made by the committee, but I will not trouble the Senate now by reading it.

Mr. BROWN. Will the chairman of the committee state how that compares in the aggregate with last year's bill?

Mr. BECK. I hope the chairman will file that statement of reductions and increases with the Reporter, so as to have it go into the RECORD in the morning.

Mr. ALLISON. I will have it put in the RECORD, so that it may be read in the morning by Senators. This bill as reported exceeds the bill for 1882, the fiscal year just closed, $3,672,630.37. I have here a statement, which I will file with the Reporter, showing the general nature of the increases. They are for a half dozen items which will be fully explained if the Senate will take the trouble to read the suggestions I shall file with the Reporter for insertion in the RECORD.

The statements referred to are as follows:

| SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL. | |
|---|-----------------|
| Amount of estimates for 1883..... | $23,312,259 01 |
| Amount of bill as passed the House..... | 23,976,783 66 |

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "State Department," in line 14, to increase from $75,000 to $85,000 the appropriation "to defray the expenses of the French and American claims commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 15 to 19, in the following words:

For the payment of the actual and necessary expenses of the two civilian experts as delegates of the United States to an international commission for the establishment of electrical units, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 19, to insert:

For commission to represent the United States at the reassembling of a conference to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver for the purpose of establishing internationally the use of bimetallic money and securing fixity of relative value between those metals, and in negotiations with reference thereto, $25,000 and their reasonable expenses, to be approved by the Secretary of State.

For the proportion to be paid by the United States of the joint expense of said conference, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 29, to insert:

For the purchase of books for the library of the Department of State, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the next dozen pages relating to public buildings are all public buildings for which both Houses of Congress have passed bills at the present session. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Secretary may simply read the name of the place and the amount in each case, not reading the whole text, which is merely formal. That will shorten the matter.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I have an amendment to propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There must be unanimous consent to the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the items had better be read. I will say in reference to all these items respecting public buildings that the House appropriated generally 50 per cent. of the estimated cost of the buildings in cases where both Houses had agreed to the bills or the propositions were in the form of laws. All the Senate bills, I believe, carried with them an appropriation, so that if Senators do not see appropriations here for a portion of the public buildings authorized at the present session, they will be found to be in cases where the bills originated in the Senate, which carried with them an appropriation. A few public-building bills passed the House of Representatives after this appropriation bill was presented to the Senate, and the committee have inserted in every case a fair proportion of the amount necessary to construct the buildings.

Mr. BECK. I wish to say that if Senators will obtain to-night before they leave House Report No. 1520, they will find a history of nearly everything contained in this bill, and it may be useful to them in the morning. It is House Report No. 1520 which contains all the documents laid before that body and that we had laid before us in connection with the items of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," in the appropriations for public buildings, in line 44, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and the same shall be built of white marble, provided the cost shall be no greater than if constructed of granite;" so as to make the clause read:

For the post-office and court-house at Baltimore, Maryland: For continuation of building, $250,000.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa why is that provision proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. The committee thought it wise not to restrict the material to be used there, and the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who was before us, stated that he would do exactly what is proposed here if it could be done without any increase of cost.

Mr. GORMAN. Nearly all the public buildings in Baltimore are of marble, and this should correspond with the others. The citizens are very anxious that the structure should be of marble. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury wrote a letter to the Committee on Appropriations of the House saying that the provision in the bill would not embarrass him in making his contracts. I trust, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted. This requirement will not increase the cost a dollar.

Mr. ALLISON. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury thought if this provision was inserted it might embarrass him in making his contracts. I said to him, "Am I authorized to state in the Senate that this provision will be adopted in making proposals for contracts if the price will not be increased?" and he said, "Yes."

Mr. GORMAN. The architect made a very different statement to me, as well as to the Committee on Appropriations of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit the question to the Senate. I do not think we had better legislate in this way, and the committee do not think so.

Mr. BECK. I desire only to add to what the chairman has said, that in regard to the Mare Island dry-dock we struck out a provision requiring it to be of granite. We ought not to impose such requirements. The Supervising Architect thought this clause might embarrass him in making his contracts, and a member of the committee who is unusually well informed in such matters concurred in what the Supervising Architect said—the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS]—that this ought to be stricken out. It is a bad practice anywhere.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not see how the architect or anybody else can be embarrassed by such a provision. It does not compel him to build of white marble unless he can build of white marble as cheaply as of other materials. He is not bound by it, he is not embarrassed by it. I do not see the slightest possible prejudice to anybody by allowing the clause to remain in the bill just as it comes from the House. There was exactly such a provision, I think a more stringent one, in respect to the Memphis custom-house; not only requiring that the custom-house should be constructed of marble but that it should be Tennessee marble dressed upon the site of the building. I do not see any possible harm that can come from leaving the clause just as it comes from the House.

Mr. ALLISON. The illustration of the Senator from Tennessee is no reason why this provision should be retained. The provision in the Tennessee bill of two or three years ago was that the marble should be not only Tennessee marble but that it should be cut at a quarry on the site of the building in Memphis and dressed there. Now we have to put in a provision in this very bill to repeal, practically, that proviso. If we leave these matters to the Treasury Department to exercise their proper discretion, I am quite sure no difficulty will arise.

Mr. BECK. We were told also that there were several so-called white-marble quarries in different parts of Maryland contending with each other, and that there might be trouble as to which was really white marble and which was not.

Mr. GORMAN. I think there is but one principal quarry of white marble in Maryland, from which nearly all the public buildings in Baltimore have been constructed. The citizens of Baltimore are anxious that this post-office building shall be constructed of marble if it can be done at a cost equal to that of the construction of the building of granite. The Supervising Architect who has charge of the construction of public buildings, I understand, rather prefers granite, but he has no objection (and he so stated to me and so stated in a communication to the Appropriations Committee of the House) to a provision that the building shall be constructed of marble, provided it can be constructed at an amount not exceeding the cost of granite. He said there was no objection to that, and it would not embarrass him in making the contracts. It is a matter of public taste, a matter in which I do not understand that there can be any question with the Committee on Appropriations. It is not an unusual provision, and I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should be glad to gratify the Senator from Maryland if I thought the public interest would be benefited by it. But a few years ago, when I was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the opinion obtained that white marble was the very worst material for public buildings, especially after the fire which destroyed the public buildings in Boston; and there was then incorporated in the acts that passed the Senate a provision requiring that they should be built of brick as the most durable substance out of which public buildings could be built in case of fire. If the provision remains, whatever may be the view of the architect in reference to the durability of the material, he will be compelled to build it of white marble, though his own judgment may be that it is the very worst material. I think the matter ought to be left to the architect.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Delaware will not object to this clause. In the great fire in Boston, I think the Senators from Massachusetts will bear me out in stating, that there was more destruction of granite buildings than of any other class of buildings.

Mr. ALLISON. The way to secure a cheap, durable building of the best material is to leave competition open. The granite people may or may not compete in this matter if we put in a proposition here saying that it shall be built of marble if it can be built as cheaply. I think the wise thing for the Senator from Maryland is to allow the amendment to prevail, and I have no doubt the best thing will be done for the interests of the Government.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the Boston fire showed any advantage for marble over granite. There were very few buildings of either structure in that burned district. There was no public building, as far as I now remember, but the stone buildings all crumbled alike under the influence of that heat, and the brick buildings, I believe, did a little better, but not much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, in lines 44, 45, and 46.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 23, noes 16.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 66, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for, and cause to be commenced thereon, the erection of a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at Harrisonburgh, Virginia, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 72, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for, and cause to be commenced thereon, the erection of a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at Abingdon, Virginia, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 78, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and internal-revenue, land, and other Government offices, at the city of Marquette, in the State of Michigan, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. The next item in the bill is for the building at Detroit. I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that the committee had put in the appropriations for public buildings for half the amount needed to complete them.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not mean to be so understood. I said that in the case of most of the buildings half the amount of the cost was appropriated in this bill. In the case of the larger buildings the half has not been appropriated.

Mr. CONGER. There is not half of the appropriation for Detroit.

Mr. ALLISON. Not quite one-half, though nearly.

Mr. CONGER. I think it ought to be amended to put it at one-half, $300,000.

Mr. ALLISON. If the building is to be constructed on the present site $550,000 will be the cost; if a new site is to be procured, it will cost $650,000. The sum appropriated in the bill is $250,000; nearly half of the first sum.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 137, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site and to commence the erection thereon of a building for the uses of the Government in the city of Brooklyn, New York, as provided by law, $300,000.

Mr. LAPHAM. The amendment submitted by me and referred to the Committee on Appropriations asked for the sum of $400,000. The purchase of a site in the city of Brooklyn is going to be a large item of expense, and $300,000 will leave a comparatively small amount to be expended on the erection of the building up to the 1st of July next. I trust, therefore, that it will be increased to $400,000, which is half the amount fixed by law as the cost of the building. I hope that will be consented to. It will be a very expensive purchase of a site, and it needs $400,000 to enable the officers of the Government to proceed with the erection of the building.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amount will not be changed. We think this is an ample appropriation for the Brooklyn building. I do not know what the site will cost, probably from $150,000 to $200,000, but a site has not yet been purchased and probably cannot be for two or three months, and there is an ample sum here to carry up the foundations and prepare the building for the superstructure.

Mr. BECK. Another suggestion: I believe we had no information before the committee that the Legislature of New York had yet given the authority required, and it will not meet until winter. Three hundred thousand dollars is all that can be spent before the 1st of July next.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to amend so as to increase the amount to $400,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves to amend the amendment.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is very important that this should be done, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I supposed the question of jurisdiction had been set at rest; but I find it is not.

Mr. BECK. There has not been a public-building bill passed by the House that has not contained a clause requiring a cession of jurisdiction—not one.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I beg the Senator's pardon; it ought not to be in any bill; it is an absurdity in itself.

Mr. ALLISON. That provision is in the Brooklyn bill.

Mr. BECK. It is in the Brooklyn bill and in all the other bills. The Senator from Florida cannot find one without it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think I can find many.

Mr. BECK. At this session?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Yes; a bill passed for my own town, and I did not let it go in because it was too big an absurdity.

Mr. BECK. Then the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been guilty of a very great absurdity in every other bill except the one the Senator from Florida put through.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am not entirely responsible for it, because I have done my best to prevent it, and I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] will bear me out in what I say: that this thing is an anomaly in our system that ought not to be there. This raising of an objection to the proposition of the Senator from New York does not meet my approbation.

Mr. BECK. That clause is in the Brooklyn bill itself, and there is no absurdity in stating a fact that the bill contains it, and requires a cession of jurisdiction.

Mr. LAPHAM. The consent of the Legislature may be obtained in the first part of the month of January, and it leaves the whole of the season to the 1st of July with very little money, after purchasing a site, with which to commence the erection of a building. In most of these cases half the amount provided by the act authorizing the erection of the building has been appropriated, and this amendment I propose includes just half the amount that is named in the bill authorizing the construction of this building in Brooklyn. I hope my amendment may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee to strike out "three" and insert "four."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 141, to insert:

For the post-office at Jersey City, New Jersey: For improvement of grounds, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 152, after the word "use," to insert "exclusive of furniture;" so as to make the clause read:

For the post-office and court-house at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: For continuation of building, including heating apparatus, elevators, and vaults, $400,000: Pro- vided, That so much of this appropriation as may be necessary shall be applied to and expended in completing immediately and fitting up for use, exclusive of furniture, the rooms in said building intended for occupancy by the United States courts and offices connected therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 154, to insert:

For custom-house building at Chicago, Illinois: For repairs and improvements to building, $31,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 167, after the word "for," to strike out "completing" and insert "continuation of;" so as to make the clause read:

For the custom-house and post-office at Saint Louis, Missouri: For continuation of the building, including approaches, heating apparatus, elevators, and vaults, $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 181, after the word "New York," to strike out "thirty thousand" and insert "eighty-seven thousand five hundred;" and in line 182, after the word "dollars," to insert "the total cost of which shall not exceed $175,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For repairs and extension and repair of custom-house and post-office at Buffalo, New York, $87,500, the total cost of which shall not exceed $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 195, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make examination and recommendation to Congress at its next session as to the advisability of selling this property.

So as to make the clause read:

For the Bridewell dock property at Chicago, Illinois: For repairs of pavement and sidewalk around Bridewell dock property, $3,000: Provided, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make examination and recommendation to Congress at its next session as to the advisability of selling this property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 207, to increase the appropriation "for the marine hospital at Key West, Florida: for completing seawall," from $1,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the following clause in lines 210 and 211:

For a marine hospital at New Orleans, Louisiana, $100,000.

Mr. CONGER. It is a very short time since the marine hospital at New Orleans, a very costly structure, was either sold or given away, with the understanding that the kind of building there and at other places was very unsuitable for a marine hospital. I see in this bill there is no provision for the plans of a marine hospital at any of the places mentioned here.

Mr. SHERMAN. In line 214 there is.

Mr. CONGER. There is no plan here. It has been recommended by the marine hospital surgeons that a plain, simple, wooden structure be made for all these marine hospitals, what are called pavilion hospitals, made of a kind that can be used as army hospitals, that can be used for a certain length of time, and when they become infected and dangerous from the infection be destroyed and others built again. That has been the policy of the Government up to this time. There has been an effort to substitute this class of hospitals for the old marine hospitals, which have proven utterly unfit for the business for which they were intended. I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee why it is that this return to the old palace hospitals which have been abandoned for years, which have been given away by the Government or sold in the years that are passed, is authorized now without any restriction as to the kind or character of the structure.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Michigan I will say that it is the purpose and expectation that these hospitals will be built exactly as he suggests.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the Senator—

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will have the kindness to wait a moment I will state further that on lines 214 to 219 it is provided that the sums herein appropriated shall be used not only for the erection of the hospitals but also for the purchase of sites for these hospitals, and we had the Supervising Surgeon of the Marine-Hospital Service before us. He explained to us how he intended to build these hospitals, and the plans are in exact accord with the suggestions made by the Senator from Michigan, namely, that the body of the hospital for the use of the officers and those in charge shall be built of brick and substantially fireproof; that the engines, &c., shall be in a small building adjacent, and that the hospital proper shall be in the shape of wings made of wood extending out to be enlarged from time to time or diminished from time to time, or torn down as the exigencies of the service may require.

I know in reference to the New Orleans hospital that we have expended in times past for that hospital $560,000, and so far from its being sold my recollection is that it has not yet been sold.

Mr. JONAS. It has been offered for sale, but the Government has never received a bid.

Mr. ALLISON. It has been repeatedly offered for sale, and I believe $20,000 was the highest bid ever made for that hospital. It is in a very poor place, and it is constructed in a way unfit for hospital purposes. So of the hospital at Cincinnati. That hospital cost several hundred thousand dollars, and many years ago it was sold for the sum of $70,000.

But the hospitals here provided for are to be constructed on the very plan suggested by the Senator from Michigan; I should not say suggested by the Senator from Michigan, because they are on the exact plan now ready for the construction of these buildings. In addition to that, at all these cities the Government is now paying large sums of money to private hospitals and private persons for the maintenance of sailors, so that it is considered a great economy to erect these hospitals in the four cities here provided for.

Mr. CONGER. I yielded for that explanation, and now I want to say a word more. There is, then, at New Orleans unsold—I supposed it had been sold—a building which has cost over half a million dollars, and is unfit to be a marine hospital. We have to have a new one. Now, on the plan of hospital to which I have alluded and to which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations alludes there can be no possible reason for paying $100,000 for any such hospital.

Mr. ALLISON. That depends upon the size of the hospital. The Supervising Surgeon of the Marine-Hospital Service told us there would be an average of sixty patients at each of these places except Cairo, and that sometimes there would be as many as one hundred and twenty, possibly one hundred and fifty, patients. You must remember that you will have to buy the ground in these large cities. There are some places where sites will not be very expensive. You must then erect substantial brick buildings for the accommodation of the officers of the hospital, the dispensary, &c., and, in my judgment and in the judgment of the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service, these sums are not greater than will be found necessary for these purposes.

Mr. CONGER. I call the attention of the Senate to this matter. We want a reasonable building for the officers and for the medical stores, and all that is required in that line will be supplied in the brick building; and with any reasonable price for a site in these cities, where we already really have sites for these buildings or for the old ones, it does seem to me, from my examination of this subject, which was very full, some years ago, that it cannot be pretended that a building or several buildings suitable for a hospital proper would require anything like this sum. This plan has been recommended time and again, especially in southern regions where the climate is warm and where the exposure to cold does not exist. There the cheaper and more simple the hospital building is the less expensive it would be, and it could be even destroyed after it had been for a time subject to infection. A one-story wooden building, running in different directions on the ground, that could be burnt or removed or torn down in a few years after it had gathered infection, has been recommended as adapted for that purpose. If that be so, there can be no possible reason for the expenditure in a few places of $100,000 for marine hospitals and leave scores of places in the United States, hundreds of them, where they are just as necessary, without any hospital at all.

I have called the attention of the chairman and of the Senate to this matter. I will not make any motion in regard to either of these places, but I had hoped that when appropriations were made for this purpose again they would be for reasonable, proper construction, inexpensive, subject to be destroyed and rebuilt, and that thus the benefit of marine hospitals might be extended to scores of other places where there are none now and where sailors are compelled to be kept by contract in whatever kind of buildings the contractors may please to put them.

Why, sir, of the marine-hospital fund in the Treasury of the United States there are some millions of dollars unexpended now, taken out of the wages of the sailors, lying in the Treasury, and the great expense which has been made in building these great palace hospitals has prevented the building in a great many places of the necessary hospitals for the comfort of the sailors with their own money. It is time this was changed and stopped, and I regret very much that we are about entering upon another system of expensive hospitals which shall absorb the sailors' money and confine the benefit of them to a few places.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I should like to ask, for information, if the money which enters into the construction of these buildings came out of the sailors' hospital fund?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all; it comes out of the funds of the United States.

Mr. JONAS. The argument of the Senator from Michigan is that these hospitals should be built of a temporary character, so that they can be torn down and destroyed whenever they are infected. I do not see why marine hospitals should not be erected in cities, provided they may be necessary, so that they may last for years and be able to accommodate sick sailors who are sent to them for care.

Why, Mr. President, we have in the city of New Orleans a great charity hospital, built some forty years ago. It accommodates from seven to eight hundred patients, and it has passed through eight or ten epidemics of yellow fever, cholera, and small-pox. All infectious diseases are sent there, and yet the hospital is easily disinfected. It is always kept in a perfectly healthy condition, and always ready for the reception of patients, whether sailors or people on shore. There is no difficulty in the world in disinfecting the building, and there is no difficulty in keeping up and maintaining a permanent hospital.

The trouble was that the marine hospital built in New Orleans by the Government was totally unfit for the purpose. It was a total failure, and never has been fit for use since the day it was erected, a great mass of iron without ventilation. It has been worthless from the very moment it was erected. The Government for several years has been trying to sell it for old iron. The difficulty is in the original erection of the building. There is no reason why marine hospitals cannot be built which can be disinfected and kept in a healthy condition without being destroyed after an epidemic has passed over.

Mr. BECK. We perhaps spent more time in committee over these four hospitals than over any one item of the bill, and we ascertained that it required about $100,000 each to erect that character of building that the Senator from Michigan has described; but we have to build at each one of these places a permanent building, say of four saloons and a hall and office and dispensary and reception-room on the first floor, and then above four other rooms for offices. Then we have to build a heating-room and other places, besides the building he described.

Dr. Hamilton appeared before us and told us what would be the cost of the ground. Of course it is cheaper than the sites for other buildings, because they are put in an out-of-the-way place, and the site is not so costly. One hundred thousand dollars is a very economical sum, for which we expect to erect a plain, permanent hospital building, with temporary barracks or bunks, or whatever they may be called, to be removed and burnt whenever any epidemic has infected them.

We spent at Cincinnati in the old hospital we had $230,000 and afterward had to sell it for $75,000. There were 2,000 patients in Cincinnati last year, and many had to be sent to Louisville and elsewhere for want of accommodations. The building we own in New Orleans, as stated by the Senator from Louisiana, is totally unfit for use. We paid $590,000 for it, and it is yet unfinished. We paid $150,000 for repairs, offered it for sale, and the highest offer was $19,000. It was begun in 1865. We have no hospital in Baltimore, but there are from forty to fifty men on an average sent to the hospitals there every day, and we have to contract the best we can and send them wherever accommodations can be obtained for them. At Cairo we have from thirty-five to forty on the average, and are obliged to have a building.

After thorough examination of Dr. Hamilton as to the cost and necessity, we were perfectly convinced that we could not erect these buildings for less than $100,000, and we have put them only at points where we are obliged to have them.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If this money were to come out of the fund made up by the contributions of the seafaring men of the United States, I would not vote for it; but that has not been my understanding. I understand that the money contributed by the seafaring men of the United States to the marine-hospital fund is to enable the United States Government to furnish them care and attention when in hospital, but not for the purpose of constructing buildings.

Mr. ALLISON. That is so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 217, after the word "same," to insert "including the purchase of sites for the same;" so as to read:

For a marine hospital at Cairo, Illinois, $60,000. And the sums respectively appropriated for the four hospital buildings are in full in each case for the completion of the same, including the purchase of sites for the same, and their cost is hereby limited to the sums in each case herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 222, to reduce the appropriation "for the Treasury building at Washington, District of Columbia: for annual repairs to the Treasury building," from $20,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 228, to increase the appropriation "for the custom-house, court-house, and post-office building at Nashville, Tennessee: to complete certain work upon the building and approaches," from $4,500 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 252, after the word "dollars," to insert "the same to be expended on plans to be made and approved by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and the Architect of the Capitol;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to erect a suitable brick building to be used for storing, packing, and shipping seed, $25,000, the same to be expended on plans to be made and approved by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment by adding:

But the building shall not be erected upon the public park.

It seems to me radically wrong to cover the park all over with these temporary buildings, and I am somewhat surprised to learn that more room is needed for these seeds; but I suppose it is needed.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator that we do not want to cover the park with buildings, but I would ask him where he proposes to erect this building?

Mr. MORRILL. Land in that neighborhood is very cheap. You can buy land enough to put up a building sufficient to distribute four times the amount of seed that is distributed here.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator, when he undertakes to amend this so that the building shall not be erected on the grounds now used by the Agricultural Department, will suggest some place where it can be put and insert a provision for purchasing the ground.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose that the Commissioner, if he was authorized to erect this building, would find a place. When we put up the building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing we purchased the ground for fifty cents a foot.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we had better leave this matter stand as the committee reported it. I think we can arrange so as not to disturb the public park.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 265, after the word "appropriation," to insert "of $25,000;" so as to read:

That the paragraph in the act approved March 3, 1879, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, which authorizes the purchase of land adjoining the site of the custom-house and post-office building at Fall River, Massachusetts, is hereby amended by adding thereto the words "and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to acquire said land by private purchase or by condemnation; and the appropriation of $25,000 in said paragraph is hereby continued and made available, and in addition thereto the further sum of $15,000 is appropriated for the purchase of said land."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 272, after the word "condemnation," to strike out "under the laws of the several States in which said buildings and light-houses are to be erected;" so as to make the clause read:

And it is further provided that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to acquire, by private purchase or by condemnation, the necessary lands for the public buildings and the light-houses to be constructed and for which money is appropriated by this act.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what is the object of striking out the provision of the House bill requiring the condemnation to be under the laws of the several States where the land is to be obtained?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the custom of the Committee on Appropriations where matters of legislation are concerned involving important questions to formally take the views of the committees having charge of that class of questions. So this clause was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee recommended that this provision be stricken out, for the reason that the Supreme Court has decided that it is unnecessary to condemn this property under the laws of the States; that the United States has the same power of condemning property as the States have.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Whatever may be the decision of the Supreme Court about it, whether it is law or not law, I would prefer to have the rights of the States respected so far that any act of condemnation should be under the laws of the States. While it may be strictly within the power of the General Government to condemn land under its own laws without reference to the laws of the States, I have myself so much respect for the States of this Union that I prefer that the condemnation, if there is to be any condemnation, should be under the laws of the respective States where the land is to be taken.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Delaware will read the decision in 1 Otto, page 367, he will find the case very clearly presented. Besides, we were informed that a number of the States have no laws of condemnation at all. The State of Massachusetts has none.

Mr. DAWES. We have a law of condemnation of property for highways.

Mr. ALLISON. But not for public buildings. The decision of the Supreme Court is distinct and clear on the question. There ought to be no trouble about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "life-saving stations," in line 284, to increase the item for the salary "of one assistant superintendent on the coasts of Rhode Island and Long Island, who may hereafter reside in any portion of the State of Rhode Island," from $500 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 311, after the word "disaster" to insert "or in any effort to save life;" so as to read:

For pay of crews of surfmen employed at the life-saving and life-boat stations during the period of actual employment; compensation of volunteers at life-saving and life-boat stations, for actual and deserving service rendered upon any occasion of disaster or in any effort to save life, at such rate, not to exceed $10 for each person, as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 325, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for pay of crews of surfmen employed at the life-saving and life-boat stations, during the period of actual employment," &c., from $560,000 to $580,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 326, to insert:

To replace life-saving medals provided for by section 7 of the act of July 20, 1874, which have been stolen from parties upon whom they have been bestowed or have been lost without fault on their part, $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 337, to increase the appropriation "for establishing new life-saving stations and life-boat stations on the sea and lake coasts of the United States" from $25,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "revenue-cutter service," in line 357, after the word "of," to strike out "a steam-launch" and insert "two steam-launches;" and in line 358, after "Alabama," to strike out "eight" and insert "and Galveston Harbor, Texas, sixteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of two steam-launches for service in Mobile Harbor, Alabama, and Galveston Harbor, Texas, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "engraving and printing," in line 377, to increase the total amount of the appropriation "for labor and expenses of engraving and printing" from $325,000 to $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, before the word "year," in line 380, to strike out "current;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the next session of Congress, submit for the year thereafter commencing July 1, 1883, an itemized estimate for the above service, and, so far as practicable, for the force of employés that can be individually and specifically appropriated for; and shall also estimate for the force that cannot so be appropriated for; and for material in separate amounts, and itemized as far as practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "light-house establishment," in line 400, to increase the appropriation "for expenses of buoyage: for expenses of raising, cleaning, painting, repairing, removing, and supplying losses of buoys, spindles, and day-beacons, and for chains, sinkers, and similar necessities," from $325,000 to $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 428, to increase the appropriation "for lighting and buoyage of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers: for maintenance of lights and buoys on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers, and at the mouth of Red River, Louisiana," from $140,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 429, to strike out:

That the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board be, and is hereby, extended over the Illinois, Great Kanawha, Tennessee River, the Saint Croix River in the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and the Chippewa River in the State of Wisconsin, and over the Red River in Louisiana, for the establishment of such lights, day-beacons, and buoys as may be necessary for the use of vessels navigating those streams. And the Light-House Board is hereby authorized to lease the necessary ground for all such lights as are used to point out changeable channels, and which in consequence cannot be made permanent. To carry into effect the foregoing, the sum of $38,000, to be used as follows: on the Illinois River, $2,000; on the Great Kanawha River, $8,000; on the Tennessee River, $15,000; on the Saint Croix and Chippewa Rivers, $3,000; and on the Red River in Louisiana, $10,000.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask the Senator from Iowa who has charge of the bill why the committee propose to strike out that portion of the bill commencing with line 430 down to and including line 447. I refer particularly to the rivers Saint Croix and Chippewa. The commerce on those rivers is very large. The commerce on the Chippewa River during the last year exceeded in value $8,000,000.

I do not know whether lights and buoys are necessary or not, but I simply desire to state that the commerce is very large, and if that commerce can be facilitated by the use of buoys and lights, they are very cheap, and I hope the committee will not insist on striking out this portion of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It is true that the commerce on the Chippewa is very large, but it is rather of a special character, as the Senator from Wisconsin knows very well. These streams are important local rivers, but if we undertake to extend the lighting service beyond the great rivers of our country we cannot stop anywhere; we must light every stream in the United States.

While the expense of lighting any one of these rivers of course is not very great, yet when you come to expand it and extend it over all the rivers of the United States the expense will necessarily be very large. The committee therefore thought it wise not to extend the system beyond the three great rivers now included in lighting the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the authority of an eminent engineer for saying that the Tennessee River is a better navigable stream than the Ohio River. The commerce of the Tennessee River is by no means special. That river runs through a very important grain country. I cannot understand why the committee should retain the lighting of the Ohio River and strike out the Tennessee. My opinion is that if the Tennessee River had the same advantages in the care of the Federal Government that the Ohio River has had and enjoys now, the commerce of this country would be very greatly increased.

More than that, the Tennessee is a river which is somewhat dangerous in its navigation. It has several important difficulties to navigation to overcome. I think when we are providing a light-system for navigation we should take into consideration the dangers of navigation and make our appropriations accordingly. If all the remainder of the House provision should be stricken out, I would insist upon retaining the Tennessee River as a river that is worthy of the consideration of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. The Tennessee River is, I think, the most important of the streams named, but it falls into the Ohio. I cannot think the Tennessee River is greater than the Ohio River.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not say that the commerce is greater, but I say it would be quite as great if the same advantages were given.

Mr. ALLISON. We have been pretty liberal and kind to the Tennessee River, I will state to my friend. If he will glance at the river and harbor bill, which he votes for generally, I believe he will discover that the Tennessee River has been very well cared for in that direction.

Mr. MORGAN. The river and harbor bill is kind to everybody, particularly to those who do not need it, and to a great many who do not deserve it; but if we extend the light system over any streams at all, by comparison I think that the Tennessee River is quite as deserving as the Ohio River. I understand that one of the objects of Congress in all this matter of controlling navigation is to increase the commerce of the country rather than to retard it, and to do justice rather than to make special cases and selections for our preferences. Really there is no reason at all why the Ohio River should be provided for and the Tennessee River left out. If the committee would strike out the Ohio River it would be all right. The Tennessee River is in the bill as it came from the House, and the committee have seen proper to strike out the Tennessee River as well as the Illinois and some others—the Great Kanawha, for instance.

Mr. ALLISON. The Little Kanawha is not in.

Mr. MORGAN. The Little Kanawha is not in.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that the Ohio, the Mississippi, and the Missouri Rivers were all provided for in the same bill some years ago, and of course the committee do not feel at liberty to strike out provisions which have been made in former bills for lighting these rivers, but if we undertake to extend beyond these great rivers we can find no stopping-place. There is the Sacramento River in California, the rivers in Florida, our Potomac River right at our doors, and the Columbia River in Oregon which might be lighted by this system, and there is considerable commerce on them. So if we undertook to increase here we should find no end to these demands. It is a mere question of money.

Mr. MORGAN. We never find any end to demands any way. As long as the people are compelled to pay taxes and are willing to pay taxes there will be no end to demands upon the Treasury, especially when we have a large surplus on hand. But the point I wished to call the attention of the Senate to particularly is the fact that the Ohio River is not a better navigable stream than the Tennessee River. After the Muscle Shoals Canal has been completed, which will be done I think in the course of two years, it will be found that the Upper Tennessee, from the Muscle Shoals up, is really a better navigable stream than the Ohio, and as to its commerce I believe there is no river in this country according to its length that will float more commerce than the Tennessee River, and which has a great variety of commerce, including the products of the very finest forests in the world, the finest iron mines and coal mines, and many of the finest producing regions for all the cereals and all the products of the cereal countries. So I think in following the committee in striking out the text of the bill as it came from the House we ought to make an exception of these words in lines 444 and 445:

On the Tennessee River, $15,000.

That is as far as I choose to go.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I would not object to retaining the two rivers in my State named in the bill; the commerce of those rivers is very large; but as the Senator from Iowa has said, it is a special and peculiar commerce, and it has got along heretofore very well without these lights.

Mr. MORGAN. The reading of the amendment would be a little awkward as it appears in the text now by reserving the words "on the Tennessee River, $15,000." If the Senate strikes out the text of the House bill as proposed by the committee, I will then move to reinsert "and on the Tennessee River, $15,000," at the end of line 429.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can ask for a division of the question on striking out all but the Tennessee River.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Alabama will not insist upon retaining the Tennessee River. After the Muscle Shoals Canal shall have been completed, as they are building a canal there, upon a report from the Treasury Department, or some Department, saying it is necessary, I do not think I should object to an appropriation.

Mr. BECK. This is new legislation in the House.

Mr. MORGAN. It is all new; there is no doubt about that. We take it from the House as if it were a hundred years old, as if it had been confirmed by the traditions of the whole country. We take it from the House as legislation that we have no right to interfere with,

I believe. A proposition coming from the House is equivalent to legislation, and even beyond that it is something traditional that has its sanction in the history of the country.

I will defer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] who I see has his attention drawn to the subject, as the Tennessee River passes twice through his State and only through a margin of mine, to see whether he supports the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Did the Senator from Alabama propose to amend the amendment of the committee, or to oppose the whole amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. I propose to amend the amendment by reserving the words "on the Tennessee River, $15,000."

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he amend at the beginning of the part proposed to be stricken out, where it declares that the Tennessee River shall be subjected to the jurisdiction of the board, and also except from the striking out the clause that he refers to. I quite agree with the Senator from Alabama as to the propriety and importance of rejecting the amendment so far as it refers to that river. I do not know anything as to several of the rivers mentioned.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me ask the Senator from Tennessee if it would not be wiser and better to take the opinion of the Light-House Board on this question before acting? It seems to me if we go into the business of enlarging the rivers which are to be lighted we shall not find a place to stop. Here will be the Cape Fear River, and the Columbia River in Oregon.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that for the present we pass over this amendment without acting upon it; and let us see if we can obtain from the Light-House Board an opinion with such information as that board can give us by to-morrow, when we can act more intelligently on the subject than now.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Tennessee can procure a letter from the Light-House Board probably that it would be a wise thing to light any of these rivers; but what I want to ascertain is the cost of lighting these rivers, and see how far it will go.

Mr. MORGAN. Has the Senator from Iowa any reason to suppose that the House has acted inconsiderately about this matter?

Mr. ALLISON. I would not for a moment intimate that they have so acted, and I trust the Senate will not act inconsiderately if they propose to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board. I have no objection to passing this clause over until to-morrow, if the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Alabama desire.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be passed over and we can come back to it. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over, and the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be reported.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, after line 449, to insert:

For lighted buoys, $25,000.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend the amendment by adding:

That no part of this sum shall be paid for any patent-right or any royalty thereon, unless the Light-House Board shall have first, in writing, approved the kind of lighted buoy used, the price for the same, and the amount of the royalty charged for each buoy.

Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that. I think that is a good amendment. I am obliged to the Senator for preparing it.

Mr. CONGER. Of course if it is acceptable I do not wish to say anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this amendment for lighted buoys. It seems to me entirely a new proposition inserted in the bill, not inserted by the House, if I am right. I ask the Senator if it has been usual in previous bills to insert "for lighted buoys," and if not, why it is necessary at this time, and the object? If he can give some idea about that I should like to know it, for lighted buoys, it seems to me, are a new feature entirely.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a new feature.

Mr. VAN WYCK. We have provided for light-houses; we have provided for buoys; we have provided for signals, and now there is thrust in here by the committee a proposition for something entirely new upon the coast and designated as "lighted buoys."

Mr. ALLISON. Of course this is thrust in here. It could not be put in in any other way.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did not mean "thrust in" as being obnoxious at all, but I mean that it was a thing put in the appropriation bill by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a new thing, and we are constantly having new things.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I should like to have it explained.

Mr. ALLISON. These lighted buoys are recent inventions. There are, I believe, three or four inventors, and they are now largely used in Europe and have proved to be very successful there. The Light-House Board have recommended them to be used in this country.

It is supposed we can use these lighted buoys in the great harbors of our country and at difficult places on our coasts, and thus save the erection of light-houses, which are very expensive, as the Senator from Nebraska knows. The Secretary of the Treasury has submitted a recommendation of the Light-House Board even to the extent of appropriating $100,000, but the Committee on Appropriations, proceeding with its usual caution, thought it best only to recommend $25,000, and so we have recommended that sum.

Now the Senator from Michigan comes to our aid in throwing around this provision other safeguards, requiring the Light-House Board again to agree to this, as they have already agreed to it once or twice in resolutions of the board, and he also wants the question of royalty settled, which is a wise thing to do. It seems to me the Senator from Nebraska need have no fear that this will not go on all right.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator speaks of the caution of the committee. I was a little afraid that their caution probably had not reached to the degree of caution exercised by the House. The House was so cautious in the matter, as I understand, that they did not deem it prudent to touch the subject of lighted buoys; and the Senate committee were so cautious that they reached only up to $25,000, when they say $100,000 was recommended.

I had something of an idea, which I hope the Senator from Michigan has covered by his amendment, that the great danger is its opening the door to let in certain patents which are believed to be important, which in the end, when they get a foothold on the Government, may lead to the expenditure of very large sums of money. I therefore desire to know the reason, the object of putting in this item. I knew the Senate committee was cautious; I thought the House was; and I want the Senate to be entirely cautious.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "light-houses, beacons, and fog-signals," in line 474, to reduce the appropriation "for building a light-house to replace the light-ship now on Fourteen-foot Bank, Delaware Bay," from $130,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 478, to insert:

For the establishment of two range-lights at the mouth of the Patuxent River, Maryland, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 483, to strike out:

For the establishment of a light and range beacons at the turn of the channel through Maumee Bay, Ohio, $20,000.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to hear from the committee why that appropriation, which seems to me one of the most desirable in the bill, should be stricken out. The necessity for lights there is known and felt by every one who is familiar with the navigation of that part of Lake Erie. The Government has expended several hundred thousand dollars in straightening the channel which makes what is called this bend, dredging a channel from Toledo to the deep water of the lake over in the bay. There has been a proposition for a light-house there and range lights for some years, but it was postponed until the channel should have been built and the exact position for the light-house should be understood.

I think the time has come when such a light is very necessary there. I may say that the amount of shipping going in over the lake to the Toledo River is as great perhaps as at any harbor on the lake except Buffalo. If there is any particular reason for not making the appropriation now I am not aware of it. I know it has been in contemplation for some years to ask Congress for such an appropriation as soon as the channel which the Government has made at very great expense should be completed, so that it would be useful.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee did not desire to increase the total sum of this bill. We knew, of course, that many of these lights are very important. Indeed, I think the Government could expend probably half a million dollars in the erection of lights in various parts of the country; but we did not feel it to be a wise thing to erect all these lights in a single year. Therefore we called before us the Secretary of the Light-House Board, and asked him to name to us the most important of these lights, and what, if any, could be postponed until next year without serious detriment to the commerce of the country.

In making the statement before us he said this light in the channel of the Maumee Bay could stand over for another year; that other things were more important; and the committee thought it wise to strike this out on the advice of the Secretary of the Light-House Board. It is recommended, we know, by a special report made in reference to it in the House. The question is for the Senate whether they want to swell the bill.

Mr. CONGER. There has been a special report made in favor of this light for some years past, and the only reason given for not having it built before was that it was better to wait until the channel was finished for use. In coming out of the lake there is a channel or canal under water with no banks to show where it is running for some two or three miles, as far as to the city of Toledo. There should be a light there to light vessels into this channel, and range lights to give them the direction.

I can hardly conceive upon what ground either the Light-House Board or the Secretary of the Light-House Board, after the recommendation they had made on this special case before, could have possibly thought that this was a work which could be postponed without great injury to the navigation of the lake, and I hope it will not be struck out. The appropriation is small, only $20,000, and we are giving hundreds of thousands of dollars for lighting elsewhere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out from line 484 to line 486, inclusive. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to prevail.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have a division, and if there is any reason for striking the clause out I should be glad to hear it.

The ayes were 21.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan insist on a further count?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; I do.

The noes were 7.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reason the Chair asked the Senator whether he desired a further count was that he knew there would be no quorum voting.

Mr. CONGER. There do not seem to be enough Senators present who are interested in navigation to give a judicious decision on so important a question as this.

Mr. HOAR. May I suggest to my friend whether it would not be better to try the question in the Senate and not break up a quorum now? The rest of the bill may be read.

Mr. CONGER. By that time all these other appropriations of large amounts will have been firmly seated in the saddle and this little thing might be left as a waif. Perhaps we might better know as we go along who want appropriations for their own rivers and lakes and refuse them to others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot suggest any way except to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. I do not see any other way.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays in order to show a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAWYER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] except when my vote may be necessary to make a quorum. If the Senator from West Virginia were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—27.

| | | | |
|------------------|----------|----------|------------|
| Allison, | Dawes, | Logan, | Pugh, |

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I give notice when the bill reaches the Senate, when there may be more judicious Senators present, I shall renew the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can ask for a separate vote upon the amendment when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I ask it now, so that the Chair will remember.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 435, to strike out:

For the establishment of a fog-signal at the harbor of San Luis Obispo, California, $20,000.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Before that amendment is adopted I feel bound to ask for an explanation in that case. I ask why that was stricken out? It is a place of considerable importance, and a very foggy place. I do not know any place in the country needing fog-signals more.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in response to the Senator from California that the committee found no recommendation, not even the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, and certainly not the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. There was no recommendation anywhere. It was not recommended by the Light-House Board, so far as we know.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The recommendation must have been lost.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it was either lost or mislaid perhaps. Captain Dewey said to us that the harbor of San Luis Obispo was an important one, but it was a great deal more important to complete the fog-signal at Lime Point. Therefore we increased the appropriation to $20,000 in the paragraph just below to complete the fog-signal at Lime Point, and omitted the other appropriation for the present.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will say to the Senator that was very well. I know of no place more important for a fog-signal than Lime Point, and if we cannot have both this year I prefer the action of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that is the reason why the committee ruled out the two lines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 500, to increase the appropriation "for the establishment of a steam fog-signal on Lime Point, at the entrance of the harbor of San Francisco, California," from $12,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 506, to strike out:

For the erection of a light-house in Little Traverse Bay, Michigan, $15,000.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that this appropriation passed the Senate in a bill formally reported from the Committee on Commerce on May 25. It went to the House, and the bill lies upon the Speaker's table. The House has incorporated it in this bill, so that it has passed both Houses. There is an estimate by the Light-House Board, and it is exactly right, having passed both Houses, of which I think the Committee on Appropriations was not aware. I trust the Senate will not agree to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee was aware of the fact that it had not passed both Houses. The same reasons apply that I have stated in regard to preceding items. We went over these matters very carefully with the Secretary of the Light-House Board, and we recommended everything that he said was necessary this year.

Mr. FERRY. The Light-House Board have written a letter to the Committee on Commerce upon which this item was based, and both Houses having passed it, of which fact the Senator says the committee were not aware, I trust the Senate will retain the item in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. We were aware that the House had not passed it, I said.

Mr. FERRY. The House put it on this bill, and of course it has passed it by putting it on the bill, as the Senator sees.

Mr. ALLISON. I so see. We found a little report from the House Committee about five lines long.

Mr. FERRY. As I said, the Senate bill lies on the Speaker's table, and the House incorporated it here. As it is in the bill which came from the House, of course, the House recommended it, so that it has passed both Houses appropriating the same amount.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division—yeas 16, noes 24.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 518, to strike out:

To commence the construction of a light-house at Mosquito Inlet, on the Atlantic seaboard of the State of Florida, $30,000.

Mr. CALL. I should like to know some reason why that is stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of the Light-House Board—I am compelled to quote him—said to us that this was not an essential light, and that it was essential to rebuild the light at San Blas, and he recommended that that be put in lieu of the new light-house proposed for Mosquito Inlet. The Senator will observe that the committee struck this out and inserted the rebuilding of the light-house at San Blas, appropriating $25,000 for that purpose.

Mr. CALL. I of course cannot say anything against the report of the committee or of the Light-House Board, except that it is utterly absurd. I want to say that about it. The Mosquito Inlet is upon the Atlantic coast of Florida, and while the rebuilding of the light-house at Cape San Blas, on the Gulf coast, is of importance—it is way up in the bend of the Gulf, where comparatively little of the commerce of the country passes, but still enough to make it important and valuable—the entire bulk of the great commerce of the Atlantic coast passes along in front of Mosquito Inlet.

It is a matter of record in the reports of the Life-Saving Service, and in the reports of the insurance companies of this country, that every year vessels are lost within sight of Mosquito Inlet. The entire coast commerce passes through the capes of Florida into the Gulf of Mexico; and this provision was inserted in the House, I have understood from a member there, on the favorable report of the light-house authorities.

Mr. BECK. I have not seen it myself, but I shall content myself with taking that statement and objecting to the item being stricken out.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I really cannot see what connection there is between Mosquito Inlet and Cape San Blas. If it be a question of comparative necessity I do not know how that can be decided. The House seemed to recognize the necessity of a light-house at Mosquito Inlet on the Atlantic coast, away around the capes, a very dangerous coast. From all I have been able to learn the necessity of a light-house there is great. As for Cape San Blas, in the Gulf, I know a good deal about that personally.

Mr. MORGAN. Is not that on the other side of Florida?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is within ninety miles of Pensacola. It is a dangerous cape, covered by water that makes out into the Gulf sharply, one of the most dangerous shoaling places in the whole Gulf of Mexico. The necessity of that light-house has been mentioned to me time and again by the chief of the light-house division; but I have said to him that a light-house at Mosquito Inlet is a matter affecting the general commerce of the country. There is no local interest of Florida involved in this thing. We are not a ship-owning people. The vessels that navigate those seas all belong to other quarters of the Union; and there is not much danger of any property belonging to Floridians being lost there; but it is a national work, and both of them, I think, are important.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt what the Senator from Florida says is true that both of these works are important, but the light-house at Mosquito Inlet will cost $200,000, and $25,000 is a mere bagatelle in its construction. I doubt whether it would put in the foundation. Of course, there is no sort of connection between the two places, except that the San Blas light is more important than the other to complete this year.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Why could you not build both?

Mr. ALLISON. We could if we appropriated money enough. I doubt if it is worth while to appropriate $25,000 for a light-house at Mosquito Inlet.

Mr. BECK. The bill appropriates some $25,000,000 or $26,000,000. The idea of the committee was to give the Light-House Service a full, fair share, to build light-houses at Stannard Rock, Laribel Sound, and all places we could, and finish up some of them that were begun last year. We sent for the secretary of the Light-House Board, and asked him which were the most important, and he told us what could be left and what could not be. San Blas, he said, was very important and the other could wait. Little Traverse Bay is put in, which is, I think, class 4, one of the least important. I do not know but that we might as well put them all in and say, "You can go and spend all the money you want," when you put in $15,000 for Little Traverse, which I think is class No. 4, and the Senate deliberately votes that in, and it is said the Light-House Board recommends it. I do not know where it will stop. Put them all in.

Mr. CONGER. I think one of the most economical modes of the expenditure of money is in building light-houses along the coast of the ocean and of the lakes. In regard to the appropriation which I spoke of a little time ago and which the Senate refused to approve, the Maumee Bay, the lights are in the State of Ohio. I looked with some earnestness to find some representative of that State who could tell the Senate what amount of shipping passed through Maumee Bay, to the principal shipping city of Ohio, Toledo. I found the Senator from Ohio on this side of the Chamber [Mr. SHERMAN] absent from his seat. I knew as a general thing that his colleague [Mr. PENDLETON] was not in favor of these appropriations. I knew he could not be in favor of any very liberal appropriations after the platform he had made for the people of Ohio, recently. Therefore I spoke a word for the State of Ohio, trying to aid its shipping and its navigation interests, and I desire to say a word for this proposition which the House has put in for Florida.

There are hundreds of miles of the Florida coast that have no light whatever for the shipping of the United States that goes from the Atlantic coast to the Gulf. This is one of the places, miles from any other light-house, with nothing to indicate in a storm or in a fog to the masters of vessels whereabouts upon the Florida coast they are.

If any person supposes that the appropriation of $20,000 or $30,000 to build light-houses along dangerous or remote coasts is not desirable, that it is a false expenditure or an extravagant expenditure of money, I think he knows very little of the necessity of light-houses to the shipping interests of the country. The proudest thing there is in the whole history of American expenditure as collateral to its navigation is the millions of dollars of expenditure in building light-houses and beacons along our entire coast. It is the proudest record the United States has.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me, in corroboration of what he says, to mention the fact that anybody who will take the trouble of looking at the statistics of twenty years ago to see the number of vessels that were lost passing through the Straits of Florida, and the limited number that are lost now, because those straits are lit up almost as in the light of day, will see the truth of what he says. The commerce is as great to-day as it ever was passing through the Straits of Florida; but the Straits of Florida now being lit up by light-houses, it is rendered almost impossible for ships to go ashore; when twenty years ago it was not an uncommon thing for the court at Key West to be pressed with salvage business; whereas I do not know that it now has more than one or two wrecks in a year or two to pass upon.

Mr. CONGER. I was about saying that one of the proudest things in the history and the records of this country is the fact that its light-house system, its beacon system, its system of buoys, and its fog-whistles and fog-bells is the admiration of the civilized world. There is no nation, old or young, that equals the United States in the judicious appropriation of money for these warnings, for these defenses to navigators in the storm. On any coast where there are dangerous points and no lights, the loss by the wreck of a vessel and cargo, to say nothing of life, would build a dozen light-houses along that coast.

I cannot understand why this committee for the first time in years has been parsimonious in these small appropriations for light-houses. It may possibly be that most of the members are from interior States, and that they do pass through the dews and fogs of the prairies without personal danger to themselves, and do not appreciate the necessities of light-houses, and of fog-whistles on the ocean. It is not dangerous on the prairies. What are called prairie schooners and prairie steamers pass along without any special necessity for light-houses, or for lighted buoys, but I had hoped the gentlemen upon the committee, although they live in the interior, although they never may have seen the ocean or dared its terrors, would be liberal enough to give these appropriations for the States that are bounded by the ocean and by the lakes. I should like to know why they did not do it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations hear fog-horns and fog-whistles pretty often, even if they do live on the prairies. The Senator from Michigan seems to think that unless we appropriate for every projected light-house on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico and on every river in the United States in a single year, we are parsimonious. The Senator from Florida tells us that a portion of the Florida coast is lighted up as by the light of day; and I am very much mistaken if the whole of Lake Michigan and Lake Superior is not lighted up very much in the same way, because if I have any recollection with reference to appropriations neither of the Senators from Michigan is especially modest in that direction, and they are no more virtuous than the rest of us with reference to this class of subjects. Although they live a little nearer the ocean than I do, I do not think they visit it much oftener than I do.

To be serious about this business, we have in this bill nearly $100,000 more than was appropriated last year for the light-house service. Yet the Senator from Michigan is innocent enough to think we are parsimonious about it. He does not look at past appropriations. If he looks at those he will find that we have nearly $100,000 in the bill with the committee amendments more than was appropriated last year for the same service.

Mr. CONGER. It is the same committee, parsimonious last year, almost as much so this year, with all the warning of the people.

Mr. ALLISON. It is perhaps the same committee; but I have seen new faces in the committee. But there is one trouble about these light-houses: we have not had the light of the Committee on Commerce on the subject. If they would throw their electric light on the subject the way would be clear.

Mr. CONGER. The Committee on Commerce have recommended these very appropriations; they have referred the matter to the Light-House Board and have had an affirmative answer to their inquiries, and then they reported to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee struck them out.

Mr. ALLISON. This Mosquito Inlet light-house was never referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the Committee on Commerce. They have not given us the benefit of the researches and intelligence of the Senator from Michigan on this subject or of the Senator from Florida. We have been groping in the dark; we have not had this electric light thrown on the subject until just now by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Did not this item come from the House?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course it came from the House. Where else could it come from? I will say to the Senator that these appropriation bills come from the House. This bill is from the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Let me ask the Senator one more question.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I presume, in view of the well-recognized economy of the House, they would certainly not have put a provision in the bill for Mosquito Inlet unless the Light-House Board did recommend it. The Senator knows very well that with respect to light-house appropriations they stand upon a footing different from all others. There is a special, a conscientious, and a highly scientific board set apart by authority of law to inquire into the necessities of commerce along the coast, and in every instance provided for by the House they recommend these appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. They do. They recommend an appropriation and have recommended it for some years at Mosquito Inlet, and they say the work will cost $200,000. The Senator from Florida finds fault because we have omitted to begin this work this year, but instead of it we have provided for the San Blas light, which is a very important one, appropriating about the same amount of money. This is not a river and harbor bill, where we are giving to States.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I know that, and that is why I speak as I do.

Mr. ALLISON. We are not dividing up among States.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. But I say, instead of doing two meritorious things you only propose to do one.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all, because we cannot do two. I should be glad to appropriate $1,000,000 for light-houses; a great many of them are needed; but we must go along with some sort of decorum in this business. The Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BROWN,] in his quiet, decorous way, asked me how much this bill was an increase over the appropriation of last year. I know the significance of that question. When my friend from Florida gets on the stump, after we finish up this bill, we shall be held up and gibbeted by the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, notably by my friend from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] for having largely increased these appropriations over last year. They will say, "Look at the economy and virtue of the Democratic Congress and compare it with the extravagance of this Republican Senate;" and thus we shall be held up.

In order to keep these appropriations down to some reasonable sum—the bill is nearly $26,000,000 now—we are providing economically for the necessary and essential works, and we are turning over to next year or some reasonable future the things which can be got along without. We have a right to ask our friends on the other side of the Chamber to help us in this economy, instead of retarding us at every stage and step, and then going out and charging us as Republicans with being extravagant in these appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am utterly amazed. I got up to make the most comfortable motion that a man can make in this body, and that was to adjourn, and the Senator from Iowa drags me into this matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my remarks.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is too late; it must stand for a minute at any rate. The Senator may search my record, whether it is long or short, conspicuous or the reverse, and he will never find where I attacked the liberal expenditure of public money for objects of this kind—never in the world.

I sympathize with the Senator from Michigan, and I have been voting with him, although as a rule I vote with the committee. But I have been voting for the most liberal expenditures of money, and I do not expect to attack my own votes when I go before the people.

If I thought the Senator from Iowa could throw more light this evening on the subject I would be very glad to stay here and hear it done. We are discussing the question of light, but it seems to me the better mode would be to adjourn and take this question up to-morrow. We have been here a long time; it has been a hard day's work, a very full day's work.

Mr. ALLISON. I had hoped that we should be able to dispose of that part of the bill relative to light-houses this evening. I did not intend to ask the Senate to stay very much after six o'clock. If it is possible I would rather finish the question of light-houses down to "the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

Mr. VOORHEES. We can finish the bill to-morrow. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Indiana to yield to me a moment that I may present a matter that I had forgotten.

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
J. D. C. ATKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that another committee be appointed, as requested by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore having been, by unanimous consent, authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 997) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 101) for the relief of G. W. Thompson and others, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and thirteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 31, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that that body disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. SAUNDERS, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. PENDLETON as managers of said conference on its part.

It also announced the passage of the following bills and joint resolutions, without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 6722) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea;

A bill (H. R. No. 6677) to regulate immigration;

A bill (H. R. No. 4443) to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of February 21, 1879, to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 274) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;"

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) for the relief of Sarah J. S. Garnett, widow of Henry H. Garnett, late minister to Liberia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 209) to authorize the President of the United States to call an international conference to fix on and recommend for universal adoption a common prime meridian to be used in reckoning longitude and regulation of time throughout the world.

It further announced the passage of the following bills and joint and concurrent resolutions, in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census;

A bill (S. No. 1612) to provide for the closing of an alley in square 751 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and for the relief of the Little Sisters of the Poor;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 74) for printing 5,000 copies of the official report of the Atlanta cotton exposition; and

A concurrent resolution that there be printed 7,500 additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer for the use of the Signal Office.

HELEN M. SCHOLEFIELD.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration Senate bill No. 249, for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield. A House bill of the same kind has been reported favorably.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I hope some rule will be adopted regarding unanimous consent, so that all may have an opportunity to ask for it.

Mr. PRESCOTT. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That the rule be that each member in the order in which his name appears on the roll shall be permitted to ask for one unanimous consent. In that way every member will have an opportunity, and we will avoid the ill-feeling growing up by reason of special recognitions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to have some rule adopted in reference to the matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then I move, Mr. Speaker, that the roll be called, and that each member, as his name is called, be allowed to ask one unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. That can only be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. O'NEILL. It will take four years to get through the roll.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I hope the gentleman will not object to my case. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I think the gentleman had better wait until the States are called for the introduction of bills.

Mr. PRESCOTT. This is in reference to a poor widow and has been reported favorably.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MONROE, LOUISIANA.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print some remarks in the RECORD in relation to a public building at Monroe, Louisiana. [See Appendix.]

EXPLANATION.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am requested to announce that Mr. McCook was paired on the river and harbor appropriation bill on Tuesday last, but by an oversight the pair was not announced. Mr. McCook, if present, would have voted against said bill at all stages.

REPORT OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House concurrent resolution of the Senate that there be printed 7,500 additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer for the use of the Signal Office; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

FORT BENTON MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let us have the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being demanded, the House resumes the unfinished business under the Pound rule, which is the bill (H. R. No. 5222) to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes, which was called up by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] under instruction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and for which he moved an amendment in the nature of a substitute, in substance the same as the Senate bill on the same subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to restore to the Secretary of the Interior the custody and control of the military reservation at Fort Benton, Montana. The Secretary of the Interior shall dispose of the same under the public-land laws, and such actual settlers as are now on said tract in pursuance of military authority shall be entitled to the first right of entry: Provided, That the following-described portion of said tract shall be disposed of under the provision of section 2387 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to town-sites on public lands, to-wit: beginning at the northeast corner of lot numbered 3, in section 14, township 24 north, of range 8 east of the principal meridian; running thence due east eighty chains; thence due south to the Missouri River; thence along the northern bank of said Missouri River to the intersection of the eastern line of lot 3 in section 23 of said township; thence due north along the line of the town site of Fort Benton to the place of beginning, as an addition to and a part of the present town-site of Fort Benton: And provided further, That there is reserved from said described tract of land to Mrs. Sarah E. Eastman, widow and administratrix of Francis Henry Eastman, and William S. Wetzel, the land on which the fur-trading post known as Old Fort Benton stands, and the land inclosed and occupied by them, as described on plats on file in the War Department, the same being six acres, more or less, to which they shall have the prior right of entry, and that the same be conveyed to them by the proper authorities upon their compliance with law. The county judge of the county in which said town-site is situated shall cause to be made a survey and plat of said tract of land, and the said plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register of the proper land office within ninety days from and after the passage of this act; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the county judge, as trustee of said town-site, to make entry of said tract of land at the local land office, and to dispose of the same to occupants in the same manner as if the same had been a part of the original town-site of Fort Benton.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the report has been printed in the RECORD of the morning of July 28. Under the modification of the rule the report may be read for five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Montana will state how many acres are affected by this bill; how many acres are embraced in the reservation, and also the necessity for the passage of the bill.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Speaker, some years ago it was deemed advisable to establish a military post at the site of old Fort Benton, an old fur-trading post, and a reservation about three miles long and two miles wide was withdrawn from the operation of the land laws. At that time it was contemplated to establish a military post at this point. Afterward the idea of establishing a military post and building a garrison was abandoned, and the buildings of the old fur company, which had been rented, were directed to be turned over to the owners by the Government. The most of the land embraced in this reservation is of the ordinary character and value of the public lands of the country, mostly high table lands, and by this act they are restored to the public domain under the ordinary provisions of the public land laws. The committees of the House and the Senate, however, have made two exceptions to this general disposition of the lands in the reservation. That portion on the river bottom under the bluff, amounting to one hundred and sixty acres or thereabout, and adjoining the town of Fort Benton, are to be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of the United States Statutes governing town-sites, and, as the gentleman knows that under the provisions of the general town-site act the lots will be disposed of to actual settlers only, another exception in favor of the owners of the old fur-trading establishment at Fort Benton is made. The owners are given the first right of entry on six acres of ground or thereabout, which has been occupied by their establishment for thirty years or more, and on which their buildings stand. Their first right of entry is protected to this six acres.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why is that?

Mr. MAGINNIS. Because they were the first settlers upon the land, and it was only deemed just and proper that they should have the first right to it. They occupied it long before there were any white people in that country. They were in a very marked way the first settlers, and it is only right that they should have the privilege in preference to other people. They claimed forty acres, that being the smallest legal sub-division of public lands, but the committee allowed only six, which had been actually fenced and claimed from the beginning.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a part of the town-site?

Mr. MAGINNIS. No, sir; it is a part of the reservation, just below the town site.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move now, Mr. Speaker, to substitute the bill which has been read for the House bill, the substitute being the exact language of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, with the amendments reported by that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and insert the bill which has been read by the Clerk as an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BAYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL CHASE BARNEY.

The Committee on Naval Affairs was called.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 660) for the relief of Samuel Chase Barney, and ask that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Samuel Chase Barney, late a lieutenant in the United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, restored to the retired list; and that from and after the passage of this act he be entitled to the pay of a retired Navy officer of the grade which he held at the date of his dismissal.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report accompanying this bill?

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The report may be read, under the modification of the rule, for five minutes before objections are called for.

Mr. TALBOTT. This is quite a lengthy report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that five minutes are allowed for debate for and against the measure; if so, the additional five minutes' time allowed in opposition may be also consumed in reading the report.

The SPEAKER. That time does not apply, however, until the question is submitted as to whether or not there is objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope there will be unanimous consent to the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first submit the question, Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. There are five or six pages of this report, and it will take at least twenty or twenty-five minutes to read it. It will be much more satisfactory to the House if the gentleman in charge of the bill will state briefly the gist of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The report is being read in the time allowed in opposition to the measure.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I know that; but it cannot be read in twenty minutes. It gives the House no information. I simply make the suggestion that the gentleman in charge shall explain briefly the measure.

Mr. HOLMAN. I prefer to have the report read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Before concluding,

The SPEAKER. The time allowed in opposition to the measure has been exhausted.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rule these reports may be read for five minutes; but in many instances, as in the present case, it will be impossible to conclude the reading of the report in that time, or even in the entire time allowed for debate under the operation of the present rule. I desire to ask, therefore, if only such parts of the report as have been read will appear in the RECORD, or if the entire report will be printed?

The SPEAKER. It will be printed only by unanimous consent. The practice has been, where no objection is made, to allow the reports to be printed.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. It is a matter of some importance that there should be a ruling upon the point for the information of the reporters, who would not feel authorized to put the entire report in the RECORD unless it was read, and I ask the question now with a view to determining what their duties would be when only a part of the report has been read and no affirmative action is taken directing the printing of the whole of it.

The SPEAKER. The reporters should not print the whole report unless it has been so indicated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the entire report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to be added to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the said Samuel Chase Barney shall not receive any pay or allowances for the period between said dismissal and the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. As it has not been possible to hear the reading of the report in this part of the Hall, I ask the gentleman who calls up the bill to state what it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it understood that the balance of the report besides what has been read will be printed in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the entire report will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HISCOCK. But that will not give us information upon which to vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not want to have one part of the report printed and not the whole of it.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will explain briefly the nature of this bill. This petitioner, Samuel Chase Barney, was in the United States Navy and served in the Florida war and in the Mexican war. He contracted a disability while in the line of duty in those two wars which incapacitated him for actual sea service, and he was placed on the retired list. He was on the retired list during the administration of President Lincoln, while Mr. Welles was Secretary of the Navy. He had some family difficulty in relation to the guardianship of his children. It was a matter of litigation, and the court—I do not remember exactly what court it was, some court of the District of Columbia—passed an order as to the custody of the children. He took his children and left the District of Columbia, and was considered by the court in contempt of court. His case being taken to the court of appeals was finally adjudicated, and he gained his case upon every substantial point. He was held not to be in contempt of court. I do not remember whether it was the orphans' court or one of the district courts from which he took his appeal.

Pending that litigation, the fact that he had been adjudged in contempt of court was brought to the attention of Secretary Welles, and he summarily dismissed Mr. Barney from the retired list of the Navy.

From that day until now he has been endeavoring to get back on the retired list from which he was summarily and without sufficient cause dismissed. Every Committee on Naval Affairs to which this matter has been referred has given him a unanimous report. The difference between all former reports and the reports of the Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Congresses is that all former reports gave him pay between the time of the dismissal and the granting of relief. The Committee on Naval Affairs of this Congress, at my suggestion, left that part out of the bill, and by the pending bill he only gets pay as lieutenant on the retired list from the date of the passage of the act. I think it is a very meritorious case for the House to act upon.

Mr. ROBESON. May I ask the gentleman from Maryland a question?

Mr. TALBOTT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. Is not the state of the case just this: that this officer was dropped from the rolls of the service on account of charges which when judicially investigated turned out not to be true?

Mr. TALBOTT. That is the case exactly.

Mr. ROBESON. And that when they turned out not to be true he was found to be still out of the Navy, and this puts him back on the retired list?

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes, sir; and the bill does not do him complete justice, because it does not give any back pay.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent, as only a part of it has been read, that the entire report be omitted from the record.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection that order will be made. There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TALBOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY RESERVATION AT FORT SMITH, ARKANSAS.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called, but presented no measure for consideration.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.

Mr. CRAVENS. I am directed by the Committee on the Public Lands to call up for present consideration the bill (S. No. 521) donating a part of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Arkansas, to the city of Fort Smith, for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Arkansas, as is occupied by Garrison avenue of the city of Fort Smith, and by the wharf of said city, be, and the same is hereby, donated to said city, to be used by it for the purposes of an avenue and wharf. That an amount of said reservation not exceeding nine acres, to be selected by the city on such part of said reservation as is hereby granted as it may desire, be, and the same is hereby, granted to said city, to be used by it for the erection of public buildings and county courthouse for the Fort Smith district of Sebastian County, Arkansas, thereon, and for a public park. That all the remainder of said military reservation, except the streets, alleys, and avenues hereinafter mentioned, and except the national cemetery and one hundred feet around the walls of the same, and except, further, all the ground included within the exterior line of the walls of the fort, together with all of said walls and ten feet around said walls, be, and the same is hereby, granted to said city of Fort Smith, to be held in trust by said city for the use and benefit of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith.

SEC. 2. That the said city shall, as soon as may be after the passage of this act, cause the said reservation hereby granted to be divided into lots and blocks corresponding as near as possible with the plat of said city; that all streets, alleys, and avenues laid out on such part of said reservation as is hereby granted be, and the same are hereby, granted to said city, to be held by it as streets, alleys, and avenues for the use of the public: Provided, That the said city shall lay off and for all time keep in repair a street or avenue sixty feet in width leading to the front gate of the national cemetery, and a street or avenue from Garrison avenue, one hundred feet wide, to the entrance of said fort fronting on said Garrison avenue; and if the said city shall fail to so lay off and keep in repair the said streets or avenues the nine acres of ground hereby granted to her shall revert to the United States. That the said city shall, within ten years from the date of the passage of this act, cause all that part of said reservation granted by this act to it in trust for the use of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith to be sold in single lots, at public sale, for cash, to the highest bidder, the city when such sale is made and the purchase-price paid, to make a deed to the purchaser for the same; and as soon, and from time to time, as the purchase-price is paid the same shall be paid to the treasurer of the school board of the single school district of Fort Smith, to be used by said board in the erection of school-houses and for the pay of teachers and the maintenance of the public schools in said district.

SEC. 3. That all persons having fractional lots fronting on Garrison avenue in said city of Fort Smith, and extending back to the northeastern boundary line of said military reservation, shall have the right to purchase, at private sale, of said city, within two years from the date of the passage of this act, so much of said reservation as shall be necessary to extend their respective fractional lots back to a distance of one hundred and forty feet, so that said lots will be one hundred and forty feet in depth, at the rate per square foot that the lot on the reservation nearest to each respective lot may sell for; and the said city, on the payment of the purchase-money, shall make the purchasers a deed therefor.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, as soon as possible after the passage of this act, issue to the city of Fort Smith a patent for all said reservation hereby granted to it for its own use and benefit, and also a separate patent for all of said reservation hereby granted to it in trust for the use and benefit of the free public schools of the single school district of Fort Smith; and said last-named patent shall recite that the lands so granted are held in trust by said city for the use and benefit of said school district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read before objections are called for.

The SPEAKER. Under the modification of the rule the report may be read previous to asking for objections, if the reading does not take more than five minutes.

Mr. CRAVENS. I have the report here of the Committee on the Public Lands accompanying the corresponding House bill. I ask that the portion which I have marked be read. The reading of that portion will not occupy more than five minutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed by this bill to permanently reserve the national cemetery grounds, now thus in the custody of the War Department, with additional grounds, and also all the grounds within lines drawn around parallel with and ten feet from the walls of the fort, and to donate the remainder to the city of Fort Smith for a public park and the use of the common schools of said city. Your committee have taken great pains to communicate with the Departments of the Government to learn and know whether or not the proposed permanent reservations are sufficient for its uses or purposes. From information received from the Departments of Justice, War, and the Interior it is believed they are ample, not only for all present, but prospective uses as well, and are of as much value to the Government as the whole reservation would be should it be retained. It is ascertained that the city of Fort Smith has no public park and no public buildings, and that the Fort Smith district of Sebastian County, the courts of which are held at Fort Smith, has no courthouse. To supply grounds for the needed park and buildings the bill proposes the grant of nine acres for that purpose and for a forfeiture thereof should the city fail to lay off, under the direction of the Secretary of War, and for all time keep in repair an avenue one hundred feet in width leading to the front gate of the national cemetery.

Roadways to national cemeteries are constantly costing the Government much money in laying off and keeping them in repair; and, considering the needs of the city in conjunction with the obligation upon it to keep in repair the avenue above mentioned, the grant of nine acres for the purposes aforesaid meets with the full approval of your committee. A glance at the map of the city of Fort Smith discloses the fact that there must have been some misapprehension as to the line between it and the reservation, and that its principal avenue, evidently intended to run parallel with and equidistant from said line, as it approaches the river encroaches upon the reservation, and that a portion of the city wharf is located thereon. For these reasons the provisions of the bill granting to the city so much of the reservation as is occupied by Garrison avenue and said wharf, and allowing fractional-lot owners to make purchases of adjoining lands to fill out their lots so as to conform in size to the full-sized lots lying between the avenue and the reservation, are regarded as highly proper.

The only remaining provision of the bill worthy of comment is that donating the remainder of the reservation to the city of Fort Smith, to be held in trust for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof. This commends itself with more force to your committee than any other provision of the bill. The school board of the city represents that, by the census taken in August, 1881, there were in it children of school age, 1,221, nine hundred and thirty-seven whereof are white, and the remainder, two hundred and forty-eight, colored; and that since that date there has been an increase in numbers of at least one hundred; that by a levy of taxes to the full extent of the law, (seven mills on the dollar,) they have been able to raise enough money only for the pay of teachers, to maintain three public schools, poorly accommodating five hundred pupils, eight months in the year, nine teachers being employed and paid from $5,743.94, the sum thus raised; that while the three schools have been maintained ten months in the year the money for thus continuing them has been raised by private subscriptions; that of the buildings used for these schools only one belongs to the school district, which cannot properly accommodate more than two hundred pupils. For the others the school board is dependent upon and indebted to the kindness of the Catholic bishop, Edward Fitzgerald, and the colored missionary Baptist society.

While it appears that the people of Fort Smith are poor, and in great need of additional buildings and means for the payment of teachers to accommodate their entire school population, resulting from their poverty, yet they exhibit a zeal in that direction worthy of the great cause of education, and far beyond that of the wealthy in many localities of our country. A people thus struggling in so noble a work deserve encouragement.

In many instances in early times out-lots and commons of towns were granted to them for school purposes. Later, large cities have been given properties of great value, schools of high grade have received munificent donations, and railroads and other corporations have fattened and grown rich from the magnificent, if not profligate, grants made to them from the public domain.

Reviewing the history of grants made from the public domain nothing is found to condemn the proposed grant of a portion of this reservation to Fort Smith for the purpose aforesaid, but such review rather strengthens your committee in the opinion that the grant ought to be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Five members rose.

The SPEAKER. Five gentlemen objecting, the bill is not before the House for consideration.

EUGENE B. ALLEN.

Mr. SPAULDING. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to call up from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill (S. No. 1120) for the relief of Eugene B. Allen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Eugene B. Allen, of Leavenworth, Kansas, the sum of $25,753.94 for losses sustained by said Allen growing out of a contract made on the 24th day of June, in the year 1878, between the said Eugene B. Allen and E. A. Hayt, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by which said Allen agreed to furnish and deliver beef cattle at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail agencies, in the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the report will be read.

Mr. SPAULDING. I have here a report accompanying House bill No. 2338 for the same purpose. The bill was originally introduced in the House, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by that committee reported back to the House with amendments. That amended bill was subsequently introduced in the Senate and passed that body, and is the bill which has just been read. I have in my hand the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let that report be read.

The report, which was read in part, is as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2338) for the relief of Eugene B. Allen, respectfully report:

On the 24th day of June, 1878, the said Allen entered into contract with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to furnish and deliver 6,000,000 pounds of beef cattle on the hoof, at Red Cloud agency, at 2.33 cents per pound, and 6,500,000 pounds at Spotted Tail Agency, Dakota Territory, at 2.39 cents per pound; delivery to be made at such times as the Commissioner should designate, and subject to inspection by Army officers or otherwise as said Commissioner should deem necessary.

By the second article of the contract, the Commissioner reserved the right to require a greater or less quantity, not exceeding 25 per cent. in either case. On the 20th day of August, 1878, the Commissioner elected, and so advised Allen in writing, to increase the amount the full 25 per cent., thus making the number of pounds to be delivered at Red Cloud 7,500,000, and at Spotted Tail 8,125,000 pounds.

Article 74 of the contract provides that the Commissioner will receive, at such times as may thereafter be determined, a sufficient number of cattle for a four months' supply at said agencies for freezing or herding, and if for herding there shall be a deduction in price of ten cents per one hundred pounds. On the 26th day of November, 1878, the Commissioner in writing directed Allen to deliver on or about December 15 following, for herding, cattle enough at Red Cloud to make not exceeding 2,300,000 pounds of beef, and at Spotted Tail to make not exceeding 2,500,000 pounds of beef, for a four months' supply. Prior to the 13th day of December Allen delivered the required number of cattle at Red Cloud, for which he has been paid, and on that day his agents arrived at Spotted Tail with 3,100 head of cattle, enough to make the required 2,500,000 pounds of beef, and tendered them to the Indian agent, who refused to receive them, alleging as a reason for his refusal that there was no Army officer there to inspect them. Tender was repeated and acceptance refused each day till the 16th, when Allen himself arrived at the agency and made tender on the two days following, and was met with refusal for like reason as his agents.

On the latter day, in consequence of a furious snow-storm and the intense cold, the mercury ranging from 20° to 42° below zero, the cattle broke from their keepers and scattered over the country for shelter, food, and water. Had the agent received the cattle on their arrival at the agency they could have been weighed and delivered within three days. A delivery of the cattle was commenced on the 21st of December, and by January 3 following 2,392 head had been regathered and delivered; one hundred and nine head were subsequently found by Allen and turned over; the remainder, five hundred and ninety-nine head, were never recovered. When the cattle arrived at the agency they were in good condition, fully up to the contract, and of the average weight of the cattle just delivered at Red Cloud—eight hundred and twelve pounds. The shrinkage on the cattle in consequence of the intense cold and their inability to obtain food and water was found to be an average of eighty-six pounds per head. Allen kept the contract on his part, and the cattle belonged to the United States, not to him, after his tender as aforesaid.

The Commissioner recommends payment to Allen as follows on this branch of his claim:

Shrinkage on 2,392 head of cattle, eighty-six pounds per head, making a total shrinkage of 205,712 pounds, at 2.29 cents $4,710 80
Five hundred and ninety-nine head of cattle lost, at an average weight of eight hundred and twelve pounds, making a total of 486,388 pounds, at 2.29 cents 11,138 28

Total 15,849 08

It is claimed by Mr. Allen, and it is believed correctly, that having furnished the four months' supply as called for by the Commissioner, he was relieved from further call under his contract till April 15. But early in March the Commissioner called upon him to make at once further delivery at each agency. Allen replied that he was under no contract obligation to do so until the expiration of the four months, and that if he furnished the cattle he should not be held by the contract price. In reply to this the Commissioner directed the Indian agent to receive the cattle. Before delivery Allen filed with the agent a protest and notice that he should demand payment for all cattle furnished within the said four months at the rate of $4 per one hundred pounds. The number so delivered was as follows:

At Red Cloud 682 head, weighing 540,315
Spotted Tail 738 head, weighing 573,718

Total, 1,420 head, weighing 1,114,033

For this number he received payment, under protest, at the contract price. Cattle at this season of the year are not easily found, and owners do not care to sell.

It resulted that Allen procured the cattle with difficulty at various points in the States of Nebraska and Colorado and the adjoining Territories, and paid for them off the range more than the contract price.

Your committee are of the opinion that the contract did not hold him to a further delivery till April 15, and that for his March delivery he is entitled to the market value of the cattle at the respective agencies. This is found from the evidence to be $3.25 per hundred pounds, an excess of ninety-two cents per hundred over the Red Cloud contract, and of eighty-six cents over the Spotted Tail contract. In this view Allen is entitled to recover on this branch of his claim as follows:

For 540,315 pounds delivered at Red Cloud, at 92 cents per hundred in excess of amount already paid him $4,970 90
For 573,718 pounds delivered at Spotted Tail, at 86 cents per hundred in excess of amount already paid him 4,933 96

Add amount found due him on December delivery 9,904 86
Total 15,849 08

Total 25,753 94

He makes a further claim of $3,197.62 for forty horses frozen to death in hunting the scattered cattle in December and January, and for hire of men and supplies for men and horses in hunting cattle from December to June. This claim your committee decline to recognize. It is not proved that this expense was authorized by any officer of the Government, or that at the time it was made Allen expected reimbursement.

It is recommended that the words "thirty-seven thousand three hundred and six dollars and eighty cents" be stricken out of the bill, and the words "twenty-five thousand seven hundred and fifty-three dollars and ninety-four cents" be inserted therefor, and that as so amended it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the question of objection is settled I would ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SPAULDING] to explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. That can be done only by unanimous consent. The first question is, Are there objections to considering this bill at the present time? [After a pause.] Only one member objects; and the bill is before the House.

Mr. SPAULDING. As I stated just now, this bill was originally introduced in the House, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by that committee was reported back to the House with amendments reducing the amount from $37,306.80 to $25,753.94. That amended bill was introduced in the Senate, and passed.

It seems that in 1878 Mr. Allen made a contract with Mr. Hayt, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In accordance with that contract he delivered in November the cattle he was called on to deliver at Red Cloud agency; and the cattle he was to deliver at Spotted Tail he tendered on the 17th of December. The Indian agent evidently did not want to receive them, and made the excuse that no Army officer was there to inspect them. For three days he refused to receive them, and on the 16th Mr. Allen himself arrived and again made tender of them, and they again were refused. On the 18th a furious snow-storm came on; it was intensely cold, and the cattle broke away and scattered to obtain food and shelter.

It turns out from an investigation made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that between the time the cattle broke away and the 3d day of January Mr. Allen, with the assistance of a large number of men and the use of some forty horses, recovered some 2,392 head of the cattle. Subsequently he recovered 109 more and turned them over. But 591 head were never recovered.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me a moment. I think there is not the same difficulty with the first item that there is with the second. As to the second item I would inquire of my friend if he thinks that where cattle were furnished under a contract, but at an earlier time than required, the Government should be asked to pay the additional sum here allowed beyond the terms of the contract?

Mr. SPAULDING. I do not think I quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. The second lot of cattle were furnished, as my friend will notice, under the contract, but at an earlier time than required by the Government.

Mr. SPAULDING. Do you mean the March delivery?

Mr. HOLMAN. The last delivery; the second lot of cattle. They were delivered at an earlier time than required by the contract. The contractor was paid the price fixed by him and the Government in the first instance, the price fixed by the contract. This bill proposes to pay him an additional sum.

Mr. SPAULDING. I am coming to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that is the main point in the case.

Mr. SPAULDING. It was recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs to allow this sum. Allow me to say further in reference to this contract that it differs from other contracts. The contracts made by the Indian Office are generally made upon printed blanks. In this case, in addition to the printed contract, there was written in the margin an additional provision of contract.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HALL OF RECORDS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to call up in this hour Senate bill No. 817, making appropriations for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon in the city of Washington of a building to be used as a hall of records.

The bill was read.

Objections being called for, six members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

REORGANIZATION OF THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. YOUNG. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 6753) amendatory of sections 440 and 447 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read.

Objections being called for, five members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

WILLIAM F. MARTIN.

Mr. OATES. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 2151) to pay William F. Martin, of Mobile, Alabama, the value of one hundred half boxes of tobacco illegally seized and sold by the collector of internal revenue at New Orleans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to William F. Martin, of Mobile, Alabama, the sum of $5,621.06, the value of one hundred half boxes of tobacco, the property of said Martin, which were illegally seized and sold by the collector of internal revenue on account of not being stamped, and the proceeds of which were paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report accompanying this bill.

The report was read in part.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Has not the hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has just expired.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I suppose the right of objection will remain?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I ask that the entire report be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The report is as follows:

The facts relating to the claim of William F. Martin, as they appear in the paper evidence submitted to your committee, are as follows:

In the month of April, 1869, William F. Martin & Co., of Mobile, Alabama, purchased in Augusta, Georgia, of Blair, Smith & Co., four hundred and eighteen packages of tobacco, weighing 22,909 pounds, on which the internal-revenue tax was $7,330.88.

The internal-revenue collector of Augusta gave to Blair, Smith & Co., the sellers, permission to transport said tobacco to Mobile, Alabama, and deliver it to the collector there, upon the execution by them of the requisite bond. The bond was executed and the tobacco accordingly taken to Mobile and delivered to and received by the collector. The tobacco was unstamped when it arrived in Mobile, it being the intention of the parties to have the stamps affixed there; but there was no bonded warehouse at Mobile, and the collector had no stamps and could only hold the tobacco as custodian for the protection of the Government and the collector at Augusta. He promptly informed the collector at Augusta of this and procured from him the necessary amount of stamps to be affixed, for which the claimant paid to the collector at Mobile the sum of $7,330.88, that being the full tax on the four hundred and eighteen packages.

Before the stamps were, however, received by the collector at Mobile he gave his permission to William F. Martin & Co. to take to New Orleans one hundred half boxes of the tobacco to be placed in a Government warehouse, and as soon as the stamps were received by him sent to the collector at New Orleans the number necessary to pay the tax on these half boxes. All this action on the part of the collector at Mobile was approved by the collector at New Orleans and also by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington.

Notwithstanding the tax had been fully paid, and the stamps had been placed in the hands of the collector at New Orleans to be affixed to the packages in his possession, and he had authority under the law to affix them and cancel them, he sued out a libel against the one hundred half boxes and had them seized for a violation of law in not having them stamped. The libel was sustained and the tobacco forfeited to the United States and sold and the proceeds placed in the Treasury.

The case, then, is this: The Government has the money paid by the claimant for the stamps, retains the stamps also, and also has the proceeds of the sale of the tobacco. The claim is for the value of the tobacco, and it seems to your committee that the claim is just, inasmuch as the claimant fully complied with every requirement of the officers of the Government and was guilty of no attempt to evade the payment of the tax, and they report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask whether it is now in order to move to go to business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is not. After the regular morning hour that motion will be in order.

COMMITTEE ON CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

Mr. ORTH. As I am not able to remain here, I ask unanimous consent to offer for adoption a resolution which I present under instruction from the Committee on Civil-Service Reform.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service have leave to sit during the recess of Congress at any time after the 24th day of November next.

Mr. COX, of New York. There is great need of that, I think.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLICATION OF TENTH CENSUS.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

ATLANTA COTTON EXPOSITION.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, the joint resolution (S. No. 74) for printing 5,000 copies of the official report of the Atlanta cotton exposition was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

COLLECTION DISTRICT IN TEXAS.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce and have put upon its passage a bill relating to the collection districts of Texas. This bill, which is a substitute for one referred to our committee, provides for the creation of a single collection district. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. I have here his letter, which I will send up to be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to explain—

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill provides simply for a collector at Sabine Pass; the other provisions of the bill are merely copied from the existing law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. MCCOID. I ask unanimous consent— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to make a statement—

Mr. HOLMAN. I am objecting upon the assumption, in the absence of explanation, that this bill makes an increase of officers. I infer that there is an increase in the number of collectors. What is the fact?

Mr. REAGAN. The bill provides for only one additional officer. The copying of the provisions of the old law makes the bill long, but all it does is to establish the collection district of Sabine Pass, where a number of railroads center and where there is considerable business. There have been repeated applications for a collection district there, and I have here a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury recommending this measure.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] object?

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to any increase of officers.

Mr. REAGAN. This provides for only one additional officer. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. O'NEILL. I think that this bill ought to be printed, so that we may understand it if it should be called up again.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills, joint resolutions, resolutions of inquiry, and resolutions of State and Territorial Legislatures for reference.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is now concluded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has the morning hour been exhausted?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour proper has not yet been entered upon. The Pound hour has been exhausted, and the call of States and Territories has been concluded.

OMAHA INDIAN RESERVATION, NEBRASKA.

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to make a privileged motion. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, with a view to moving that the House insist upon its amendment disagreed to by the Senate, and agree to the committee of conference asked for on the part of the Senate thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the House insisted upon its amendment to the said bill; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill Mr. HASKELL, Mr. SPAULDING, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas.

SAMUEL NOBLE.

Mr. MANNING. I desire, Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, to have printed my own views as to the memorial and evidence presented to that committee in reference to the claim of Samuel Noble, to be printed for the use of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLITS. I desire to call up for present consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 223) to define the boundary between the Indian Territory and the State of Texas.

Mr. McKENZIE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The question being taken, the morning hour was not dispensed with, two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

No. 6714) to provide for the redemption of special assessment certificate No. 130; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

QUIETING TITLE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL also, from the same committee, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 5965) to provide for the quieting of the title of the United States in certain lands therein described and for the reclamation of the marshes in the Potomac River; which was placed on the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REDEMPTION OF OUTSTANDING CERTIFICATES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6277) to redeem all the outstanding certificates of indebtedness issued under the acts of the late Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, approved August 10, 1871, and May 29, 1873, respectively, which are not held by the Treasurer of the United States as ex officio sinking-fund commissioner of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INDEXING LAND RECORDS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. URNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2934) providing for an improved system of indexing the land records of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DANIEL DONOVAN.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 5614) for payment of Daniel Donovan for additional labor and services rendered the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COLLECTION OF ARREARS OF GENERAL TAXES.

Mr. URNER also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 6276) to provide for the collection of arrears of general taxes in the District of Columbia, and to increase the securities for the payment of the 8 per cent. certificates issued under the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, approved May 29, 1873, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS AND MINOR CHILDREN.

Mr. CURTIN, from the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 3919) to amend section 4702, title 57, Revised Statutes of the United States; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. CURTIN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2713) to extend the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of certain pensioners," approved March 3, 1879, to certain other pensioners; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. CURTIN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 2464) to amend section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was placed on the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT JOHN G. KYLE.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 5485) for the payment of the funeral expenses of Lieutenant John G. Kyle; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON, ETC.

Mr. HENDERSON also, from the same committee, reported back with amendments the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 6776) granting condemned cannon and cannonballs to Post No. 208, Grand Army of the Republic, at New Brighton, Pennsylvania, for monumental purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6779) donating condemned cannon and other munitions of war to G. H. Barnes Post No. 175, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania.

HENRY N. HALSTEAD.

Mr. PRESCOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6881) granting an increase of pension to Henry N. Halstead; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REGULATION OF NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. PRESCOTT also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6882) to suppress newspaper license and forgery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DIGEST OF CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. ATHERTON. The Committee on Elections have instructed me to report a joint resolution to provide for preparing a digest of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses; and I am authorized by the Committee to ask for its consideration at this time.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 279) was received and read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. Let it be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed for the use of the Senate and House the usual number of copies of the digest of contested-election cases in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, together with a full index of the same, to be prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Elections; for the preparation and superintendence of which there shall be paid said clerk by the Clerk of the House of Representatives the sum of $1,000, and not more than $500 shall be paid before the work is completed.

Mr. RANDALL. I think under the law this matter is required to go to the Committee on Printing. The amount is in excess of $500.

The SPEAKER. If there is objection to the present consideration, the joint resolution will be referred.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

RIGHT OF WAY AT SANDY HOOK, NEW JERSEY.

Mr. FLOWER, (by Mr. RANDALL,) by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6883) granting the right of way through grounds belonging to the United States at Sandy Hook, New Jersey, to Morris C. Mengis, his associates, successors, or assigns, for the construction of a railroad; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, what is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired—

Mr. HISCOCK. I move, then, to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask whether the regular order is not the further consideration for fifteen minutes of business from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. HISCOCK. If there is unexpired time belonging to the Committee on Indian Affairs I do not wish to antagonize that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas calls up business of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Chair understands that there are fifteen minutes of unexpired time belonging to that committee.

Mr. HASKELL. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. SPAULDING.]

Mr. SPAULDING. I call up for consideration Senate bill No. 1939.

Mr. RANDALL. How does this come up? Has the Indian Committee any time remaining?

Mr. SCALES. I understand that the whole time of that committee was exhausted, if the time occupied in calling the roll be counted; and it must of course be counted.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, the call of the roll was under the operation of the previous question, coming over from the preceding day. By the rules of the House when the previous question is ordered upon a bill in the morning hour or any other special hour the bill is taken out of the operation of that hour and is voted upon in the time of the House. That was the condition of affairs in reference to the bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The roll was called, not in the time devoted to the business of our committee, but in the time of the House, and therefore not chargeable to our committee.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not matter whether time was consumed in the calling of the yeas and nays or otherwise; if upon business of the Indian Committee it is to be counted.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time this question arose, but is quite willing the House should act upon the matter if there is any doubt about it.

Mr. HASKELL. We claim only fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. While it is true that the operation of the previous question gave preference to the bill in question immediately after the reading of the Journal on the following day, still it would seem to the Chair that the time occupied in disposing of the bill was a part of the time of the committee.

Mr. HASKELL. When the roll is actually called in any portion of an hour set apart for special business it of course counts as part of the time; but when at the expiration of that hour, under the previous question, the roll is called outside of the hour, it is never taken out of the morning hour or any special hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the roll was called in the morning hour; it took precedence of the morning hour, because the previous question was operating. The Chair will submit the question to the House for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] asks twenty minutes' further time for consideration of business from the Committee on Indian Affairs under the order which has been operating. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PAPAGO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZONA.

Mr. SPAULDING. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1959) granting the right of way to the Arizona Southern Railroad Company through the Papago Indian reservation, in Arizona.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a right of way not exceeding two hundred feet in width through the Papago Indian reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, shall be, and is hereby, granted to the Arizona Southern Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the Territory of Arizona, according to the plans of route and survey of the said company now on file in the Department of the Interior, which said plans of route and survey have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, except as to that portion running through said reservation: Provided, That the consent of the Indians occupying said reservation be first obtained, and such compensation as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior be paid to him by the said railroad company, to be expended by him for the benefit of the said Indians.

Sec. 2. That whenever said right of way shall cease to be used for the purposes of the said railroad company the same shall revert to the United States.

Mr. SPAULDING. Mr. Speaker, this bill has received the unanimous approval of committees of both Houses. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Indian Office. The distance through this reservation is only eight miles. The railway company has the right of way on both sides, and has partially constructed its road. The Indians are in favor of granting the right of way, and have asked for it. The Department is also in favor of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe there is some provision in the bill in regard to compensation for this right of way.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The bill provides that the consent of the Indians shall be obtained and that the railroad company shall pay for the right of way.

Mr. SPAULDING. Payment is to be made to the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it to be reserved as part of the Indian fund?

Mr. OURY. Mr. Speaker, the bill called up for consideration at this time granting the right of way to the Arizona Southern Railroad Company is one of great importance to the general commercial interests of the Territory, giving as it does a direct railroad communication to the whole of the Territory north and west of the city of Tucson with the city of Guaymas, on the Gulf of California. The consent of the Indians over whose reservation the right of way is asked has been obtained. The provisions of the bill require that the company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior such an amount as he may indicate as a compensation to the Indians for such right of way. The bill meets with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior as well as that of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was passed by the Senate without a dissenting vote, and has been considered by the House Committee on Indian Affairs and unanimously reported favorably. Every possible precaution has been taken to guard the interests of the Indians and the Government, and there is absolutely nothing in the bill that can by any possibility provoke objection upon the part of any member of this House, and I hope the same will be allowed to pass. The people of my Territory have received but little from the present session of Congress, and the passage of this bill as a matter of justice to the Territory should be accorded without a dissenting voice.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPAULDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of a joint resolution (H. R. No. 270) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library, with an amendment, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of the following joint resolutions without amendment:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) requiring the Public Printer to publish certain decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department.

It further announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 1000) to prevent and punish counterfeiting within the United States of notes, bonds, or other securities of foreign governments, in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced concurrence of the Senate in the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases; and

A bill (S. No. 1845) to authorize the Postmaster-General to extend the mail service in certain cases.

DIGEST, CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. ATHERTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATHERTON. A joint resolution reported by me from the Committee on Elections and which was referred to the Committee on Printing, I notice in looking at the matter just now, should not go to the Committee on Printing at all. There does not seem to me any reason why it should be referred to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not carefully examine the joint resolution at the time.

Mr. ATHERTON. It is not a resolution for printing, but a joint resolution looking to an appropriation for a report which may hereafter be ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Was the subject referred to the Committee on Elections?

Mr. ATHERTON. The Committee on Elections assumed to make the report to the House.

The SPEAKER. Was it referred to the Committee on Elections?

Mr. COX, of New York. It was a joint resolution providing for printing, and under the rules was necessarily referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RANDALL. It must go under the law to the Committee on Printing if it involves an expense of over $500.

Mr. SPRINGER. The resolution provided that there should be printed for the use of the Senate and House the usual number of copies, &c., to be prepared in the way indicated, and it properly belongs to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the reference of the joint resolution was a proper one.

Mr. RANDALL. All printing over $500 under the law must be referred to the Committee on Printing, and I am advised this will cost over $1,000.

Mr. CALKINS. What reference was given to the joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. It was referred to the Committee on Printing, which is authorized to report at any time.

SUPPLIES FURNISHED THE SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to call up a bill (S. No. 36) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amounts due to citizens of the United States for supplies furnished to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the massacre of August, 1862, and providing for the payment thereof, and to move that the same be put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and determine the amounts due licensed traders, citizens of the United States, for supplies furnished, in the course of trade and business, to the Sioux or Dakota Indians of Minnesota subsequent to August, 1860, and prior to the outbreak and massacre by said Indians in August, 1862, and for which damages were not awarded by the commissioners appointed under the act entitled "An act for the relief of persons for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians," approved February 16, 1863, for the reason that said act limited the action of said commissioners to claims arising from depredations, and did not authorize them to act upon claims arising upon contract or upon accounts for supplies furnished; and the said claims, when ascertained, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Interior out of the money hereby appropriated.

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the foregoing section, the sum of $120,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, is not this bill subject to the point of order that it makes an appropriation and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union? The last order of the House granting time to the Committee on Indian Affairs certainly did not suspend the general rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was accorded to the Committee on Indian Affairs, extending its time twenty minutes under the previous order of the House and under the same restrictions.

Mr. HOLMAN. That certainly did not suspend the rule of the House affecting bills making appropriations. The House suspended the rules originally to fix the time for the consideration of business coming from the Indian Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that this is not subject to the point of order that it appropriates money and must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the Chair hold that under the recent order giving the committee twenty minutes it must not under the rules go to the Committee of the Whole House as it makes appropriation?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not under the order. The time of the committee was merely extended by unanimous consent, and the Chair thinks this bill has the same privilege as if it came up under the original order.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this bill is simply to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate what amounts are due to these traders who furnished supplies to the Sioux Indians under the advice and at the request of Major Galbraith in 1862, when they were waiting for the annuities which were overdue to them at the posts, these supplies being necessary to keep them quiet and peaceable until their annuities became available. They were accordingly furnished supplies by the traders, but before the annuities arrived the supplies were exhausted. The Indians became dispirited and restless under this treatment and broke out in an insurrection which resulted in a war, after which the funds belonging to them and in the possession of the Government were confiscated to an amount exceeding $5,000,000, leaving therefore nothing out of which to pay the traders who had furnished the supplies for these Indians for two months preceding the outbreak of the war, and who were relying upon these annuities, out of which they were assured they should receive payment for the material they had furnished. This bill has been carefully examined by the committee and unanimously reported by them. It also, I believe, unanimously passed the Senate.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to say but a single word upon this bill. If there was ever a just bill presented to the House of Representatives this bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs is, in my judgment, an eminently just and proper one. In 1862, at the time of the terrible massacre in our State, where eight hundred innocent people lost their lives, or immediately after the massacre, some $6,000,000 that belonged to these Sioux Indians was confiscated by the Government to pay the expenses of the war which they had inaugurated. In order to preserve peace or prevent an outbreak of the Indians, which as I have said did subsequently occur, the traders furnished goods and provisions to the Indians to keep them from starvation, and by so doing procrastinated or delayed the final outbreak and massacre which afterward occurred. Now this bill, as I understand it, proposes out of these confiscated funds to pay the Indian traders who furnished the supplies. It is therefore only a just and proper measure, and one which I trust will be passed. It is an act of justice to these people, who supplied the Indians during the time that their annuities were not available. It passed the Senate after a careful investigation, and was reported unanimously, I believe, by the Senate committee, as it has been by the House committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask if this bill appropriates any money? Mr. WASHBURN. It appropriates the necessary amount out of this confiscated fund, such as the Secretary of the Interior shall find to be due to these parties.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the amount involved?

Mr. WASHBURN. About $120,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. What bill is before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill is before the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has that bill been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes, sir; reported unanimously by the committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. But this I understand is the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The point of order would not lie against it for that reason.

Mr. HISCOCK. But the consideration is now being given to the Senate bill?

Mr. WASHBURN. The House bill is an identical bill—

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. This is the Senate bill which the committee authorize to be passed.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order the Committee on Indian Affairs is at liberty to call up any bill for consideration.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does this bill make an appropriation of money?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does.

Mr. ATKINS. Out of the Indian funds?

Mr. WASHBURN. Out of the confiscated fund. To make the matter plain I will repeat that in 1862, after the Indian outbreak, the fund of near six millions of dollars belonging to these Indians was confiscated and went into the Treasury. Now it is proposed by the present provision of law to pay the claims of these traders who furnished supplies to the Indians out of this fund which has been so confiscated.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the second section of the bill be again read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The second section was again reported.

Mr. HISCOCK. It seems to me that there should certainly be an amendment to the bill providing that this $125,000 is to be paid out of this confiscated Indian fund; and I suggest that as an amendment, or that a similar amendment be inserted in the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is not necessary; it must be paid out of this confiscated fund.

Mr. HASKELL. There is no Sioux Indian fund—

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I demand the previous question. It seems to me that it would make no difference if the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York were adopted. This fund has been covered into the Treasury, and it is just the same thing. It is simply taking out or paying out of that which has been already covered into the Treasury.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman refuses to allow an amendment?

Mr. HASKELL. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then a quorum will be necessary.

Mr. ATKINS. Has this bill been referred to the Committee on Claims, or does it come from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The SPEAKER. From the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HISCOCK. There have been at least $12,000,000 of these Indian claims or depredation claims filed; and, so far as I am concerned, I want to know what fund they are to be paid from before I am willing to give my assent to such a measure as this.

Mr. ATKINS. And so far as I am concerned, I want the bill to go to the Committee on Claims, where it belongs.

Mr. HASKELL. Just one word. There is not a particle of depredation claim about this bill; nothing of the kind. Before that war the Indians had $5,000,000 of their own money. This claim is brought in here by men who furnished them food upon their credit and clothing on their own credit.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. HASKELL. Wait a moment. When that war broke out that entire fund of $5,000,000 was confiscated to the United States. The Indians could not pay the money because the Government had secured it all, and it was in the Treasury. This bill simply tells the Secretary of the Interior to find out how much those men furnished those Indians, and pay whatever is their due. That is all there is of it. There is no depredation claim about it, no raid upon the Treasury. It is agreed to by the Senate and the House committees, has been repeatedly so agreed to without a single murmur of objection.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I call for the previous question.

Mr. ATKINS. I wished to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question for information, but he did not seem disposed to give it.

Mr. HASKELL. I am not in control of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I rose two or three times to ask the gentleman a question, but he continued to occupy the floor. I wish to know how far back these claims date.

Mr. HASKELL. They date back to 1862.

Mr. ATKINS. Exactly.

Mr. HASKELL. They are old claims.

Mr. ATKINS. Very old.

Mr. HASKELL. But before they are to be paid a commission is to go and see what is due, and then it will be paid out of the $5,000,000 taken from the Sioux.

Mr. HISCOCK. Gentlemen talk about paying this from the $5,000,000 taken from the Sioux, but they are unwilling the bill should be amended to have the amount appropriated paid from what was taken from the Sioux.

Mr. HASKELL. That amendment cannot be admitted because there is no separate Sioux fund. It has been converted.

Mr. HISCOCK. If that amendment were put in the bill I think they would be able to find that money.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 32, noes 30.

Mr. ATKINS. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. ATKINS, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RICE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 51.

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw the point as to a quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the previous question was not ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The twenty minutes given to the Committee on Indian Affairs by unanimous consent as an extension of the special order have now expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House is very thin. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment, that I may submit a joint resolution to which I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

LOAN OF TENTS TO WASHINGTON LIGHT INFANTRY.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan seventy tents to the Washington Light Infantry Corps of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan to the Washington Light Infantry Corps of the District of Columbia, if they can be conveniently spared, seventy tents, to be used by them for encampment purposes during the month of August, 1882: Provided, That ample security be given to the Secretary of War, to be judged of by him, that the said tents shall be returned in good condition to him after their use as aforesaid.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his motion, that the House do now adjourn?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 22, noes 57.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will give way, I desire to present a matter of printing which I think will be interesting to every one.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division on the motion of a recess.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 22, noes 52.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from New York, Mr. HISCOCK, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 12.

Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. HOLMAN said: I withdraw the point as to a quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the motion for a recess was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] moves that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. KLOTZ addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. KLOTZ. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 297.

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing.

The question being taken on Mr. HISCOCK's motion, there were—ayes 50, noes 2.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was agreed to; and the House proceeded to consider business on the Speaker's table.

F. G. SCHWATKA, SR., AND WIFE.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 51) for the relief of F. G. Schwatka, sr., and wife.

The bill was read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that the bill should be referred.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that the bill makes an appropriation of money and should go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GEORGE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oregon desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir. This bill has been before the House once before. Objection at that time was made to its consideration, but was subsequently withdrawn. I would ask unanimous consent that the bill, which is a very meritorious one, be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made that this bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, and the Chair thinks that point should be sustained. The bill may be referred to the appropriate standing committee of the House.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be allowed to remain on the Calendar. I introduced a similar measure in the House, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and by that committee favorably reported to the House. I ask that this bill be passed over for the present, retaining its place on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain lands adjacent to the town of Pendleton, in the State of Oregon, belonging to the Umatilla Indian Reservation, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be surveyed and laid out into lots and blocks so much of the Umatilla Indian reservation, in the State of Oregon, lying and being contiguous to or in the vicinity of the town of Pendleton, as may be necessary to allow said town proper and needful extension and growth, not exceeding six hundred and forty acres. That the lands so authorized to be laid out into town lots shall, in the plan and survey thereof, correspond as near as may be to the plans and survey of the said town of Pendleton, as laid out and established. That at the time of the said survey the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the said lots and blocks to be appraised by three disinterested persons, to be appointed by him, who, after taking and subscribing an oath before the county clerk of Umatilla County, Oregon, to faithfully and impartially perform their duty as appraisers of said lots and blocks under the provisions of this act, which oath shall be returned with their appraisal, shall go in person upon the ground and determine the value of each lot and parcel thereof, making lists thereof particularly describing each lot, block, and parcel, with the appraised value thereof as by them determined; which said list shall be verified by the affidavit of at least two of said appraisers, made before the said clerk of Umatilla County, Oregon, to the effect that said list is a correct list of the said lots, blocks, and parcels appraised by them, and that the appraisements thereof are the true value of each parcel appraised, and that the same were determined by them after due and full inspection of each and every parcel thereof.

SEC. 2. That upon the return of said survey and the appraisal of said lands, if the same shall be approved, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause said lands to be offered for sale at public auction at the door of the court-house in the town of Pendleton, which sale shall be advertised for at least thirty days in such manner as the said Secretary shall direct. The said sale shall be open, public, and to the highest bidder, and shall continue from day to day until all of the said lands shall have been sold or offered for sale. The said lands shall be offered in single lots and parcels, and no bid shall be received for any lot or parcel less than the appraised value of the same. Payment shall be made as follows: one-third at the time of sale, one-third in one year, and one-third in two years; but no patent shall issue until full payment shall have been made. All lots, blocks, and parcels of said lands not sold at said public sale shall thereafter be subject to private entry at the appraised value thereof. Upon a failure of any purchaser to make any of the deferred payments upon any lot or parcel of said land sold at public auction for the period of thirty days after demand, the same shall be subject to private entry as unsold lots or parcels, and all payments made thereon shall be forfeited to the fund for the use and benefit of said Indians as hereinafter provided: Provided, That the title to so much of said lands as is covered by a patent issued by the United States to Moses E. Goodwin, on the 20th day of August, 1869, for the north half of the northeast quarter of section 10, the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 2, and the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 11, township 2 north, range 32 east of the Willamette meridian, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to the heirs and legal representatives of said Moses E. Goodwin, now deceased, and to their assigns, upon compliance with the following condition, and not otherwise: the heirs and legal representatives of the said Moses E. Goodwin, or their assigns, shall pay for the use of said Indians the value of the said lands at the time of Goodwin's settlement thereon, which value shall be determined by the persons who shall be appointed to appraise the lots and blocks by this act authorized to be laid out and appraised; and the said appraisers shall certify and return their action in this respect in the same manner and at the same time as they do their action in respect of the lands laid out into town lots: And provided further, That any right heretofore acquired by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company for right of way for a line of railway and to lands for use and occupancy by said company for station or depot purposes shall not be affected by this act.

SEC. 3. That the funds arising from the sale of said lands, after deducting the expenses of the survey, appraisal, and sale of the same, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging on said reservation, and shall bear 5 per cent. per annum interest; and the Secretary of the Interior shall expend, from time to time, for the benefit and support of an industrial school for said Indians on said reservation, so much of the principal and accrued interest thereon as he shall see fit.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make all needful rules and regulations requisite to carry this act into effect, shall determine the compensation to be allowed the appraisers for their services in appraising said lands, and also the compensation of the surveyor for his services in laying out said lands into town lots.

SEC. 5. That before the Secretary of the Interior shall execute any part of the provisions of this act he shall obtain the full and free consent of the Indians upon the said reservation to the sale and disposition of the said lands in the manner and for the purposes in this act provided.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $3,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying this act into effect, which said sum, or so much thereof as may be expended, shall be reimbursed to the Treasury out of the sales of said lands.

SEC. 7. That the interior lines of the land by this act authorized to be laid out in town lots, and separating the same from the lands of said reservation, shall, from the date of the approval of said survey by the Secretary of the Interior, be and constitute the line of said reservation between the same and the town of Pendleton.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve the point of order on this bill that it must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. Without knowing anything of the facts, and admitting that the measure may perhaps be a meritorious one, I think the appropriation for making the survey contemplated is too large. If the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE] will consent to an amendment reducing the amount one-half, I will not press the point of order.

Mr. GEORGE. I will consent to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move to strike out of section 6, "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEORGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT LARNED MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 346) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to relinquish and turn over to the Department of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, the Fort Larned military reservation, in the State of Kansas.

SEC. 2. That the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed to have said public lands, when transferred as provided for in section 1, surveyed in like manner as other public lands, and shall thereupon cause the same to be appraised by three disinterested competent persons; and after such appraisal shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior the land shall be sold to actual settlers only, at the appraised price and as nearly as may be in conformity to the provisions of the pre-emption laws of the United States: Provided, That no person shall be permitted to purchase more than one quarter section of said land: And provided further, That the Commissioner may, in his discretion, cause the section of said reservation on which improvements are situated to be appraised in a body, together with such improvements, and may then sell the same at public or private sale, as he may deem to the best advantage of the Government, except that it shall not be sold at less than the appraised price.

Mr. RYAN. If there is no objection I will ask that this bill be now considered and passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RYAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES P. CHOUTEAU.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 184) for the relief of Charles P. Chouteau; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Court of Claims be authorized to grant a rehearing in the case of Charles P. Chouteau, surviving partner of Chouteau, Harrison & Valle, and William A. Steele, against the United States, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the amount, if any, due under the contract for the construction of the iron-clad vessel Etah, by reason of the delays occasioned in such construction by the acts of the Government beyond the period specified in the contract, or for extras beyond what was provided therein. If upon such rehearing a receipt dated April 24, 1866, shall be given in evidence, the court may give judgment for such sum as shall be justly and equitably due, notwithstanding such receipt: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as any admission of any facts whatever by the United States.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HENDERSON. It should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, I think.

Mr. REED. I understand that the Committee on Claims has charge of a similar bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. A House bill of the same character was very fully considered by the House and rejected. I move to lay this bill on the table.

Mr. BUCKNER. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. HISCOCK. If it is true that a House bill of the same character has been laid on the table, I will withdraw my motion in order to allow the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to move to lay this bill on the table.

Mr. BUCKNER. I hope that will not be done. The bill should be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable. The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to, and the bill was accordingly laid on the table.

STATE AND TERRITORIAL LIBRARIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the House joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library.

The amendment was, to add to the joint resolution the following: And the Public Printer is directed to print 50 additional copies of the same to meet the requirements of this joint resolution.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

DR. DANIEL M. APPEL.

The next business on the SPEAKER's table was the bill (S. No. 668) to authorize Dr. Daniel M. Appel, of the United States Army, to receive pay for discharging the duties of physician to the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Dr. Daniel M. Appel, assistant surgeon in the United States Army, did, from January 1, 1877, to March 31, 1879, discharge the duties of physician at the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, New Mexico, at the request of the then agent of said agency, at the rate of $50 per month, in the absence of and the impossibility of getting a regular physician, said Dr. Appel being then stationed at Fort Stanton, thirty-six miles distant, the vouchers for which services have been rejected by the accounting officers of the Treasury: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That Dr. Daniel M. Appel, assistant surgeon in the United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive the pay authorized or contracted to be paid by the agent of the said Mescalero Apache agency, New Mexico, to wit, $50 per month from January 1, 1877, to March 31, 1879, for services as physician at said agency, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes; and that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow his vouchers for same, already on file.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order on this bill.

Mr. WILLITS. A similar bill has been favorably reported to the House by the Committee on Indian Affairs and is now on the Calendar. I have the report of the committee here.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the report read?

Mr. WILLITS. I do not; it is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. HAZELTON. I ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withheld it to hear the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. WILLITS.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing it shall be withheld, but I do not want it withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 773) for the relief of Dr. Daniel M. Appel, respectfully report:

This bill has passed the Senate at the present session, and the report of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs is adopted by your committee. Attention is also invited to the accompanying statements of Lieutenant-Colonel Dudley and Captain Purington, of the Ninth Cavalry.

"This is a bill to authorize Assistant Surgeon Daniel M. Appel, of the United States Army, to receive pay for services rendered as a physician at the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, New Mexico, from January 1, 1877, to March 31, 1879, at the rate of $50 per month.

"From the evidence presented it appears—

"1. That the services were rendered in good faith by Dr. Appel under an agreement with the agent at the Mescalero Apache Indian agency.

"2. That it was impracticable to obtain the services of any other physician, and that Dr. Appel was compelled to travel thirty-five or forty miles from his regular station, Fort Stanton, New Mexico, through a dangerous country, at his own expense, in order to render this service.

"3. That notwithstanding this arduous service, Dr. Appel at no time neglected his duty as a medical officer of the Army, but made professional visits to the Indian agency only at such times as would not interfere with his duties at Fort Stanton, and always with the permission and approval of the commanding officer of that post.

"The just and equitable right to payment for such services has already been recognized and determined by Congress in similar claims of Assistant Surgeon Thomas F. Azpell, United States Army, by act approved January 16, 1877, and Assistant Surgeon J. A. Fitzgerald, United States Army, by act approved March 1, 1879.

"The Army regulations, which are sanctioned by and have the effect of law, prescribe the duties of medical officers of the Army as follows:

"Medical officers, where on duty, will attend the officers and enlisted men and the servants and laundresses authorized by law, and at stations where other medical attendance cannot be procured without great expense or inconvenience, and on marches, the hired men of the Army and the families of officers and soldiers."

"The committee recommend that the claim of Dr. Appel be allowed, as, in addition to all of the duties devolving upon him as a medical officer of the Army, he responded to the calls made upon him for his professional services at the Indian agency, thirty-five or forty miles distant from his station, in the same manner as any private physician would have responded, and as medical officers are frequently called upon when serving at frontier posts in cases of emergency and in the interests of humanity.

"The location or residence of the nearest private physician to the Mescalero agency was about one hundred and forty miles distant.

"The services rendered by Dr. Appel, at great personal risk and at his own expense, and for which this moderate compensation is asked, would have cost the Government at the lowest calculation twice the amount claimed if a physician had been appointed for service at the agency, and at the least calculation five times the amount had the nearest private physician been called.

"For all these reasons it seems just that the bill should pass, and Dr. Appel be allowed to receive the pay agreed upon, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes."

FORT STANTON, NEW MEXICO,
July 21, 1879.

I hereby certify that I was in command of the post of Fort Stanton, New Mexico, from April 5, 1878, until March 8, 1879, and that during that time Assistant Surgeon D. M. Appel was my post surgeon; that Acting Assistant Surgeon W. B. Lyon was absent during the great part of said time, and that, to my knowledge, there was no other physician within over one hundred miles of the post.

"That during that time Dr. Appel was frequently called to attend patients at the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, and as his services were urgently required, and I deemed it an act of humanity, I gave him permission to go whenever it did not interfere with his duties; that on these visits he was required to travel alone, at all hours of the day and night, through an unsettled and dangerous region, over a distance of seventy-six miles, using his own private conveyance; and that, in my opinion, his visits to the agency were just such professional visits as he would make to other patients not belonging to the Army, and he is unquestionably entitled to compensation for his extra services."

N. A. M. DUDLEY,
Lieutenant-Colonel Ninth Cavalry.

FORT BAYARD, NEW MEXICO, January 2, 1880.

I certify that during the years 1876, 1877, and 1878 Dr. D. M. Appel was post surgeon at Fort Stanton, New Mexico. During this time he was sent for frequently to visit the Mescalero Indian agency for the purpose of attending sick and wounded Indians. The distance between the post and the agency (forty miles) was traveled by Dr. Appel at all hours of the day and night and during inclement seasons of the year and through a very dangerous country. There being no other physicians in the country but Army surgeons, great suffering would have resulted if Dr. Appel had not responded to these calls. These visits were made in the doctor's own conveyance and at his own expense. None of his duties at the post were neglected on account of these visits.

GEO. A. PURINGTON,
Captain Ninth Cavalry.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill involves the idea of double payment to a public officer, and I think it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLITS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. The Government really saved $600 a year by the services of this officer.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill involves double payment to a public officer, which is always objectionable.

Mr. WILLITS. It has received the favorable consideration of a committee of this House as well as of the last House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This bill is against public policy.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the point of order. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to reserve the right to make the point of order until after the report was read. The point of order having been made, the Chair will be obliged to sustain it.

Mr. WILLITS. I ask that the bill be passed over and allowed to remain upon the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MAJOR G. W. CANDEE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 480) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be paid to Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, out of any money in the Treasury, the sum of $2,650, being the amount stolen from him at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, in the fall of 1869, without fault or negligence on his part, and restored by him out of private funds.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would suggest that a House bill of the same character as this has been considered, and I think was laid on the table. I will not myself move to lay this bill on the table.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I make the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid on the table.

GENERAL U. S. GRANT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 59) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General and ex-President of the United States, upon the retired list of the Army.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I move that it be laid on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist on his motion to lay on the table?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I do.

Several MEMBERS, (to Mr. MCKENZIE.) Withdraw it.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MCKENZIE, there were—ayes 33, noes 43.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being ayes 26; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think the yeas and nays will be insisted upon.

The SPEAKER. They have been ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to, there being—ayes 13, noes 37.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 77, nays 83, not voting 129; as follows:

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] is confined to his room by sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HENDERSON. I now move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 6722) to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea; when the Speaker signed the same.

CAROLINE MOTT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Mott, administratrix of the estate of Danford Mott; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be paid to Mrs. Caroline Mott, administratrix of the estate of Danford Mott, late of Alburgh, in the State of Vermont, deceased, the sum of $2,707.92, out of any money appropriated for the payment of judgments rendered against the United States; the same being the amount found due and allowed to said Danford Mott in his lifetime by the Court of Claims for expenses incurred in defending a suit brought against him for acts done as an officer of the United States.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES BURKE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 138) for the relief of James Burke; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $180.40 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to reimburse to James Burke, superintendent of the national cemetery at Salisbury, North Carolina, the amount of a judgment, costs, and disbursements, which judgment was obtained against said Burke in the circuit court of Pulaski County, Kentucky, at a suit of William H. Logan, for an alleged trespass by said Burke, committed while in discharge of his duty as said superintendent, which said Burke defended but was by said court condemned in damages and costs for the aforesaid sum of $180.40.

Mr. ARMFIELD. This has been approved by the committee of the House as well as by the committee of the Senate.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ARMFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIEUTENANT FRANK P. GROSS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 83) for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross; which was read a first and second time. The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order that as this bill makes an appropriation it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House, until I know from the Committee on Military Affairs what has been the action in this House on this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD P. VOLLUM.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 293) for the relief of Edward P. Vollum; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to ascertain the value of the property lost by Assistant Surgeon Edward P. Vollum, of the United States Army, who, while under orders of the War Department, was on board the brig Fawn, bound for Fort Umpqua, Oregon Territory, when she was wrecked on the 21st of November, 1856; and the amount so ascertained shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no allowance be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while on the voyage and engaged in the public service, and that the aggregate amount allowed shall not exceed the sum of $700.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OATES. That is an improper reference, as the gentleman from Kentucky will know when he is informed that this claim was referred to the Committee on Claims of this House and that that committee reported it back adversely. I move that it be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay upon the table takes precedence.

The motion was agreed to.

ALONZO GESNER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Alonzo Gesner; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to approve for payment, if on examination he finds the surveys were made in accordance with the report and approval of the surveyor-general of the State of Oregon of date December 1, 1877, certain surveys of the public lands made by Deputy Surveyor Alonzo Gesner, to wit: Townships 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 south, range 16 east of Willamette meridian, making fifty-four miles and three and nine hundredths chains of township lines and three hundred miles and sixty-one and ninety-two hundredths chains of section lines, at the rate of $7 per mile for township and $6 per mile for section lines, amounting in all to $2,182.91.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I move that that bill be put on its passage.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that that bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House, as it makes appropriation out of the Treasury.

Mr. GEORGE. It has been reported favorably by the committee of the House as well as by the committee of the Senate.

Mr. STRAIT. There has been a unanimous report of the House committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the point of order if the gentleman from New York withdraws it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. CALKINS in the chair.) The point of order being made, the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

LIEUTENANT FRANK P. GROSS.

Mr. YOUNG. Senate bill No. 83, for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask by unanimous consent that there be a change of reference and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CARLISLE. During the last Congress that bill, or a similar one, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. A question was afterward made whether it ought not to go to the Committee on Claims. That was submitted to the House, and the House decided it was properly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. So far as I am concerned I have no preference between the two committees.

Mr. YOUNG. I withdraw my request.

JOAB SPENCER AND JAMES R. MEAD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 412) for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, or cause to be paid, to Joab Spencer and James R. Mead, late of the firm of Spencer & Mead whatever sum, if any, he may find due, not exceeding the sum of $7,509.83, out of any money due and owing the Kansas tribe of Indians, in the State of Kansas, from the proceeds arising from the sale of lands owned by said tribe of Indians in said State of Kansas, in full compensation for the goods and provisions furnished said Indians by said Spencer & Mead during the years 1866 and 1867.

Mr. HASKELL. This bill has been reported favorably by every committee of the House and Senate which has had charge of it since 1874, and recommended by the Department of the Interior. I was requested to put it on its passage. It is to pay for supplies furnished the Indians.

Mr. COX, of New York. All the business of this Congress has been about Kansas, Indians, and lands. [Great laughter.]

Mr. HASKELL. Never an adverse report.

Mr. COX, of New York. But you have no right to monopolize the business of this Congress.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARCOS RADICH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 619) for the relief of Marcos Radich.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Let that be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on War Claims is the proper committee to which it should be referred.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Very well, then, let it go to the Committee on War Claims.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. This bill for the relief of Marcos Radich I think has been improperly referred to the Committee on War Claims. The same bill has been reported favorably by the War Claims Committee of the House, is now upon the Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent to set aside the order referring it to that committee, and let it retain its place upon the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ALONZO GESNER.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether the effect of the objection of the gentleman from Indiana to the bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Alonzo Gesner is to send it to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the effect of the objection, and that order has been made.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I ask unanimous consent to vacate that order, and that it be passed over informally and be allowed to retain its place upon the Speaker's table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MILLS. What difference is there between this bill and the one just sent to the Committee of the Whole on a point of order?

NAVAL HISTORY OF THE WAR.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 885) to authorize the compilation and printing of the naval documentary history of the war.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move the reference of that bill to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

MAJOR WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 254) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Reserving the question of order, I wish to state that this bill, or one of a similar character, was considered by the House in the early stage of the session, and my recollection is that it was laid on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that this bill be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

H. A. MYERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 472) for the relief of H. A. Myers; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order upon that bill that it should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so referred.

There was no objection.

TITLE TO CERTAIN LANDS, NAPA COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 801) authorizing the claimants to the Rancho de Napa, in Napa County, California, to prove up their title.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PAGE. I think, Mr. Speaker, it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. Without reading the bill carefully, it seems to me the probabilities are that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, as it seems legal questions are involved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot determine that question until the bill has been read.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. PAGE. I do not think, after hearing the bill read, that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. Let it go to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 861) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONVERSE. I make the point of order upon that bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. As a similar bill has been reported from the special committee and referred to the Committee on the Calendar of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may take the same course.

Mr. CONVERSE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will go there under the point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I make the point of order upon the bill; let it go to the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. It has already been considered by the special committee.

Mr. REED. Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio would consent to have it considered now.

Mr. CONVERSE. No; I want it to go to the special committee raised for the consideration of this subject.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the committee has already reported the bill.

Mr. CONVERSE. Not this bill; they may have reported some other bill, but not this one.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order would carry it to the Committee of the Whole, would it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. CALKINS.) The Chair was about to suggest that if the point of order was made it would take the bill to the Calendar.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Maine makes the point of order it will go there necessarily.

Mr. HASKELL. I hope we may have the consideration of this question now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] moves to refer this bill to the Select Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Mr. HASKELL. If that motion be voted down will the bill then be before the House for consideration?

Mr. COX, of New York. I make the point of order on the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. What point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] made the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] moves to refer.

Mr. RANDALL. But when he rose he made the point of order.

Mr. CONVERSE. I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made, the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. REED. I thought the Democratic side would succeed in making the point of order on that topic.

WIDOW OF GEORGE W. FLOOD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of the widow of George W. Flood; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be allowed and paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to M. J. Flood, widow of George W. Flood, for his services as a clerk in the Bureau of Topographical Engineers from the 1st day of December, 1854, to the 16th day of September, 1856, at the rate of the compensation or salary of a clerk of the first class, after deducting the amount received by him for services in said office during the period aforesaid, to wit, the sum of $575.50.

Mr. TYLER. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I wish to inquire if this matter has been considered by any committee of the House.

Mr. TYLER. The bill has twice passed the Senate—once before the present session. It has been considered by the Committee on Claims of the House at this session, and I hold in my hand a unanimous report of the committee in its favor.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. TYLER. The money is due to a poor woman in this city. The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM G. BUDLONG.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 375) for the relief of William G. Budlong; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Patents be, and he is hereby, authorized to hear and determine the application of William G. Budlong for the extension for the further term of seven years of the letters patent for improvement in shoe-pegging machines granted to him the 12th day of May, 1863, and antedated the 30th day of June, 1862, and reissued upon an amended specification the 29th day of February, 1876, the form of such application and the mode of proceeding under it to be in all respects the same as was provided by the act of Congress approved the 8th day of July, 1870, entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights, for the extension of patents granted prior to March 2, 1861;" and if, upon such hearing the Commissioner should be satisfied that the said William G. Budlong, without neglect or fault upon his part, has failed to obtain from the use or sale of his invention or discovery a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it and the introduction of it into use, and that it is just and proper, having due regard to the public interest, that the time of the patent should be so extended, the said Commissioner shall make a certificate upon said reissue patent renewing and extending the same to the said William G. Budlong, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for the term of seven years from June 30, 1879: Provided, That no person shall be held liable for the infringement of said patent, if extended, for making use of said invention between the time of the expiration of the extended term of said letters-patent and prior to the date of extension: And provided further, That no prior assignee or purchaser of an interest, legal or equitable, in said patented invention, shall acquire any interest therein by virtue of an extension of said patent under this act.

Mr. ERRETT. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the bill be placed on its passage. A precisely similar bill was referred to the House Committee on Patents, and that committee unanimously reported in favor of the bill something over three months ago. It is a meritorious case. The report of the House committee is very brief. If the House desires to hear it I ask that it may be read. It will take but three minutes.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not believe in extending any of these patents. I am in favor of the motion to refer to the Committee on Patents. But if I have the floor, I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay the bill on the table takes precedence.

Mr. SPOONER. Before the vote is taken I ask unanimous consent that the report be read.

Objection was made.

The question being taken on the motion to lay the bill on the table, there were—ayes 44, noes 49.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to refer the bill to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. ERRETT. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. COX, of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island to have the report read, simply saying this—

Mr. VALENTINE. The motion to refer is withdrawn.

Mr. McMILLIN. I renew the motion to refer the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will deal fairly with my friend from Rhode Island, and am willing the report should be read; but I wish to say this in advance of the reading of the report—

Mr. SIMONTON. Is the motion to refer debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to refer is debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York yields to the gentleman from Rhode Island to allow him to have the report read.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to say one thing in advance before I yield. It is this: a law exists as to patents. Every one knows what that law is. Some seventeen years have elapsed since this patent was granted. It is in the interest of the people of this country, especially the men who use inventions, that there should be no extension of patents of any kind. I never voted for one. In 1865 I reported a code extending the time for all patents two and a half years more. It was intended by that code and that law at that time that no more extensions should be granted by Congress. There might be cases evoked here and there where equities come in, but all equities should be determined under a general law. Therefore, whatever may be the nature of this report, however much of equity may appear in the case, I believe on these matters in standing upon a principle and refusing by special legislation to extend these patents.

Mr. McMILLIN. It has been nineteen years instead of seventeen years, as the gentleman from New York stated, since the patent was granted.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the report be now read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4095) for the relief of William G. Budlong, have considered the same, and report:

William G. Budlong, of Providence, Rhode Island, a mechanic, obtained letters patent on the 12th of May, 1863, for an improvement in shoe-pegging machinery. As shown by his statement, which is corroborated as to the main facts by other evidence, the invention is one of great ingenuity, value, and importance.

It consists in an apparatus to drive the peg by a blow similar to the one given by a hammer in the hands of a shoemaker.

Up to the time of this invention the most approved method was to press the peg by means of a cam into the hole previously made, the diameter of which had to be equal to the square of the peg used, to prevent the peg when so forced from breaking or brooming. The leather which formed the sole was required to be in a damp or wet state; consequently the only holding power was caused by shrinkage of the leather as it became dry, which caused a friction or adhesion to the sides of the peg.

When the sole became dry the shrinkage of the leather often displaced the peg so much as to separate it completely from the inner sole and cause the peg to project beyond the sole.

This patent was reissued February 29, 1876. Budlong, from lack of means, was unable to bring his invention into general use, and failed to induce others to assist him.

He used all reasonable efforts to introduce it, but without success, putting into the invention and expending in his efforts to realize from the same his entire earnings for the past twenty years, except the amount absolutely required for the support of his family.

The entire right in the patent is vested in said Budlong, who now has assurance of assistance to manufacture and introduce his invention if the patent is extended.

No machine of his is in operation, and the public has never been taxed for the improvement.

A favorable report on this application was made to the House of Representatives at the last session.

We think the inventor should derive a reasonable reward for the benefit he has conferred upon the public, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I simply want to say in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] that I agree with him that the general rule he has stated may be a correct one. I am sure I express the feeling of the Committee on Patents of this House when I say they join with me in that conviction. It has been the policy of that committee to scrutinize critically each of these applications for an opportunity to seek an extension of a patent. The committee has proceeded very carefully in the consideration of each of those cases, and has in no case been inclined to grant the application unless it has seemed to be a singularly meritorious one. That this case is of that character, and founded upon the strongest equities, is abundantly shown by the report which has just been read. Were it not of that character, neither I nor the committee would have urged its favorable consideration.

In this case Mr. Budlong is a poor mechanic of my native city, who invented this machine, which is now believed is well adapted for the purpose for which it was intended. It produces excellent work of a durable character. Mr. Budlong was unable to obtain assistance whereby to manufacture these machines and put them upon the market. As is stated in the report, the public has never been taxed for this invention; it has paid nothing for it, and this inventor has received nothing from the sale of his invention. He has expended all his spare earnings in order to bring it to a point where it might be a successful invention. I trust the House will consider this bill upon its merits, and not say because the general principles enunciated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] are correct that therefore this meritorious inventor should not be permitted to have the relief which is sought to be given by this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Patents.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 57, noes 38.

So (no further count being called for) the bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Patents.

SURVEYORS AND INSPECTORS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 376) to amend section 2763 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the use of steam-launches in going on board of vessels; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2763 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended by inserting after the word "boats" the words "or steam-launches."

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Let somebody tell us about this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to hear the report read or some explanation of the bill.

Mr. WARD. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is right.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. If anybody knows anything about the bill and will explain it, it may be that we would all be willing to pass it. I suggest that the section of the statutes proposed to be amended be read, in order that we may understand what the bill is about.

The Clerk read as follows:

The collector of each district may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, provide and employ such small open row and sail boats, and persons to serve in them, as shall be necessary for the use of the surveyors and inspectors in getting on board of vessels and otherwise for the better detection of fraud.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I suppose the words "or steam-launches" are to be inserted after the words "row and sail boats."

Mr. WARD. I think the bill had better be referred.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. DEERING submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 126, to reimburse the Creek Orphan fund, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to said bill, and agree to the same with the following amendments, namely:

Strike out in line 1 of said amendment "fifty-one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "forty-seven thousand five hundred."

Strike out in line 11 of said amendment the words "Creek orphans" and insert in lieu thereof "Creeks who were orphans on the 24th day of March, 1832."

Insert after the word "act," in line 21 of said amendment, the following: "Unless in the judgment of the President it shall be for the best interest of said orphans or their heirs that the same, in whole or in part, be deposited in the Treasury to their credit, as now provided by law for Indian trust funds, and the interest thereon only to be paid to the actual beneficiaries under this act."

And add at the end of said amendment the following: "But nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent the United States from asserting its right to be reimbursed by the Creek Nation in any future settlement therewith the further sum of $106,799.68, expended by the United States out of the Creek orphan fund for the support of loyal Creek refugees;" and the House agree to the same.

N. C. DEERING,

D. C. HASKELL,

OLIN WELLBORN,

Managers on the part of the House.

JAMES H. SLATER,

H. L. DAWES,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some explanation of this report.

Mr. DEERING. There is a written statement accompanying the report of the committee of conference, which I ask to have read.

The statement was read, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House submit the following statement:

The first amendment reduces the original amount named in the bill in the sum of $3,493, this sum having been recently credited by the Government to the Creek orphan fund.

The second amendment is simply a change of phraseology.

The third amendment leaves it discretionary with the President to pay the entire amount to the orphans or only the interest as it shall accrue.

The fourth amendment states that it is not the purpose of the bill to prevent the United States from asserting its rights to be reimbursed by the Creek Nation in any future settlement therewith in case it shall appear that the $106,799.68 expended for the Creek refugees should be paid by said Indians.

N. C. DEERING,

D. C. HASKELL,

OLIN WELLBORN.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. DEERING moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE LANDS, COLORADO.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 25) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands, and to secure to the State of Colorado the benefit of the act of July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts."

The bill was read in full.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that that bill be now put on its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill conveys lands which under existing law would not accrue to the State of Colorado. I make the point of order that it must be considered by the appropriate committee of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RYAN. I ask that the bill be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table, as the Representative from Colorado is not now present.

Mr. VALENTINE. Let the bill be passed over for the present.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WILLIAM L. WHITE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 146) for the relief of William L. White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and allow the claim of William L. White for actual services performed by him as a clerk in the land office at Oregon City, Oregon, under contract with the register and the receiver thereof, to the amount of $1,333.33, the balance due on said contract, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay the same out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on that bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order, but allow the bill to pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made—

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the bill be allowed to retain its place upon the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

HELEN M. SCHOLEFIELD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on this bill.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. If the gentleman will hear a statement, or will listen to the reading of the report, I think he will not make a point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to reserve the point until the report is read.

Mr. RAY. I send to the desk the report on a House bill similar to this.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I have here the Senate report.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. RANDALL. I must insist on my point of order.

Mr. PRESCOTT. If the gentleman will not withdraw the point of order, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to allowing the bill to retain its place on the Speaker's table?

Mr. RANDALL. There is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the House will not adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 43, noes 68.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Printing the bill (H. R. No. 6800) to amend section 3709 of the Revised Statutes; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. KLOTZ. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for reference. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

JOHN M. MCCLINTOCK.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 672) for the relief of John M. McClintock; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. McLANE. I ask for the present consideration of this bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order on the bill.

Mr. McLANE. There is a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana makes a point of order on the bill.

Mr. TALBOTT. It is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order does not come too late. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is that the bill makes an appropriation, and must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE. Does the gentleman from Indiana know what the bill is? It is simply to refund taxes illegally paid. It has not been the practice to make points of order on any bills of this character.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think my friend from Maryland misapprehends this bill a little.

Mr. McLANE. Oh, no; I do not. If the gentleman from Indiana, before insisting upon his point of order, will allow me a word, I wish to say that I introduced and had referred to the Committee on Ways and Means a bill similar to this. It is to refund taxes paid by a baggage expressman who was assessed as an expressman. The decision of the Treasury Department in all such cases has been that a baggage expressman is not liable to such taxation; and wherever the tax has been assessed and paid it has been refunded. No question has ever been made as to refunding to these baggage expressmen taxes assessed upon them as expressmen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the bill will be again read, reserving the right to make the point of order.

Mr. McLANE. I do not wish to have any difficulty with my friend from Indiana, and therefore I am perfectly willing that the bill be again read; but I submit to him and to the Chair that as a matter of right it is too late for him to make the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have been reserving it all the time.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman made the point of order as soon as the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the point was made in time. The gentleman from Indiana sought the floor at the same time with the gentleman from Maryland. If the gentleman insists upon his point of order the Chair is ready to rule upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a matter of fairness to the gentleman from Maryland, perhaps, as well as to myself, I am willing that the bill be again read, reserving the right to make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the bill be again read, reserving the right to make the point of order. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought I might have misapprehended the character of this bill, but I find I did not. I must insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman insists on the point of order, the bill is clearly liable to it, and must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. It is so referred.

COMPENSATIONS OF INSPECTORS OF HULLS, ETC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 843) amending section 4414, of the Revised Statutes, fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the districts of Michigan and Superior, within the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended by striking out the fourth paragraph of said section, and by inserting in the fifth paragraph the words "Michigan, Superior," after the word "Memphis;" also by striking out the seventh paragraph of said section the word "Superior."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order until I can know something about it.

Mr. HUBBELL. Allow me to make a statement.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the right to make the point of order until I hear from the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is there any report on the subject?

Mr. HUBBELL. There is.

Mr. COX, of New York. Suppose we have it read; otherwise we cannot understand the bill.

Mr. HUBBELL. A similar bill has been before the Committee on Commerce and it was favorably reported by that committee. I would like to have that report read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6237) amending section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the districts of Michigan and Superior, within the State of Michigan, having considered the same, submit the following report:

The object of this bill is to increase the salaries of the local inspectors of steamboats in the district of Michigan and Superior, in the former of which the salary now allowed by law is $900, and in the latter $800, per annum. An examination into the salaries paid for this service will show, first, that they are unequal, and that in the cases above mentioned they are not adequate compensation for the service performed. The committee, to substantiate this statement, attach hereto letters from the Secretary of the Treasury and from the supervising inspector-general, which so clearly make the fact above stated appear, and so clearly show the necessity of the legislation proposed, that without further comment they report the bill back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 26, 1882.

SIR: In accordance with the request contained in your letter of the 24th instant, I transmit herewith copies of Department letter, dated March 14, 1882, and letters of the supervising inspector-general of steam-vessels, dated January 14 and 19, 1882, respectively, all addressed to Senator FERRY, of Michigan, and referring to proposed legislation increasing the salaries of the local inspectors of steam-vessels in the districts of Michigan and Superior.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES J. FOLGER,
Secretary.

Hon. JAY A. HUBBELL, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 14, 1882.

SIR: I transmit copies of letter heretofore sent to you by one of the heads of divisions in this Department.

It is apparent that the duties required of these inspectors call for mechanical skill, for education in theory, and for integrity of character, and these qualities should have an adequate compensation. I will not undertake to say that $1,500 is that, or is less, or is more than that. I will say that the pay of this class of officers in different districts is unequal, and should be made alike, either by a reduction of that of some or an increase of that of others.

Respectfully, &c.,

CHARLES J. FOLGER,
Secretary.

Hon. T. W. FERRY, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISING INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF STEAMBOATS,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1882.

SIR: In response to the request you made verbally to me for my opinion upon the salaries of the local inspectors of steam-vessels in the district of Michigan, I have the honor to inform you that in the annual report from this office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, I expressed the following general opinion, which appears to be specially applicable to the subject of your request:

"This being a service (steamboat inspection) involving life and death, integrity in its officers should be encouraged by proper remuneration, and no officer capable of satisfactorily performing the duties it requires should receive a compensation less than $1,500 per annum."

According to said report the district of Michigan inspected for the year 1881 one hundred and thirty-nine vessels, at salaries of $900 per annum, while there are five districts at salaries of $2,000, and three at $1,500, in each of which fewer vessels are inspected than in the Michigan district.

These facts appear to be conclusive as to the justice and propriety of the amendment you propose to section 4414, Revised Statutes, placing Michigan in the list of $1,500 salaries.

Very respectfully,

JAS. A. DUMONT,
Supervising Inspector-General.

Hon. T. W. FERRY, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISING INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF STEAMBOATS,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1882.

SIR: In response to the request you made verbally to me for my opinion upon the salaries of the local inspectors of steamboats in the district of Superior, I have the honor to inform you that in the annual report from this office for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1880, I expressed the following general opinion, which appears to be specially applicable to the subject of your request:

"This being a service (steamboat inspection) involving life and death, integrity in its officers should be encouraged by proper remuneration, and no officers capable of satisfactorily performing the duties it requires should receive a compensation less than $1,500 per annum."

According to the report for the year ended June 30, 1881, the Marquette or Superior district, at salary of $800 per annum, inspected during said year sixty vessels, which is one more than a district which receives $1,500 salaries, and but two less than another district which receives $2,000 salaries.

These facts appear to be conclusive as to the justice and propriety of the amendment you propose in section 4414, Revised Statutes, placing the Superior district in the list of $1,500 salaries.

Very respectfully,

JAS. A. DUMONT,
Supervising Inspector-General.

Hon. T. W. FERRY, United States Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is liable to the point of order; and if insisted on it will have to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask that it be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will remain on the Speaker's table.

ELLA CARROLL, FORMERLY ELLA LONG.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 997) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following-described real estate, situate, being, and lying in the city of Washington and District of Columbia, known and designated on the public plat or plan of said city as lot numbered 3, in square numbered 530, be, and the same hereby are, granted and conveyed to Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long, illegitimate child of Daniel Long, deceased, her heirs and assigns forever.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask the consideration of that bill at the present time. It has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and I will send the report to the Clerk's desk to be read, as it will explain the facts. It has been passed by the Senate several times.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

On the 30th of November, 1869, lot numbered 3, in square numbered 530, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, was purchased and caused to be conveyed by Daniel Long in fee-simple to Jeremiah D. Long, who died unmarried, intestate, and without issue. Said Jeremiah D. Long and Ella Long, (now Ella Carroll) were children of Daniel Long and Margarite Haggerty, who cohabited as man and wife for nineteen years, but were never married. The parents are both dead.

Under the law obtaining in the District of Columbia, illegitimate children have no heirs except those of their own body, and this property has escheated to the United States.

The memorialist asks that the right, title, and interest of the United States thus acquired to the land in question may be conveyed to her, she being the natural sister of said Jeremiah D. Long, and the only living child or representative of the said Daniel Long and Margarite Haggerty.

Your committee are of the opinion that the prayer of said memorialist should be granted, and they submit the accompanying bill, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACCEPTED DRAFTS, ETC., IN THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution (S. R. No. 28) relative to certain accepted drafts and other papers in the Department of State; which was read a first and second time:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, directed to deliver to the person justly entitled to the possession thereof one draft for the sum of $8,950, dated New York, August 2, 1859, and drawn by Santiago Vidauri, governor of Nuevo Leon and Coahuila, by Ignacio Gulinda, agent, on J. M. Mata, Mexican minister, Washington, District of Columbia, and accepted by said J. M. Mata and made payable at the Bank of the Republic, New York, and all other papers relating to said draft, the same having been deposited in the Department by error: Provided, That a copy of said draft, with all the indorsements and protests, if any, thereon, shall be retained by the Secretary of State.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the point of order until there has been some explanation of this joint resolution. I hope if there be any gentleman in charge of the bill he will explain the facts. As it reads it is impossible to understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand this joint resolution is liable to a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. We could not understand why these drafts are in the State Department and why they are to be returned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that a similar bill was reported by a committee of this House and is on the Private Calendar. It is to restore a draft deposited in mistake in the Department of State.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the bill provide for filing a duplicate draft?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it require the filing of a bond? Let the last proviso be read.

The proviso was read, as follows:

Provided, That a copy of said draft, with all the indorsements and protests, if any, thereon, shall be retained by the Secretary of State.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

G. W. THOMPSON AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 101) for the relief of G. W. Thompson and others; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to consider the claims of G. W. Thompson & Co., of Pennsylvania; J. M. Atherton & Co., C. Miller & Bro., and W. S. Hume, of Kentucky; Harrison & Small, of Tennessee; C. Dodsworth, of Ohio, and N. S. Chouteau, surety for H. H. Bodemann, of Missouri, for tax paid on excess of materials, or for deficiency, and to refund the same, or such parts thereof as fall within the principles of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Stoll vs. Pepper, and in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879: Provided, That the aggregate amount allowed and paid under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $8,654.40.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make the point of order that that bill should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this bill has been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means in the last Congress and also in the present Congress, and I believe it passed the House once.

Mr. HUBBELL. It passed the Senate twice.

Mr. CARLISLE. It is a very proper bill, and I think it ought to be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon the point of order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the bill be again reported; I did not catch the exact wording of it from the reading of the Clerk, and would like to have it read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is that reported by the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Such bills have been sent to the Committee of the Whole heretofore on the point of order. If no other gentleman desires to raise an objection to the bill I will withdraw the point of order upon it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ERRETT. I want to amend the bill by adding to it the name of Henry Large, jr., and increasing the total amount to $9,121.08.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Would it be in order to have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Unless there is some explanation given of this amendment I shall make the point of order against it. It strikes me that the bill itself ought to have a full explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is too late to object now, as the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But the objection can be made to the amendment. Now here is an amendment that is proposed to be inserted without explanation or any evidence that it has been considered at all.

Mr. ERRETT. But it has been.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It strikes me that it would be a very improper system to legislate upon if we allowed such amendments as this to come in here without explanation or without favorable action from some committee.

Mr. HUBBELL. If the gentleman will let the report of the committee be read an explanation will be found in that which I am sure will be satisfactory.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to the bill, as I understand it, which is already before the House for consideration. The objection of the gentleman from Illinois applies only to the amendment.

Mr. HUBBELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Unless there has been favorable action by some committee upon that amendment, I make the point of order upon it. I also make the point of order that there is a bill of similar nature pending before the House, introduced, I believe, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself.

Mr. ERRETT. It stands precisely on the same basis as the pending bill. It has been considered and favorably reported upon by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. ERRETT. Then I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "company," in the fifth line, insert the words "and Henry Large, jr." Also at the close of the bill, strike out "$8,654.40" and insert "$9,121.08."

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Upon that amendment I make the point of order, but will reserve it to hear any explanation the gentleman may see proper to make in connection with it.

Mr. VALENTINE. This is not a general appropriation, and the point of order is not good.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am perfectly willing to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ERRETT. All of these claims provided for in this bill arise under a decision of the Supreme Court decided in the case of Soll vs. Pepper, where it was held that the assessments were illegal and should have been refunded. In this case an assessment was made against the party for the use of eight distilling tubs when only six were employed. The Supreme Court decided that the tax was illegal, being upon an excess of material; but the claim for refunding was not made until after the two years allowed by law, and therefore the money could not be paid back by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Has this amendment been considered by any committee of the House?

Mr. ERRETT. Yes; the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Did they make a favorable report upon it?

Mr. ERRETT. They did report it favorably and unanimously?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then why is it not incorporated in the bill?

Mr. ERRETT. Because this bill has not been before the Committee on Ways and Means at all. A similar bill was before the Committee on Ways and Means, on which they reported.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the amendment stands upon the same footing as the other items embodied in the bill, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to have some explanation of this matter. If I correctly heard the bill read, there is a clause in the bill which gives this $8,000 practically on account of a law passed in 1879. Now, if I understand it, the claim antedates this law, and these whisky men are coming here to take advantage of a Democratic law passed in 1879. I think the Committee on Ways and Means therefore ought to explain the facts in connection with this matter a little more fully.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague is mistaken—I was about to say as usual; but he is certainly mistaken. The claims embraced in this bill have no reference whatever to the law of 1879.

Mr. WHITE. The bill so reports. I ask the Chair to allow it to be again read.

Mr. CARLISLE. The law of 1879, which he says seems to have a connection with this matter, made provision or allowance for leakage and evaporation in warehouses. But these parties were assessed and compelled to pay tax on account of an "excess of material" used. That is to say it was found that they had used more material than ought to have been required, according to the surveys of the distilleries, to produce the given amount of spirits. The United States Supreme Court decided in the case of Stoll vs. Pepper, 7 Otto, that under the law such an assessment was illegal and that the internal-revenue authorities had no right to compel a man to pay a tax on that which had not been produced.

That is all there is in this bill. It is simply to refund to these parties the amount of tax which they were compelled to pay by a decision of the Internal-Revenue Department upon spirits which had not even been produced at the distilleries at all; and it has no connection with the statute my colleague has alluded to.

Mr. WHITE. Why then say $8,000 is to be paid out in accordance with the provisions of the statute of 1879?

Mr. CARLISLE. That is not the statute to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. WHITE. I do not refer to any particular statute.

Mr. CARLISLE. I understood the gentleman to say this was based on the provisions of some statute passed by the Democratic Congress in 1879; and I supposed he referred to the law which allowed for leakage.

Mr. WHITE. It seems it is the gentleman, my colleague, who has the leakage proposition in his mind. I said nothing about that. But I said this, and I adhere to it, that this bill asks us to give $8,000 to the distillers largely on account of a law passed in 1879. Now their claim antedates that law. I make this point: Can the distillers come in here and ask us to pay them a certain amount under a law that was enacted after that amount was due the Government?

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman is mistaken. Does he hold it to be just and correct that these men should be compelled to pay taxes on spirits that never were produced?

Mr. WHITE. Not at all.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is all there is in this bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I can explain exactly the effect of the law of 1879. The law of 1879 referred to is not the leakage act but another. It provides "that no tax shall be remitted or refunded under the provisions of this section upon any assessment made prior to January 1, 1874." That is the law of 1879 found in a proviso in section 6 of that act which was approved March 1, 1879. This only extends the provisions of that law to those cases which occurred prior to the limitations fixed by the act of 1879, and where, according to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Stoll vs. Pepper, the assessments were erroneous and illegal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ERRETT.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUBBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROBESON. I move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock this evening, the session of this evening being assigned to business of the Pensions Committees.

Mr. KLOTZ. I desire to introduce a resolution for reference. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield to the gentleman.

PAY OF CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. KLOTZ, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY—FEES OF DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

Mr. HISCOCK, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of district attorneys of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HISCOCK. I demand the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c. That to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of district attorneys of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, the sum of $60,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be some information given about this.

Mr. HISCOCK. The explanation is this: the gentleman from Indiana will recall the law as to the payment of district attorneys. They are paid from their fees to a given amount; but the fees are turned into the Treasury, and the money has to be appropriated to pay district attorneys their compensation. The accounts for the year 1882 show clearly there is this amount of deficiency which is asked for in this joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to suggest in the event of the naval appropriation bill coming back with Senate amendments that an order be entered to print the bill as amended. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest that the order for the business this evening be changed so as to allow that motion to be made. The gentleman cannot properly enter a motion to print those amendments until they are received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The chair hears none.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to add to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York that by unanimous consent it be agreed that the naval bill, when it comes here from the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not strictly in order to move to refer a bill that is not in possession of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it would be better to vary the order for to-night's session, so that that motion may be made to-night.

Mr. ROBESON. Then we would have to come here to make the motion.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from New Jersey is not here to make the motion I will be here to make it for him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New Jersey state his request again?

Mr. ROBESON. It is that if the naval appropriation bill comes from the Senate this evening with amendments the amendments be printed, and the bill and amendments referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. There is. [After a pause.] I withdraw my objection, but this is not a proper form of proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again ask if there is objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey.

There was no objection.

PUBLICATION OF THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census; which was recommitted to the Committee on Printing, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. WEST, for one week from August 1, on account of important business.
To Mr. ORTH, indefinitely, on account of ill health.

SALE OF PROPERTY IN WALLABOUT BAY.

On motion of Mr. BLISS, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 29) providing for the sale of property in Wallabout Bay to the city of Brooklyn for market purposes; and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PEELLE, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw (for C. McDougall) documents accompanying the bill to fix the rank and pay of medical purveyor second session, Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. MORSE asked and obtained leave for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the petition and papers in the case of the heirs of Davidson and others.

PETER TARGARONA.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Claims, by unanimous consent, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1593) for the relief of Peter Targarona; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY S. STONE.

Mr. BUCHANAN also, from the same committee, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 4482) for the relief of Mrs. Mary S. Stone, administratrix; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DR. WALTER REED.

Mr. BUCHANAN also, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 4194) for the relief of Dr. Walter Reed; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ROBERT RICHARDSON.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I now ask consent for the present consideration of a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] for the relief of one of the employes of the House, and reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Robert Richardson for services as messenger in the Clerk's office, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, the difference between the pay of laborer received by him and that of messenger, from the 21st day of January, 1876, to the 13th day of October, 1877, $826.29.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this reported by a committee of the House?
Mr. SPRINGER. It is a report from the committee without objection.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BUCHANAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM G. BUDLONG.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask consent that the order of the House made this afternoon, referring to the Committee on Patents Senate bill No. 375, for the relief of William G. Budlong, be vacated, and that the bill be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. RANDALL. I object; the bill is now in a safe place.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] that the House now take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. KNOTT. I would like to have a definite understanding as to what business will be transacted at this evening's session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a regular evening session for the consideration of pension business.

Mr. KNOTT. If it is to be for pensions exclusively let us understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the business set down for the evening session on Friday last was postponed until the session of to-night.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to bring forward a merely formal matter for consideration, which has been reported on for four years.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion for a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at eight o'clock p. m., the Speaker in the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate further insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and requested a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of the order made to-day in reference to the naval appropriation bill, just received from the Senate with amendments, the Chair will direct that the bill with the Senate amendments numbered be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

E. G. HOFFMAN.

Mr. PARKER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 547) granting a pension to E. G. Hoffman, late a captain of the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask that that bill be now considered.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of E. G. Hoffman, late a captain in the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month, to commence from the passage of this act, and to be in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANN LEDDY.

Mr. PARKER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 1680) granting a pension to Ann Leddy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a pension be, and the same is hereby, granted to Ann Leddy, widow of Thomas Leddy, late of Company B, Sixty-ninth New York Volunteers, United States Army, subject to the rules of the office of the Commissioner of Pensions adopted in conformity with the laws.

Mr. PRESCOTT. That is a very peculiar bill. Is there a report accompanying this bill?

Mr. PARKER. There is the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1680) granting a pension to Ann Leddy, have had the same under consideration, and report: That Ann Leddy is the widow of Thomas Leddy, who was a captain of Company B, Sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The soldier was wounded in left arm at Fredericksburgh, Virginia, December 13, 1862; also was wounded at Malvern Hill June 1, 1862, in right and left breast. The physician who attended him in his last sickness certifies—

"That he has been the family physician of the soldier since 1866, and treated him during his last illness and at the time of his death; that he was wounded in the left arm and over the heart. He always complained of the wound in the arm, which made him quite nervous; also the wound over the heart caused him much uneasiness. He died at Fernandina, Florida, October 13, 1873, the immediate cause of his death being disease of the heart and lungs, which caused nervousness and weakness and general debility."

No other evidence was presented to the Pension Office, and the widow's claim was rejected on the ground that the evidence did not show the cause of death had its origin in the service. Additional evidence was filed with the committee by affidavit of James A. Reed, who says that he is by profession a "doctor of medicine in the city of New York," having "graduated as such at University of New York in 1848, and has since been actually engaged in his profession."

"That in 1862 he was the assistant and acting surgeon in the Sixty-ninth Regiment State Volunteers of New York and was in said service at the battle of Fredericksburgh, Virginia, in the month of December of that year, when said battle occurred; that he was acquainted with Thomas Leddy, a captain in said regiment, and who participated in said battle; that said Leddy was then and there wounded by a gunshot in his left arm, and also in the breast by a fragment of a shell; that deponent then and there attended said Leddy in his professional capacity; that the wound in the arm produced partial paralysis, which continued to the time of his death in Florida about eight years since; that this difficulty, together with the wound in the breast, which caused continuous spitting of blood, was the cause of Captain Leddy's death, as deponent verily believes."

Dr. Reed was the medical attendant of Leddy for several years after he left the Army, during which time Leddy was an inmate of St. Vincent's Hospital, New York City, in which he was a patient under treatment for his wounds and the disabilities incident to them.

From these additional facts your committee are clearly of the opinion that the cause of Leddy's death did have its origin in the service, and therefore they recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMOS CHAPMAN.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 1437) granting a pension to Amos Chapman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Amos Chapman, of the Indian Territory, late a scout under the immediate command of Colonel Nelson A. Miles, United States Army, said pensioner to be allowed the same as a private soldier for the loss of a leg.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH SHEA.

Mr. CULLEN also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 703) granting a pension to Sarah Shea.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Shea, widow of William Shea, late a private in Company A, Second Regiment United States Maryland Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANN ELIZABETH RODGERS.

Mr. DAWES. I move to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1925) granting a pension to Ann Elizabeth Rodgers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann Elizabeth Rodgers, widow of the late Rear-Admiral John Rodgers, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH H. SPOTTS.

Mr. DAWES. I move to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1796) for the relief of Elizabeth H. Spotts.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth H. Spotts, widow of Rear-Admiral James H. Spotts, deceased, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from the passage of this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1796) for the relief of Elizabeth H. Spotts, having considered the same, make the following report:

Rear-Admiral James H. Spotts died in service March 9, 1882, from disease traceable to his service, after forty-five years' active and faithful service. The claimant is his widow, and is left without adequate means of support for herself and son.

Congress has by special act granted pensions at the rate of $50 per month to widows of naval officers of high rank, where the services of the deceased had been long and faithful, and where the widow's circumstances were necessitous. This case being similar to those in which such pensions have been granted, the passage of the bill is recommended with an amendment striking out all after the word "the," in line 7, and inserting the words "passage of this act."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this report, which is very brief, does not seem to give any reasons why this pension should be granted except that this lady is the widow of an officer of high rank. It is stated, to be sure, in general terms by way of conclusion that the husband's death was the result of his service in the United States

Navy; but this is a mere deduction or conclusion; there is no fact stated on which the reference is based. There is no reason given why this pension was not granted in regular course under the law by the Commissioner of Pensions. It seems to be assumed in this report as a matter of course that a pension should be granted to the widow of every officer of high rank in the Army or Navy.

I have always advocated the most liberal policy on the part of this Government in regard to pensions. I believe that the granting of a pension to the soldier or sailor himself or to his widow and orphan children, where disability or death has resulted from service in the Army or Navy, is one of the very highest duties resting upon the Government. But I have never been able to understand why in such a country as ours, where something like democratic or republican sentiment is supposed to underlie the fabric of Government, it is deemed proper to go even beyond the provisions of the general law and make such extraordinary discrimination between those who have served in the ranks and those who have been more fortunate and have held high grades of official position.

Indeed early in the war I insisted that this policy which up to that time had not been marked ought to be reversed, and that in providing for the widows of soldiers the Government should be equally considerate, whether the soldier was an officer or a private; that it was under just as much obligation morally and legally to provide for the comfortable maintenance of the widow of the private soldier as for the support of the widow of one of higher rank.

I can understand very well why, while the service in the Army or Navy continues, a discrimination should exist by reason of which the officer receives higher pay; and the democratic tendencies of our Government do not forbid this, for the officer necessarily incurs larger expenses, his time is more completely absorbed in the service, and his responsibilities are greater. But in providing for the support of the widow of a soldier, whether an officer or a private, this discrimination should not be unduly perpetuated. I have always insisted that if you would adopt a fairly reasonable schedule of compensation you might well increase the pensions of the widows of private soldiers. But on the contrary the tendency is to enlarge the pensions of the families of officers, who during their service have received ample compensation at the hands of the Government, while you make no increase in the pensions of the widows and children of private soldiers.

I concede this system of granting higher pensions almost indiscriminately to the widows of officers of high rank has come to be so interwoven that reform perhaps is now impossible; but I must say for one I should deem it much more in harmony with the character of our institutions if in the matter of pensions and providing for the widow and orphan children that great republican sentiment which pervades our institutions would apply and the Government would feel itself bound to provide for the maintenance of the widow and orphan children of a private soldier as it provides for the widow and orphan children of those occupying high positions. This is in perfect harmony with the idea that during the period of active service a difference of compensation will exist. We have taken these ideas from the British service. There it would be natural, after the period of service had expired, the government should crowd all the honors and all the considerations which flow from munificent gifts upon the head of a few; that would be in harmony with the British system of government and in harmony with their institutions; but it is not in harmony with ours. I know we cannot well discriminate when we commence this system; that having granted indifferently here to the admiral's widow, to the commodore's widow, to the major-general's widow, to the brigadier-general's widow, and so on, we cannot well stop, and therefore when a bill comes before the House providing for the widow of a meritorious officer who deserves well of his country it is taken for granted the pension is to be fixed at $50 a month, although under the law it is only $30 a month, and as a matter of course without reference at all as to whether the disability grew out of the service or not, because there is no attempt to show that the disability of this distinguished officer arose from exposure in the service.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I hope some gentleman of the committee will inform the House whether this party under the law would be entitled to any pension whatever.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; to a pension of $30 per month.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this was the unanimous report of the Senate committee and also of the House committee, and it was the unanimous report exactly because it was in the line of the precedents established by this Congress and by previous Congresses. I recollect that a pension of $50 a month was granted to the widow of Rear-Admiral Goldsborough. We have passed a bill also granting a pension of $50 a month to Mrs. Rodgers, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Rodgers. Now, Rear-Admiral Spotts served forty-five years in the service of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Receiving a handsome salary all the time.

Mr. DAWES. He served efficiently in the naval service of the United States for forty-five years. The case of his widow is exactly in line of the precedents already established by the action of this Congress.

The report of the committee states that his death was due to exposure in the service; it arose from disease contracted in the service. Here is a heroic and gallant officer who rose to the rank of rear-admiral in the Navy of the United States, who devoted the whole of his life to the service of his country, and who died of disease contracted in that service. The Senate, following the line of precedents, and this was clearly in that line, did not feel it necessary to make a voluminous report, but the report, brief as it is, states all the necessary facts in the case. It is similar to the other cases which have been passed by Congress. There was a long report in the case of Rear-Admiral Goldsborough's widow, and the House committee as well as the Senate committee agreed unanimously in favor of the pending bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The general law provides for the pension at $30 a month?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir; for a pension of $30 a month.

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been the law since 1862?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. This report, notwithstanding what my friend has said, does not state as a fact, but merely as a conclusion, that this bill is framed upon the idea already mentioned, and that is that it has been customary to give pensions of $50 a month in these cases. Will the gentleman now tell why the general law should not be changed? And let me state, before he proceeds to answer, that as late as the Fortieth Congress it was unusual to go beyond the limit prescribed by the general law, and was understood that a pension beyond $30 up to $50 should be limited to the widows of major and brigadier generals who had fallen on the field of battle. As a general classification it was agreed in regard to this matter of increased pension beyond $30 a month it should be confined to such cases, and I believe there were only eight such cases.

A MEMBER. Exceptional cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, exceptional cases; and when that eight in number was filled it was supposed that policy had there terminated, and it would be only under remarkable circumstances Congress would be justified in making any case special and going beyond $30 a month.

I come back again after stating these points to ask my friend from Ohio the question if, on a report like this, which does not detail any of the facts in the case, it is proper to grant a pension first, and in the second place to make it $50 a month, in the absence of any facts except a general statement that this officer served for forty-five years, and a conclusion or deduction that the termination of his life resulted in some way from exposure in the public service, without giving any of the information on which that deduction is based? And, further, if that is to be the rule, why does not the Committee on Invalid Pensions bring forward a bill to establish a general law by which the widow of every major or brigadier general, admiral, rear-admiral, or commodore, shall be entitled to receive the highest grade of pensions? And if in his judgment that would not be better and more just than these occasional instances of discrimination; for there is no subject on which we are called to legislate where Congress is as little justifiable in making a case special or in making discriminations as in this matter of the granting of pensions to those who have served the country, whether in the ranks or in the higher grades of the service, and none where favoritism should be less tolerated.

Mr. DAWES. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the time of the House would be profitably occupied in undertaking to answer abstract questions or general interrogatories like those the gentleman from Indiana propounds.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Before that I would like to ask a question for information. Is this bill one of that class of cases in which the Attorney-General has decided that an increase of pension entitles the beneficiary, who had been receiving a pension theretofore, to draw both pensions, or in other words a double pension? I have not seen the opinion myself, but I understand there has been a decision in the case of a person who was drawing one rate of pension under the general law and was afterward by a special act entitled to a higher rate, where it was held that both pensions were authorized; and the same ruling would apply here, it would seem, unless there is a provision in the special act prohibiting it.

Mr. BROWNE. I will answer the gentleman by saying that in the case to which he now refers the pensioner was receiving under the general law $72 a month, and Congress attempted to increase it by a special act allowing $50 a month, which was $22 less than he was receiving under the general law. By reason of this peculiar condition of affairs and the phraseology of the bill in that case the Attorney-General held that Congress intended to grant $50 in addition.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have not seen the decision, but from what the gentleman states I presume it was a decision in a special case and has no further reference.

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir, in that case, and specially applicable to it. But to meet that very question, and to remove any doubt about it, we have passed already two bills in this Congress by both the House and the Senate by which the double pension is expressly prohibited; so that there is no danger of getting into any such dilemma again upon that point.

Mr. DAWES. Before the vote is taken I want to call attention to this statement in the report:

The case being similar to those in which such pensions have been granted, the passage of the bill is recommended, with an amendment, &c.

That is comprehensive and exhaustive, and answers, I think, fully the question of my friend from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH N. ABBEY.

Mr. DAWES. I ask now to take up Senate bill No. 1264 for the relief of Joseph N. Abbey, and move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar from its further consideration and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey, late captain of Battery H, One hundred and twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Artillery, from $24 to $50 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. BROWNE. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 1264) to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey, has had the same under consideration, and begs leave to submit the following report:

All the facts shown by the papers in the Pension Office are fully and correctly set forth in the report of the Committee on Pensions, United States Senate, in words as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1264) to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey, having carefully examined the same, make the following report:

"That Joseph N. Abbey was mustered into service as a second lieutenant in Company G, One hundred and twelfth Pennsylvania Volunteers, January 8, 1862, and was promoted to the rank of Captain November 25, 1862. The Adjutant-General's Office files in evidence a surgeon's certificate, dated 'Chapel Springs Hospital, Fort Saratoga, D. C., March 1, 1864,' recommending said Abbey for a leave of absence, in which the surgeon says:

"He has carefully and repeatedly examined this officer during the last year, and finds that he has had frequent attacks of malarial fever, complicated with pleuritic and neuralgic pain. He is seldom free from pain from the latter complaints, and, owing to frequent attacks of the former, their combined influence has unlit him for duty much of the time. The post at which his battery is serving is especially tainted with malaria, and, in my opinion, unless he is permanently removed from it he will never recover."

On this certificate said Abbey was allowed a sick leave. The return for May, 1864, reports him "absent, sick at Washington, District of Columbia, since May 27, 1864." On November 2, 1864, he was honorably discharged on account of physical disability. A transcript from the records of the Surgeon-General's Office reports:

"Captain Abbey, Company K, One hundred and twelfth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was treated at P. H., Fort Saratoga, District of Columbia, as follows: February 23, 1863, for furunculosis; March 25 to 30, 1863, for diarrhea; June 17, 1863, for dysentery and diarrhea; July 1 to 7, 1863, for dysentery; September 23, 1863, for intermittent fever; October 1 to 9, 1863, for typho-malarial fever; November 6 to 21, 1863, (when furloughed for thirty days,) for quartan intermittent fever and pleurodynia; and January 25, 1864, for rheumatism. He was admitted to treatment by the attendant surgeon of volunteer officers at Washington, District of Columbia, May 23, 1864, for acute dysentery, and detailed on C. M. June 10."

John G. Moore, in an affidavit filed December 30, 1879, states that he has known claimant since 1859, and knows that at the time of enlistment he was a sound man; that he visited said Abbey when he was sick at Camp Lincoln, Virginia, and that during the entire period intervening from date of discharge to the present time he has been suffering with disease of the liver and spleen, and has not been able to perform manual labor.

Captain R. M. Gomedie, in an affidavit, swears that claimant was sound at time of enlistment, and contracted intermittent fever at Fort Lincoln, Virginia, April 1, 1863; that during every fall and spring while he remained in the service he suffered from like attacks of said fever, and was subsequently discharged on account of same.

Mrs. Hannah Turner and Henry C. Ford make affidavit that at different intervals during the whole period intervening between the spring of 1865 and fall of 1876 the said Abbey received more or less treatment (medical) from Dr. William M. Tanner, now deceased, for enlarged liver and spleen, as a result of malarial fever contracted in the Army.

Dr. Townsend, who took medical charge of claimant in January, 1877, makes an affidavit that he treated claimant for enlarged liver and spleen until October 15, 1877, and that said Abbey was not able to perform labor during that time.

Dr. William A. Hammond, in a statement dated November 25, 1879, says claimant has been under his charge for the past six months for locomotor ataxia, &c. Upon this and other medical testimony the said Abbey was pensioned January 23, 1880, at the rate of $15 per month, to date from November 3, 1864, for effects of malarial poisoning. This pension was afterward increased to $24 per month, to date from November 26, 1879, which pension the said Abbey now receives. There is in evidence an affidavit made by said J. N. Abbey the 26th of November, 1881, in which he says that—

"He has for the past six and one-half years been so totally disabled that he was unable to perform any manual labor; and, moreover, his physical condition has, during that time, been such that he was and is compelled to keep a body servant to render him personal aid and attendance."

An affidavit in evidence, made by Dr. Hamilton, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, March 7, 1882, states:

"I have known Captain Joseph N. Abbey for the past three years, during which time he has required my constant attention as medical adviser, with the exception of a period of three months, which was spent under the care of another practitioner. Upon taking charge of the case I made a thorough examination, with the following result: Skin, pulse, and temperature normal; violent and stupefying pains in the occiput, accompanied with severe attacks of vertigo, faintness, and extreme prostration; almost daily there occurred violent spasmodic action of the throat and neck, with a sense of impending suffocation; sound of heart, normal, but the organ very irritable; severe attacks of neuralgia of the chest and of the stomach.

"There was considerable enlargement of the spleen, with constant pain; also enlargement of the liver, with prostration of its functions; constipation and great weakness, and numbness in the lower extremities. The symptoms above enumerated at times became aggravated to such a degree that for two or three consecutive days at a time he was confined to his bed, but owing to the force of his indomitable will almost every day he has been conveyed to his office, frequently in a condition of the most intense agony. During the time in which he has been under my care I have been able to relieve the attacks at intervals, but the general condition of prostration and suffering still continues. The patient at present requires the care and watchfulness of a competent nurse. Knowing that his means were limited, I have not heretofore insisted upon the procuring of such a person, but now deem it of the most paramount importance. The case of Captain Abbey is one that commends itself to the favorable consideration of those whose duty it is to provide for the soldiers who have lost their health in battling for the welfare of their country. The cause of the present fearful suffering of Captain Abbey is exposure to malarial influences while in the service of the United States."

Dr. Samuel Cleveland makes affidavit that he has treated Joseph N. Abbey, and—

"Found enlargement of liver and spleen, which we are accustomed to recognize as malarial; profound disturbances of nervous centers; cerebral—involving pains of almost every kind and parietic conditions, transitory, but following in rapid succession; cardiac—involving true angina and solar, creating gastric inability."

Dr. Cleveland further says:

"That the condition of Joseph N. Abbey, while under his treatment, rendered him wholly unfit for any labor from a physical stand-point, though his will has carried him by intervals through necessary work, greatly to his physical detriment."

William C. Ewing makes an affidavit to Abbey's condition, and says:

"Ever since I became familiar with his every-day life I declare that I have not known him to enjoy an hour's release from pain or disability during that period. I also declare that since my personal acquaintance with him he has not been in a condition to perform any manual labor, but he has had to depend entirely for what he could earn upon brain work."

There are on file numerous other important affidavits to the effect that he was sound physically at the time of his enlistment, that he is now unable to perform physical labor, and has in constant attendance upon him a nurse, and in addition to this has the extraordinary expense of being conveyed to and from the house in a carriage, &c.

The ground of rejection at the Pension Office was the doctor's inability to determine whether the disability would be permanent or was of such a character as to bring him under the general law. The medical record covers a period of twenty years, and shows conclusively that the disability is a continuous one, and the medical affidavits filed since the rejection at the Pension Office show that his infirmities are increasing, and undoubtedly will soon place him in a condition of the most complete helplessness.

Now, judging from the long medical record, the suffering of the claimant, and the fact that he is so much worse to-day than he was twenty years ago, and now has to employ the services of a constant attendant, are pretty conclusive proofs as to the permanency of his disease.

Your committee regard this case as one of extreme disability and suffering, and therefore recommend the passage of Senate bill 1264, with the following amendment: In line seven, immediately preceding the word "dollars," strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

Your committee likewise ask that the bill pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.
Mr. ALDRICH. Is not the question first on the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The amendment was made in the Senate before the bill came to the House.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SARAH HAYNE.

Mr. RAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 70) granting a pension to Sarah Hayne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Hayne, widow of Michael Hayne, who was a seaman on board the United States ships Ontario, Allegheny, and Brandywine, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $16 per month, to date from the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ERASTUS CRIPPEN.

Mr. RAY also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 340) granting a pension to Erastus Crippen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Erastus Crippen, late fourth sergeant of Company G, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; said pension to commence from the date his name was dropped from the pension-roll.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RAY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JANE S. TAPLIN.

* Mr. RICE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. No. 1170) granting a pension to Jane S. Taplin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jane S. Taplin, mother of Osman B. Taplin, late a private in Company E, Second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, said pension to begin from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 1170) granting a pension to Jane S. Taplin, has had the same under consideration and begs leave to submit the following report:

The Committee on Pensions of the Senate have made the following report:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1170) granting a pension to Jane S. Taplin, have examined the same, and report the same favorably and recommend its passage."

"The claim is made by Jane S. Taplin, mother of Osman B. Taplin, late a private in Company E, Second Wisconsin Volunteers, upon the ground that she was dependent on her son, who died in the service, for support. The Pension Office reject the claim upon the ground that such dependence at the time of the death of the soldier is not sufficiently proved; but additional evidence has been filed before us, and we believe the fact of dependence is fairly made out, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill, so amended as to make the commencement of pension to date with the passage of the act."

Upon examination of the original evidence as well as that filed by the claimant before Congress this committee concur in the conclusions reached by the Senate committee, and ask that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARY ULLERY.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 5496) granting a pension to Mary Ullery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Ullery, mother of Daniel Ullery, who was drowned while in the United States service as a member of Company D, Twelfth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISAIAH ALTENBURG.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1862) granting a pension to Isaiah Altenburg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Isaiah Altenburg, late a private Company G, Seventh Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DANIEL M. MORLEY.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. No. 1860) granting a pension to Daniel M. Morley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel M. Morley, late a private in Company E, Twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CANNON, ETC.

Mr. KETCHAM. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6593) donating four condemned cannon and four cannon-balls for the soldiers' burial lot in the Hudson (New York) Cemetery, and that it be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to deliver to the Robert D. Lathrop Post No. 138 of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four large cast-iron cannon-balls, to be placed by said post in the soldiers' burial lot in the Hudson (New York) Cemetery.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill, as follows:

"Also to the Soldiers' Monument Association of the city of Utica, New York, four condemned iron cannons, 24 or 32 pounders and spherical shot, for the use and adornment of the soldiers' monument in the city of Utica, State of New York."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after the amendment just adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, to turn over to Post No. 208, Grand Army of the Republic, at New Brighton, Pennsylvania, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls for monumental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I move to further amend the bill by adding to it the following:

Also, two condemned cast-iron cannon, with four iron cannon-balls, to the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Georgetown, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to amend by adding:

Also, four condemned cannon to Dahlgren Post, Grand Army of the Republic, New York City, for monumental purposes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Has that been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. COX, of New York. It is as good as any report; it is the best post in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. KLOTZ. While the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] is preparing his amendment I move to amend the bill by adding to it the following:

Also, four condemned cannon and four cannon-balls to the White Haven Soldiers' Monument Association of White Haven, Luzerne County, Pennsylvania.

Also, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls to Goodrich Post No. 22 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Danville, Pennsylvania, for the adornment of a soldiers' burial lot owned by said post in the said town of Danville, Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I move to further amend by adding the following:

Also, four condemned cannon and twelve cannon-balls to Edwin M. Stanton Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Steubenville, Ohio, for monumental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to amend by adding the following:

Also, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls to Dahlgren Post, Grand Army of the Republic, New York City, for monumental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to further amend by adding the following:

Also, four condemned cast-iron cannon and twelve cannon-balls to Englewood Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Cook County, Illinois, for monumental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to further amend the bill by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That if there be no condemned cast-iron cannon to fill the requirements of this act, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to have a sufficient number of cannon manufactured and condemned for that purpose.

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes this amendment is offered in pleasantry.

Mr. BROWNE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KETCHAM. I call the previous question on the bill as amended. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KETCHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move to amend the title of the bill by adding the words "and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6111) granting condemned cannon to Nelson Post No. 194 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Newport, Kentucky.

There being no objection, the bill was brought before the House and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to donate one condemned 32-pounder columbiad and four 12-pounder brass Napoleon cannon to Nelson Post No. 194 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Newport, Kentucky, to be used for monumental purposes.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the following amendment:

Strike out the words "one condemned 32-pounder columbiad and four 12-pounder brass Napoleon" and insert in lieu thereof "four condemned cast-iron."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to further amend the bill by adding the following:

Also, to donate to the Monumental Association of Pickaway County, Ohio, five condemned cast-iron cannon and five cannon-balls.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARLISLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the title to correspond with the amendment to the bill.

The amendment of the title was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar in pursuance of the special order for this evening's session.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. BRIGGS in the chair.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that we begin the consideration of pension bills with House bill No. 6425, on page 50 of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that order of proceeding will be adopted.

There was no objection.

ROBERT HENNE.

The committee accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6425) to increase the pension of Robert Henne, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions with an amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to increase the pension of Robert Henne, late first lieutenant of Company I, Twelfth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, who lost a leg at Pea Ridge, leaving only three inches of a stump, and who previous to enlistment lost his left arm, and is now totally helpless and dependent, from $25 to $50 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out "$50" and insert in lieu thereof "$40," before the words "per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ROBERT J. GILLESPIE.

The next pension bill was the bill (H. R. No. 318) granting a pension to Robert J. Gillespie.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert J. Gillespie, late a private in Company F, Ninety-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY E. MATTHEWS.

The next pension bill was the bill (S. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mary E. Matthews.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Matthews, widow of Edward S. Matthews, late a surgeon in the United States Navy, having the rank of lieutenant-commander.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

KATE QUILLIGAN.

The next pension bill was the bill (H. R. No. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Kate Quilligan, daughter of Patrick Quilligan, late of Company B, Fourth United States Cavalry, and to pay her a pension, through her legally constituted guardian, at the rate of $8 per month, during the insanity of said Kate Quilligan.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CAROLINE FRENCH.

The next pension bill was the bill (S. No. 2089) granting a pension to Caroline French.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline French, widow of Brevet Major-General William H. French, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BROWNE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BRIGGS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration sundry pension bills, had directed him to report back the same with a favorable recommendation.

PENSION BILLS PASSED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6425) to increase the pension of Robert Henne (reported from the Committee of the Whole House with an amendment) was taken up, the amendment to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty" concurred in, the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

House bills of the following titles reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment were taken up, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 318) granting a pension to Robert J. Gillespie; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan.

Senate bills of the following titles reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment were taken up, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mary E. Matthews; and A bill (S. No. 2089) granting a pension to Caroline French.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to reconsider the several votes by which bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES MORELAND.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement and a motion succeeding it. If there be objection, I will withdraw my proposition, as I know a single objection will defeat it at this time. A man living in Jackson county, Tennessee, personally known to me, enlisted in the Mexican war. He went out with a fine company, but sixteen of whom returned. All of those are since dead, except himself and two comrades, who swear to the facts in support of his application for a pension. This application was made on account of sunstroke and consequent blindness in one eye and partial loss of sight in the other. The application was rejected at the Pension Office. He could not furnish evidence of commissioned officers in support of his claim. But parties who do know the facts, his two remaining comrades, have testified to them. I move that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1649) granting a pension to James Moreland and that it be now put on its passage.

Mr. Speaker, before my motion is put to the House, I will trespass upon the time of the House long enough to say that I trust there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill. These poor Mexican veterans have already been too long neglected. I think they all ought to be pensioned by the general law, and until that is done we should not refuse to hear the complaints of those who were disabled in that honorable service. Over burning sands and beneath a scorching sun they went to that distant and pestilential clime to battle for their country. Many have died, and one by one the ranks of the survivors are being thinned. I know Mr. Moreland to be a good, true, and poor man. Dr. A. M. Fergusson, who testifies in his behalf, is as worthy and veracious a man as any country can boast of. Let us do justice, so long delayed, to this Mexican soldier.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Has this bill been considered by any committee of the House?

Mr. McMILLIN. It was considered by the Committee on Pensions in the last Congress and favorably reported. I have the report here, and will have it read if it be desired. At this session, as I am informed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] who is on the Pension Committee, there has not been a quorum of the committee for probably two months or more, and hence it has been impossible to get reports from the committee. I now move the passage of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That James Moreland, of Jackson County, Tennessee, late a private in Company K, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry in the Mexican war, whose health was impaired in said war, be, and he is hereby, allowed a pension of $8 a month during his natural life; and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to cause his name to be placed on the pension-roll, subject to the rules and regulations now in force in the granting of pensions to invalids of said war.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move to amend by striking out at the end of the bill the words "rules and regulations now in force in the granting of pensions to invalids of said war," and inserting "provisions and limitations of the pension laws." My object in offering this amendment is that the rate may be fixed at the Pension Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I move to amend by adding to the bill the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. E. KILBER.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to ask the courtesy of the House. In December last I introduced a bill to increase the pension of a soldier named J. E. Kilber, which was considered and favorably reported upon by a sub-committee of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, composed of the chairman, [Mr. BROWNE,] the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. LATHAM,] and the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. McMILLIN.] I desire that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of this case, and that the bill be put on its passage.

I know this soldier personally. He is getting a pension of only $18 a month for an injury to the left arm, the bone of which was so much shattered that it was taken out from the elbow nearly to the shoulder, so that the arm is perfectly useless. The evidence shows that he should be receiving a pension of $24 a month instead of $18.

Mr. McMILLIN. In addition to what the gentleman from Michigan has stated, I will say that the report of the sub-committee was read on the last day when the committee met; but we were unable on account of the close of the session being so near to obtain a quorum. The evidence shows that this man's disability is greater than it would be if his arm were amputated above the elbow, but according to the provisions of existing law he cannot be pensioned at the rate now proposed because of his arm not being amputated. It dangles at his side and he has to lift it with the other hand when he wants to move it. This bill provides that he be placed on the pension-roll at the same rate that the general law allows to one whose arm is off above the elbow.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 783) granting a pension to J. E. Kilber.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of J. E. Kilber, at the rate of $24 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The report can be read if any gentleman deems it necessary.

Mr. PRESCOTT. There should be an amendment providing that this is in lieu of the present pension.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Certainly, that amendment can be made.

Mr. McMILLIN. I should have recommended that but for the fact, as the chairman will recollect, we passed a general provision covering all such cases.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON TO LOGANSFORT, ETC.

Mr. DE MOTTE. I move, by unanimous consent, that the bill (H. R. No. 6265) donating cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana, be taken from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and put on its passage at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the House for consideration.

Mr. DE MOTTE. The Committee on Military Affairs moved to insert "cast-iron" after "condemned," and after "cannon" to insert the words "to be used for monumental purposes."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to furnish two condemned cast-iron cannon and two cannon-balls to Post No. 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana, to be used for monumental purposes.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to add the following:

Also to give to the post of the Grand Army of the Republic at Winchester, Indiana, four condemned cast-iron cannon, for ornamenting the soldiers' burial lot in Fountain Park Cemetery, at that place.

Mr. COX, of New York. As I am somewhat interested, I should like to know where these gentlemen will find the condemned cannon which are donated for these various purposes?

Mr. BROWNE. We will find them at the same place the gentleman will find his. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. That is what I want to know so I can find mine. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE. If the gentleman will accompany me when I go for mine perhaps he will find his.

Mr. COX, of New York. I should be happy to do so.

Mr. BROWNE's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved the following amendment:

Also, four condemned cast-iron cannon and four cannon-balls to Eugene A. Rawson Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Fremont, Ohio, for monumental purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PRESCOTT moved to amend the title by inserting the words "and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DE MOTTE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. PRESCOTT, (at nine o'clock and nineteen minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorial and petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOWMAN: The petition of Patrick Burns, of Lynn, Massachusetts, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: The petition of Mary J. Young, of Floyd County, Georgia, for relief—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COVINGTON: The petition of R. T. Bryan, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. S. S. COX: Memorial of S. S. COX as to the treatment of Hebrews in Russia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DEZENDORF: The petition of Max Luchs, of the District of Columbia, for compensation for damages sustained by reason of change in grade on a certain square in Washington, District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of Benjamin S. Ewell and others, praying that a bounty be granted to the heirs of Thomas Ewell, who fell in battle at Cerro Gordo, Mexico—to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. MORSE: The petition of Joshua G. Nickerson and others, for the passage of the French spoliation-claims bill—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of Samuel W. Byrd and others, praying that James Hughes may be restored to the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 1, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. HALE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 250) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue 2 per cent. bonds or certificates in exchange for bonds bearing a higher rate of interest, reported it adversely.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 191) for the relief of Frances H. Plummer, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 374) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Hull, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1974) fixing the pay of hospital stewards of the first class in the United States Army, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1718) for the relief of Edwin T. Pilkenton, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6405) to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by Ann C. Carroll and Maria C. Fitzhugh, executrices of the estate of the late Daniel Carroll, deceased, by the regrading of the streets around square numbered 736 in the city of Washington, reported it with an amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5018) granting a pension to Elizabeth F. Rice, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JACKSON. I present the views of the minority of the Committee on Pensions on the bill (H. R. No. 1011) granting an increase of pension to Daniel G. George. The bill has already been reported and is on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WILLIAMSPORT.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court, post-office, and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MASTER ARMORER AT SPRINGFIELD.

Mr. LOGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts, to report it with an amendment. It will take but a moment to act on the bill. It is a House bill, and there is a little amendment to it, so that it will have to go back to the House. I should be very glad to have the bill acted on now. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to ask the Senator whether it changes the compensation of that particular person? Does it give him a greater compensation?

Mr. LOGAN. It does. I will explain it after the bill is taken up. By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 5, after the word "him," to insert the words "from and after the passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

That in addition to the compensation now allowed and paid to the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts, there shall be paid to him from and after the passage of this act further compensation at the rate of $1,000 per annum during such time as he shall perform the duties of master machinist at said armory in addition to those of master armorer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I would like to know how much it increases the salary? It is something very unusual to pass a bill increasing the salary of a particular person. I should like to know how much it increases the salary and what will be the entire compensation.

Mr. LOGAN. It increases the pay of the armorer $1,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. From what sum?

Mr. LOGAN. From $1,500 to $2,500.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Fifteen hundred dollars has been heretofore paid him?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is nearly double.

Mr. LOGAN. I will explain it to the Senator. The matter was up before the Committee on Appropriations. He will remember it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I remember the circumstance, and that is why I make the inquiry.

Mr. LOGAN. The master armorer receives $1,500. He now acts as master machinist, and on the recommendation of the Chief of the Ordnance Bureau it is reported to give him $1,000 as master machinist besides that as long as he acts as master machinist. When he does not he will not receive the additional allowance. That is the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In other words, he performs double service and is to receive double pay.

Mr. LOGAN. That is it exactly.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ANNUAL MUSTER AT TOPEKA.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution, and after the title of it is read I shall ask unanimous consent that it be now considered.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply tents to the annual muster of the State militia of Kansas; and it was read twice by its title.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. BAYARD. I present a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund. I ask that it may be read, and then I will state the condition of the measure.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 1052 entitled "An act in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

T. F. BAYARD,
 W. WINDOM,
 JOHN SHERMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. G. WILLIAMS,
 W. W. RICE,
 P. V. DEUSTER.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed in making this report also to apprise the Senate of the propositions submitted to the Senate conferees by the committee on the part of the House.

The bill as it came from the House proposed "to pay to the Government of Japan the sum of $1,516,364, in bonds now under the control of the Department of State and known and designated in the accounts and reports of said Department as the Japanese indemnity fund." The Senate amended that by striking out the sum mentioned and inserting in lieu thereof "$785,000.87, in legal coin, through the United States minister to Japan."

The difference between the Senate and the House was the interest, and the compounding of that interest, upon bonds of the United States which had been purchased by the Secretary of State with the fund of $785,000 which the United States had received in installments in the year 1864. The difference, as the Senate will remember, was as to the allowance of interest.

The House conferees made a proposition to the Senate conferees, which the latter did not feel themselves warranted, as representing the sense of a majority of the Senate, to accept, but which nevertheless they report to the Senate, because it is probable that the action of the House will soon present to us an opportunity to vote upon their proposition in the shape of a concurrence by the House in the Senate amendment with an amendment; and that will be to pay at the rate of 5 per cent. interest upon the several installments from the time they were received until the passage of this act, and to pay that out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Another feature of difference was, the House proposed to pay by way of prize-money to the crews of the United States vessels engaged in the expedition against certain Japanese ports in the inland sea, $250,000, but to subtract that sum from the amount so ordered to be paid to Japan. The Senate proposed to recognize the services of the officers and crews of those United States vessels in the amount of $140,000, but not to subtract that from the principal sum to be paid to Japan, but to pay it out of the general balance in the Treasury.

I do not know that this is the time for the Senate to take any further action beyond receiving the report of the committee. I make this report of the committee of conference, because it now must go to the House, accompanied by the papers, and there, the conferees of the Senate are informed, an amendment will probably be proposed and sent to the Senate to the effect that I have stated. So that the sense of the Senate may be tested upon the proposition to pay back the $785,000, which was the sum total of the money received by the United States from Japan, together with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. up to the time of the passage of this act.

I was not connected with either of the committees that examined and reported upon this subject. I took some part in the discussion because I believed there was a proposition violative of the rule adopted, certainly by the executive branch of this Government, from the foundation of the Government in respect to the payment of interest; but since I have been assigned to duty upon this committee of conference I have made other and fuller examinations of the facts out of which the payment of this money by Japan to the United States grew, and I should like to make a short statement in order to lay before the Senate what I think is the true ground to guide us in this matter.

The sum of $3,000,000 was paid by Japan under treaty stipulation to the four powers of Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, and the United States. The payment of that money was not sought for or pressed by the American envoy. It was originally suggested that the sum of $2,000,000 was ample, but upon the suggestion of the French envoy the amount was increased to $3,000,000. According to the language of the treaty of 1864, between Japan and the United States, it is expressly stated that the consideration for the payment of that money by Japan to the United States was the damages resulting to the interests of the treaty powers, as well as the expenses occasioned by the naval expedition into the inner sea of Japan and the suppression of the rebellion then existing in that country.

The Senate will observe this sum was not a debt; that it never constituted a debt from the United States to Japan. It was paid, according to the language of the treaty, to compensate for damages resulting to the interests of the treaty powers and for the expense of the naval expedition undertaken in the interest of Japan by the same treaty powers.

The same treaty expressly declared in a subsequent article that the obtaining of this money was not the object of the United States, but that the promotion of their commercial relations with Japan was the object of the United States, and the object for which the expedition by United States ships was undertaken, to strengthen our commercial and friendly relations with that government.

That being the object of that expedition as recited in that treaty, an option was reserved to the Tycoon to pay the money by installments if he pleased, or in lieu of such payment to cause the port of Simonoseki and another port in the inland sea to be opened to commercial intercourse with the United States.

The Tycoon, for reasons of his own, perhaps of a political nature growing out of the disordered condition of his own country, paid the money, because he could not open the ports; he could not avail himself of the alternative at that time. Therefore under the treaty of 1864 the money was paid, but the port of Simonoseki, or another port in the inland sea, was not opened to commerce.

So things stood, the money being paid to the United States and kept by us. It may be said that we ought not to have employed it as was done, but that has nothing to do with Japan, for the irregularities of United States officials in relation to our own laws is something with which foreign nations have nothing whatever to do. The matter so stood under the option of the Tycoon to pay the money or open the port, and so remained until a second treaty was made in 1878, (promulgated in the month of April, 1879.) Then, and then for the first time, the opening of the port of Simonoseki was agreed upon by the Japanese Government, and the port was then accordingly opened.

So I submit to the Senate, in considering this transaction, the two treaties, that of 1864 and that of 1878, confirmed in 1879, must be treated as one instrument and be construed together in order to ascertain the true intent of the parties. If there was an option to pay the money or open the port vested in the Tycoon, it was terminable at his pleasure and will; and as he did not, no matter from what cause, finally exercise this option by opening the port in 1879, most assuredly there could be no claim in law or equity for interest upon the fund he at first had elected under the treaty to pay in lieu of opening the port until the port was finally opened. The facts, I think, cannot be gainsaid, and the logical results of those facts I do not think can be questioned.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator is making a statement directly against the language of the treaty.

Mr. BAYARD. I will ask the Senator to state what he believes to be the fact.

Mr. MORGAN. I read from the treaty.

Mr. BAYARD. Which treaty?

Mr. MORGAN. I read from the convention of October, 1864:

3. Inasmuch as the receipt of money has never been the object of the said powers, but the establishment of better relations with Japan, and the desire to place these on a more satisfactory and mutually advantageous footing is still the leading object in view; therefore, if his majesty the Tycoon wishes to offer, in lieu of payment of the sum claimed, and as a material compensation for loss and injuries sustained, the opening of Simonoseki, or some other eligible port in the inland sea, it shall be at the option of the said foreign governments to accept the same, or insist on the payment of the indemnity in money, under the conditions above stipulated.

The Senator said it was at the option of the government of the Tycoon.

Mr. BAYARD. I do, and I repeat it. I will read the language of the treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. I have just read it.

Mr. BAYARD. But let me read it as it stands in the treaty before me. I have no doubt the Senator has read it, but I propose to read it with my own emphasis. I read from the convention:

3. Inasmuch as the receipt of money has never been the object of the said powers, but the establishment of better relations with Japan, and the desire to place these on a more satisfactory and mutually advantageous footing is still the leading object in view; therefore, if his majesty the Tycoon wishes to offer, in lieu of payment of the sum claimed, and as a material compensation for loss and injuries sustained, the opening of Simonoseki—

Is not that giving the Tycoon the option to pay the money as a compensation or to open the port as he sees fit? I do not say that a like option was not also given to the foreign governments. I did not say that. I said an option was given to the Tycoon, and so it was. Therefore, I was not in error in the slightest degree in my statement. I think in this international question between the Government of Japan and that of the United States the two treaties, that of 1864 and that of 1878, both bearing upon the same subject, are to be construed together to form a conjoint history of this transaction and constitute the law of its decision.

Grant that under the treaty of 1864 the Tycoon could open the port or pay the money; grant that there was an option reserved to the powers to accept the money or accept the opening of the port, coupled with the statement that the powers did not want the money, and that was not their object; then the payment of the money in 1864 by the Tycoon and his failure to open this port for fifteen years thereafter, not until the month of April, 1879. So that this being an option terminable by the Tycoon of Japan, he could have terminated it by opening the port of Simonoseki, and when the port was opened then the money was to be returned at the option of the United States, who as was recited in the treaty had the promotion of commercial intercourse with Japan, and not the reception of her money as their real object.

Both Houses agree, and I believe every man in each House agrees, that as the port has at last been opened the money ought to be repaid. The question is whose money was it pending all that time. If the United States were withholding from the Government of Japan a debt justly due, then there may be shown in equity a reason for charging interest upon it from the time it was received until the time of repayment; but if it was a payment by Japan, and a voluntary payment, under treaty stipulation to the United States in lieu of the granting of certain commercial privileges, then it stands to reason that until the commercial advantages were bestowed upon the United States there could be no claim for the recall of the money, much less with interest superadded.

But there is another view that has been stated. In the abundant briefs which have been filed and freely distributed in this case by those concerned professionally in connection with this money, the term "exaction" has been constantly used, and we are told that the United States has dealt unworthily by a feebleness, and that we "exacted" money from a weaker nation which it is implied or charged we would not have exacted from a stronger nation.

I can only say, first, that the increased sum was proposed by one of the foreign powers, and I have never heard that any portion of the fund paid to them has been yet returned to Japan. I do not propose to square our conduct by theirs, but to be a law unto ourselves governed by self-respect and the immutable laws of justice and equity.

But was it an exaction? To what logical result is the Senate led if you admit that this money was exacted or extorted from this weaker power? It is that your treaty of 1864 was a dishonorable act; it is that the Secretary of State in receiving the sum of $785,000 from Japan stained his hands; it is that the American envoy acted as a bully, and that the American people did that which they should be ashamed of and should be punished for.

I will agree if the reception of this money in 1864 can be shown to have been such an act we ought to hide our faces in the dust, and pay back interest and principal with apologies for our ever having taken this money into our hands. Such would be the simple logic of admitting that sum of money was unfairly, dishonorably, and unjustly extorted or exacted from a weaker power and because it was weak; but is this the case?

Mr. MORGAN. Did the Committee on Foreign Relations put it on any such ground as that?

Mr. BAYARD. I did not mention the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I had not the slightest reference to any member of this body or of the other House. I did speak, however, of the abundant briefs printed and furnished to every member of the Senate which have used this term "exaction" in respect to this fund paid by Japan to the United States in 1864.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to ask the Senator, with his permission, a question at that point. Does not his argument apply really as much to the return of the principal as to the House bill and to the payment of 5 per cent. interest? Does not the payment of $785,000 carry with it the same imputation that the payment of the larger sum does?

Mr. BAYARD. No; it carries with it not the slightest imputation, because if I am right that this transaction is to be interpreted by the light of the two treaties of 1864 and 1878, which I consider honorable to both the parties who made them—they were treaties for commercial alliance and friendship; I hold there is no disgrace to either party in entering into them, and there can be none in carrying them out, to their uttermost letter; and by the light of those treaties I say that the repayment of that money was to be upon the consideration of the opening of the port of Simonoseki; and that being opened, the consideration having been accomplished, it is our duty to pay the money back because we have at least received what was agreed upon as an alternative for the payment of the money. I think that is clear enough. But if it be true, to use the language of the briefs which have been sent to me and which have been freely furnished to every member of the Senate, that this was an exaction or an extortion by the United States, then you have a very different transaction from that which I say the history of the events discloses.

Was or was not our treaty of 1864 with Japan an honorable treaty, alike honorable to both parties? Was not the treaty of 1878 equally honorable to both parties? And ought we not to settle the payment of this money upon the basis of the terms and stipulations of those two treaties? If you accept that which I say is the ground on which to place this case the claim of interest on this fund from the time of its payment by Japan in 1864 is gone, cannot be sustained except upon the ground that it is the merest, sheerest gratuity, and I will not say to whom that gratuity will actually be paid, but I do not believe much of it will ever reach the treasury of the Government of Japan.

We have been invoked also to consider that we are a great and strong people, numbering fifty million, priding and pluming ourselves upon our advance in Christianity, power, and civilization, that we are to treat Japan with magnanimity. Why, Mr. President, that is not respectful or complimentary to the Government of Japan. I propose to treat Japan precisely as I would treat Great Britain or France. It seems to me that as between nations there is no inequality; they are equally sovereign and treat with each other as equals—irrespective of their population and power.

Japan is an equal and friendly nation, a member of the great family of nations, and in dealing with her we deal precisely as we would with any other member of that family. We are neither to bestow gratuities nor are we to withhold justice. And so viewing this question and taking these treaty stipulations, and all the facts, I aver that the Government of the United States stands upon its treaties with Japan bound to carry them out in good faith and fairness with neither fear nor favor. The port of Simonoseki has been opened since 1879. The sum of money that was the alternative was long before received by us; it is our duty to hand back the money because we have received the commercial advantage of the opening of the port. The payment of the money is under one treaty, the opening of the port is under another treaty.

The two treaties combined contain the history of the transaction, and the measure of duty of the United States Government is defined by those treaty stipulations. If any man now can show me or show the Senate that there is an implied obligation, an equitable obligation, much less a legal obligation, superadded to the repayment of the corpus of this fund, he will show me something that I have not upon careful examination been able to find out.

I have been stimulated, Mr. President, to discover what was the true line of duty in this case by the suggestion so freely made in debate that the action of the Senate in withholding interest upon this fund tarnished the honor of the country. I profess myself, sir, as sensitive upon that subject as any man. No call can be made that will stir me to greater diligence or to greater effort than the suggestion that the honor of the United States is at stake, and therefore it is that I have stated this question, and I have gone into the history of these transactions, and I have come most conclusively to the result that we are acting under treaty stipulations, and that those stipulations define alike our rights, our obligations, and our duties, and they are not to have superadditions by suggestions that we are dealing with an object of charity, and not with a nation our equal before the law.

A word as to the rule of the payment of interest by the Government. I here declare in the presence of the Senate without fear of contradiction that it has been the rule of this Government never to pay interest. The opinions of every Attorney-General will disclose the fact that the rule is that the Government does not pay interest and one of the provisions of this very bill contains proof that such is the rule. And can it be that we are under an obligation to a foreign government stronger than to our own citizens? And why is it that it is proposed in one breath and in the same bill to pay interest to the Japanese Government and deny it to the officers and crews of our own ships who risked their lives when we come to pay prize-money which was earned in the same transactions at the very time that this fund was paid to us? Why is it that after some seventy years the owners of the brig General Armstrong were paid the principal and the principal only of the property they lost in the public service, and that it was shown was so peculiarly beneficial to the Government, by delaying the arrival of the British fleet at the mouth of the Mississippi River in 1815? Why is it that we stand in regard to the French spoliation claims for whose relinquishment to the French Government the Treasury of the United States received the consideration eighty years ago? Has any man ever proposed to pay interest upon these claims to our own citizens?

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator ought to remind the public, as his word goes much further than the Senate Chamber, that there are a great many men to whom we cannot pay the principal of the French spoliation claims.

Mr. BAYARD. All these cases go to show that we have a measure of duty not to be lowered, not to be raised from favor or from fear, but to be executed as a proud and self-respecting nation ought to execute its obligations, self-imposed by treaty, and that is what in the present case I think should be done, and if I am right—and I do not think any fact I have stated will be questioned, I am speaking now of the historical facts—the measure of our duty will be found in the contents of these two treaties; and the reason why we pay back $785,000 is the granting to us of the commercial privileges which were the alternative for the payment of the money. That is why we pay it back. If that be so, all talk of interest is, in my opinion, without foundation. If it is ever paid it will be a mere gratuity, not much of which, I fear, will ever reach the treasury of Japan.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Delaware, either in his facts or his conclusions, and I should be very glad indeed, if this were the proper occasion, to enter on a discussion of the merits of this case.

Mr. MORGAN. Has the report been read as yet?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. But not believing this to be the proper occasion for a lengthy discussion of the question, I shall not enter into it. I only want to say that if the conclusions reached by the Senator are right, then the conclusions reached by almost every President from the time this fund was paid in and by every Secretary of State from Seward down are wrong. If he be right, then the conclusions of every committee that has examined this question, all of whom have unanimously reported over and over and over again that this fund does not belong to the Government, but ought to be paid back, were wrong. If the facts and conclusions the Senator has stated to-day are right, then the Senate was wrong on the 3d of March, 1881, when by a vote on the yeas and nays of 46 yeas to 6 nays it was declared that this fund, with interest, ought to be paid back to Japan, the Senator from Delaware himself then voting for that proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. And I vote for it now, to pay back the fund exactly as we received it.

Mr. WINDOM. Ah, but the Senator is mistaken when he says he votes for it now, because that is the very point on which we disagreed in the committee of conference. The Senate, on the 3d of March, 1881, voted to pay back the principal and 5 per cent. interest. The whole amount of that bill, as we voted it in 1881, was about fourteen or fifteen hundred thousand dollars; it was by no means the principal sum which the Senator says can now be paid back and yet justice done, but those forty-six Senators recorded themselves that that thing ought to be done, and only six against it.

Again, if the Senator is right, I will say that the House of Representatives in 1872 were wrong when they passed a bill remitting the unpaid balance which Japan had not then paid over. The facts were then fresh in the memory of Congress, and the House of Representatives passed this bill:

An act to release the Government of Japan from the payment of the balance of the indemnity fund remaining unpaid, amounting to $375,000, under the convention of October 22, 1864.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to absolve and release the government of the Empire of Japan from the payment of the balance, amounting to $375,000, of the indemnity due to the United States under the convention between the United States, Great Britain, France, and Holland of the one part, and Japan of the other, signed at Yokohama on the 22d of October, 1864, and from the payment of any interest which may be due on said balance.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to communicate officially to the Government of Japan information of the action of the President under and by virtue of the authority hereby given.

Passed the House of Representatives May 29, 1872.

This bill came to the Senate and the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations unanimously recommended that it be passed. As long ago as 1872 they saw the injustice of collecting this money, and said to Japan so far as the House of Representatives was concerned "we remit the balance to you;" and because it failed to pass the Senate at that time the money was collected, and the Secretary of State at once said that it was received without any substantial consideration, and every Secretary of State and every committee that has examined the subject since, nearly every President, and the Senate itself have said over and over again that this money was improperly received and ought to be paid back.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask the Senator one question. If every action of both bodies has been in the direction alone of paying this money back to Japan, will he tell me why the House of Representatives in 1870 passed a bill to give the crew of the Kearsarge $190,000, to be taken out of this indemnity fund? Does that look as though each House was always looking alone to the payment of this money back to Japan, when they were willing in 1870 to pay the crew of the Kearsarge $190,000 and to take it out of the Japanese indemnity fund? Will the Senator explain that action?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not remember the vote to which the Senator alludes; but if the House ever voted any such thing it is the only exception I know of.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There are others, I will say to my friend.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senator will keep quiet until I answer his question. I say that I suppose Congress at that time, finding that there was little probability of ever paying the money back, might have inadvertently given that vote; but as against that I array the unanimous, continued, oft-repeated action of both Houses and of the Senate itself no longer than one year ago.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator has finished, I should like to make a point of order. I understand the matter is properly before the Senate only when the House have acted on the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is presented, signed by the House conferees and the Senate conferees.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we can agree to the report now.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say just a word upon this. I have been very much astounded this morning that a debate should have been thrust upon the Senate on this report. I will not abuse the patience of the Senate by undertaking to reply to it. I will only say that the Senator from Delaware is mistaken, thoroughly mistaken, in two points which he has stated here and which he said no Senator would venture to deny. The first one is in saying that the port of Simonoseki was the only port which Japan agreed to open in the inland sea. The language of the convention is:

In lieu of payment of the sum claimed, and as a material compensation for loss and injuries sustained, the opening of Simonoseki, or some other eligible port in the inland sea.

The other point in which the Senator is mistaken is this: our consular correspondence, which I can produce to the Senate, shows that our consul was present on the 1st of January, 1868, at the time that the Government of Japan opened the ports of Osaka and Tokio in the inland sea, our colors were saluted, and there was quite a ceremonial upon that occasion, which our consul immediately reported through Mr. Bingham, our minister, to the Government of the United States. The Government of Japan in the most solemn and formal way on the 1st of January, 1868, opened two ports in the inland sea, and I am astonished that a Senator professing to know something about this case had not informed himself of these facts.

That is all I mean to say at present. These facts go against any amount of argument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The report was concurred in.

AMERICAN FORESTRY CONVENTION.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I move to proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Allow me to make a report.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing to which was referred a concurrent resolution to print additional copies of the forestry convention, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, to recommend its passage, and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the proceedings of the American forestry convention held at Cincinnati in April, 1877, be printed, under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,600 copies for the use of the House, and 1,100 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. ANTHONY. The cost will be about $800.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING OF LAND LAWS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws, have instructed me to report it with an amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that 8,500 additional copies of the codified land laws and history of the public domain of the United States, compiled and prepared by the public land commission, embraced in House Executive Document No. 47, with all subsequent laws which may have been passed by Congress prior to the adjournment of the present session, shall be printed and bound.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, in line 9, after the word "bound," to strike out the residue of the resolution, in the following words:

Of which each Senator and Representative shall receive 20 copies and each Delegate 30 copies, for distribution among their constituents, and the residue shall be for distribution by the Secretary of the Interior.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 5,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to report a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary and to request its present consideration. It is merely for the removal of disabilities, and I presume it will take but a moment. The party has presented a petition and the committee report a bill in accordance with the prayer of the petition.

The bill (S. No. 2171) to remove the political disabilities of Frank C. Armstrong, of Maryland, was read three times, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

TITLE TO CERTAIN LANDS.

Mr. PENDLETON. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill No. 2402.

Mr. ALLISON. I proposed this morning, not knowing that the Japanese matter would occupy so much time, to yield to the Senator from Ohio and one or two other gentlemen. I want to comply with my promise so far as I can where no debate intervenes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asked that the sundry civil bill be taken up, and if there is no objection it will be considered as before the Senate. Now the Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent to lay that bill aside and take up House bill No. 2402.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2402) to quiet title to certain lands in Washington, District of Columbia. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to quitclaim and release unto the heirs, devisees, and assigns of Joseph Pearson, deceased, their heirs and assigns, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all of squares 670, 671, 672, 710, and 711 in the city of Washington, as the same are laid down on the original plat or plan of the city.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL POSTPONED.

Mr. VANCE. The bill (S. No. 1730) to remove the political disabilities of Charles P. McGary was reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary and is now on the Calendar. I move its indefinite postponement. The individual named has since the report of the bill deceased.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

- A bill (H. R. No. 318) granting a pension to Robert J. Gillespie;
- A bill (H. R. No. 783) granting a pension to J. E. Kilber;
- A bill (H. R. No. 1649) granting a pension to James Moreland;
- A bill (H. R. No. 1860) granting a pension to Daniel M. Morley;
- A bill (H. R. No. 1862) granting a pension to Isaiah Altenburg;
- A bill (H. R. No. 5496) granting a pension to Mary Ullery;
- A bill (H. R. No. 6425) to increase the pension of Robert Henne; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6833) granting a pension to Kate Quilligan.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 6265) donating cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 6111) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6593) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 282) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of district attorneys of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) making an appropriation to defray the expense of printing the memorial cards to accompany the additional numbers heretofore ordered of the memorial address on the late President Garfield.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3506) amending sections 1926 and 1927 of the Revised Statutes so as to extend the limits of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana;

A bill (H. R. No. 3668) to authorize a change of record in the case of Lewis Rodrick; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag which belonged to the said regiment and which is now in the custody of the Secretary of War.

G. W. THOMPSON AND OTHERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 101) for the relief of G. W. Thompson and others; which was, in line 3, after the word "company," to insert "and Henry Large, jr.;" in lines 13 and 14 to strike out "$8,654.40" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,121.08."

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read as amended by the House. Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It is an addition of $400. The Acting Secretary read the bill as amended by the House, as follows:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to consider the claims of G. W. Thompson & Co., and Henry Large, jr., of Pennsylvania; J. M. Atherton & Co., C. Miller & Bro., and W. S. Hume, of Kentucky; Harrison & Small, of Tennessee; C. Dodsworth, of Ohio; and N. S. Chouteau, surety for H. H. Bodemann, of Missouri, for tax paid on excess of materials, or for deficiency, and to refund the same, or such parts thereof as fall within the principles of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Stoll vs. Pepper, and in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to internal revenue," approved March 1, 1879: Provided, That the aggregate amount allowed and paid under the provisions of this act shall not exceed $9,121.08.

The amendments were concurred in.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I hope we shall go on with the appropriation bill.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations, after line 518, to strike out:

To commence the construction of a light-house at Mosquito Inlet, on the Atlantic seaboard of the State of Florida, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 521, to insert:

For rebuilding light-house at San Blas, on the coast of Florida, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 526, to insert:

For building a steam-tender for general use on the Atlantic coast, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Coast and Geodetic Survey," in line 569, to increase the total amount of the appropriations "for survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, eastern division," from $264,000 to $290,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 586, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation "for survey of the Pacific coasts, western division," from $180,000 to $170,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "branch," in line 623, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to credit Thad Butler, lately in the employment of the Interior Department, with the sum of $215, the same being stopped against him because it was expended in payment of salary from the contingent fund, this being the only fund of money furnished or available in the Interior Department for the purpose above named.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "miscellaneous objects under the Treasury Department," in line 671, before the word "silver," to insert the word "fractional;" in line 674, before the word "silver," to insert the word "fractional;" and in line 678, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

For the transportation of fractional silver coins: That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transport, free of charge, fractional silver coins when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury by the applicant or applicants; and that there is hereby appropriated $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for that purpose, and that the same be available from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 686, to insert:

For loss on recoinage of mutilated and uncurrent minor coins now in the vaults of the Treasury and which may be presented during the fiscal year 1883, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 733, to reduce the appropriation "for compensation in lieu of moieties in certain cases under the customs-revenue laws," from $50,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the miscellaneous appropriations for the Treasury Department, after line 765, to strike out the following clause:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem certain unsigned national-bank notes stolen from the office of the Comptroller of the Currency during the years 1864, 1867, and 1868, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 771, to insert:

To pay the Comptroller of the Currency $28,173.58 in trust for the creditors of the First National Bank of New Orleans, for the purpose of adjusting the accounts between that bank and the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 776, to insert:

To meet such expenses as may be necessary to be incurred in carrying out the provisions of the act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, approved May 6, 1882, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 780, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Messrs. Bitting & Davidson additional for laying pressed brick instead of common red brick, in the exterior walls of the building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, under contract of January 16, 1879, $4,595.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 787, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the account of the Territory of Nebraska for direct tax laid upon the Territory under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1861, and to pay to the State of Nebraska an amount certified to be due on account of 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of certain Indian reservations within the limits of said State during the period commencing January 1, 1879, and ending June 13, 1880, he is hereby authorized and directed to credit said Territory with the sum of $15,030.40, now standing against it on the books of the Treasury on account of direct tax, and pay to the State of Nebraska the sum of $4,281.60, the balance certified by the accounting officers to be due said State on account of 5 per cent. of net proceeds of sales of certain Indian reservations, which said sum is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 806, to insert:

To pay Charles Osborn the amount of judgment rendered in his favor by the Court of Claims, and heretofore paid to Edwin J. Sweet on a forged assignment, $169.64.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 810, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Messrs. Powers & Mabry the sum of $89.01, being amount suspended in settlement numbered 2549, of December 1, 1876, and since allowed, for cattle furnished for "support of Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska, 1880, and prior years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 818, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of George C. Johnston the amount, not exceeding $10,510, which may be ascertained to be due to them under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1843, entitled "An act for the relief of George C. Johnston."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 846, to strike out:

For pay and expenses of the members of the National Board of Health, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 848, to strike out:

For pay of secretary and disbursing agent, and pay of clerks, messengers, and laborers, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 851, to strike out:

For rent, light, fuel, furniture, stationery, telegrams, and postage, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 853, to insert:

For quarantine service, Mississippi River, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 855, to insert:

For quarantine service, Ship Island, $10,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee in line 856, "for quarantine service, Ship Island, $10,000," by striking out "ten" and inserting "fourteen;" and I desire to say only this: the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, having this matter in charge, had before it the president of the National Board of Health, some of the members of the executive committee of that board, and the secretary, for the purpose of ascertaining the very smallest amount that would enable the board to perform its functions fully and efficiently. Fourteen thousand dollars was the amount expended at Ship Island last year, which was an exceptionally healthy year; and less than that, I am assured by every officer of the Board of Health, will not enable the board to perform its functions effectually and well at that point. I therefore ask that the amount be increased from $10,000 to $14,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 857, to insert:

For quarantine service, Sapelo Sound, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 859, to insert

For quarantine service, Hampton Roads, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 861, to insert

For pay and expenses of inspectors, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 863, to insert:

For pay and expenses of members of board, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 865, to insert:

For printing Bulletin, $5,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I regret exceedingly the necessity that I must move to strike out "five," in line 866, and insert "ten," because it is simply impossible for the Bulletin to be printed at all for $5,000; and if the board is to execute or perform the duties imposed by section 4 of the act of June 2, 1879, the Bulletin must be published as a means of distributing sanitary information required by that section to be distributed to the various departments of the Government and the various sanitary and health officers and associations throughout the whole country. It is deemed by the board absolutely necessary; I deem it myself absolutely necessary; and as it cannot be published at a less cost than $10,000, I move now to strike out "five" and insert "ten."

Mr. ALLISON. The publication of the Bulletin this year cost about $10,000. The committee were of opinion that this Board of Health could reduce the number of pages of the Bulletin without especially injuring the services or the value of it; and therefore we believed it was wise to try and ascertain if they could not so contract the pages as to bring the Bulletin within the $5,000, and I think we had better make that experiment. Of course they could use $15,000 or $20,000 and enlarge the Bulletin from week to week by giving statistics of various kinds, and essays upon various topics connected with surgery and medicine.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is possible for the Board of Health to perform the duties imposed upon it by section 4 of the act of June 2, 1879, at a less cost than $10,000, I should gladly join the Senator from Iowa and other Senators in reducing the amount to the very smallest sum that will enable it to perform the duties that are imposed upon it. I am assured by those who know that it is impossible to publish the Bulletin at a less cost than $10,000, containing the information that section 4 requires the board to abstract and distribute among the various sanitary and health authorities of the country. While it is a matter of no consequence to the Senator from Iowa or to myself as to whether we get a copy of the Bulletin or not, it is a matter of the highest consequence to every health officer and to every sanitary association from one end of this country to the other.

I simply desired to state the merits of the proposition and invoke the judgment of the Senate upon it. I have nothing further to add.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee, to strike out "five" and insert "ten," in line 866.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, there being on a division—ayes 19, noes 20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 866, to insert:

For clerks, messengers, and laborers, $10,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I am there constrained, as before, to ask for an increase from $10,000 to $17,000 in line 867, and that is the last amendment I have to ask the Senate to act upon. I present it on the same authority that I have cited heretofore, to wit, the president, the secretary, and the executive committee of the National Board of Health, who appeared before the committee insisting upon this as the very smallest sum that would enable the board to perform its functions. Seventeen thousand dollars for this item of "clerks, messengers, and laborers," I am positively assured is the very smallest sum that will enable the board to keep up its machinery.

I simply desire to add that if this board is worthy of being sustained at all, there is certainly no economy or propriety in sustaining it in a crippled condition, where it will be inefficient in the performance of the duties that are imposed upon it by law. If it is to be sustained at all, give it the machinery absolutely necessary to enable it to perform its functions. If you cannot do that, the better policy, in my judgment, is to abolish it altogether, rather than to keep it in a crippled condition in which it cannot perform fully, efficiently, and well its duty and proper functions.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Tennessee knows that the Senate Committee on Appropriations inserted substantially what was required, with some limitations. I was very warmly with him in the increase at Ship Island from $10,000 to $14,000. The only two items we cut down below what the board asked for was as to the Bulletin, to which the Senate has agreed, and the clerks, messengers, and laborers put at $10,000 instead of $17,000. I think $17,000 will be too high, and I agree that $10,000 is rather low. I should be glad to vote for some increase over $10,000, say up to $15,000. I do not know that the committee will agree with me, but after hearing the whole case freely and fully I thought the committee cut it down too low by making it $10,000. I think they can get along with $15,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I incur some risk in modifying my amendment according to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, yet I believe I will do so. While I am assured that $17,000 is the smallest sum that will enable the board to keep up the full performance of its duty, I shall agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky.

There is one other item here of $10,000 which Congress has appropriated year by year and every year up to now for special investigations. I have consented to allow that to go out, because I do not want to demand a dollar more than is absolutely necessary for the performance of duties that I regard as equally important as the duties performed by any other branch of this Government; but I will modify my amendment and ask to insert "$15,000" in place of "$10,000."

Mr. ALLISON. Did the Senator from Kentucky suggest that?

Mr. BECK. I said I thought we had cut it down too low by making it $10,000, and I thought $15,000 would enable them to run better, and I am inclined to vote for that, because I think it right.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to antagonize the views of other members of the committee, but it will be observed that "for pay of secretary and disbursing agent, and pay of clerks, messengers, and laborers, $5,500" is the amount allowed by the House, and we allowed $10,000 "for clerks, messengers, and laborers" and $1,500 "for the secretary and disbursing agent," so that we really allow $11,500 here in place of $5,500 as suggested by the House. So that if the sum is increased now to $15,000 and we add to it the $1,500 we have $16,500, within $1,000 of what the Senator from Tennessee asked.

Mr. HARRIS. Within $2,000 of what my amendment asked for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 868, to insert:

For secretary and disbursing agent, $11,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 870, to insert:

For rent, light, and fuel, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 872, to insert:

For telegrams, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 873, to insert:

For stationery, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 874, to insert:

For postage, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 875, to insert:

For furniture, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 876, to insert:

For miscellaneous expenses, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 880, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

And the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of a threatened or actual epidemic, to use a sum not exceeding $50,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any necessity for that reduction? This is purely a contingent appropriation, not a dollar of which will ever be used except in case of an epidemic. In the event of an epidemic such as the country had in 1878 and 1879 $100,000 contingent fund is certainly a very small fund. If there be no epidemic not a dollar of it should or can be touched. I therefore ask the committee to non-concur in the amendment they have recommended. There is no risk in letting the sum remain at $100,000, and I prefer that it so remain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 897, after the word "Department," to strike out "1,000" and insert "500;" so as to read:

For the library of the Treasury Department: For purchase of law-books and suitable books of reference for the library of the Treasury Department, $500.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Committee on Appropriations will not insist upon this amendment. It is a very small appropriation of $1,000, and the number who are supplied with books at the Treasury Department is greater than in any other. They have an accomplished librarian, and have got now into a decent room. The library is very small in proportion to the number of clerks employed there. I am assured that the books are very actively used. I trust that so small an appropriation as even $1,000 for increasing the library will not be cut down to $500 when it is the smallest library of any Department.

Mr. ALLISON. One reason why the committee cut this down was that it is a continued appropriation, running from year to year, and they must have in the Treasury Department quite a number of libraries; I do not know how many; the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHER-MAN] can tell me. We are in the habit of appropriating now for the libraries of Departments, and the libraries of bureaus of Departments, and there are duplicate purchases of books in every Department of the Government. If the Senator will turn to the bill he will see that we have provided for an aggregation of these different libraries in some one place, so that the various bureaus can utilize the Department library.

Mr. MORRILL. That would be very inconvenient.

Mr. ALLISON. I presume it would be a little inconvenient for the head of a bureau to step out of his office to go into a library, but we believe it is in the interest of economy to have one general library for a Department. Take the Interior Department; they have a library at the Land Office, they have a library connected with the Assistant Attorney-General's Office, a library at the Patent Office, and so on. The judgment of the committee is that the libraries ought in some way to be all concentrated so as to prevent the duplication of books.

Mr. MORRILL. But these books are miscellaneous and instructive, and are calculated to preserve the character and intelligence of the clerks of the Departments.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that there is but one library called a library for the Treasury Department. That has now a large room, and it is rather in the nature of a circulating library. It is used for the instruction of the clerks and other employees. It is the only library in that Department. There is a library of the Secretary, which is confined strictly to technical books, and there is a library also of the Comptroller of the Currency, which is also confined to technical books in regard to banks and banking. Those are paid for out of the contingent expenses of the bureau, and you could not, I think, combine them. This library is rather in the nature of a circulating library. There are about three thousand clerks in that Department. It seems to me that a thousand dollars would be little enough to keep up the usual supply. It is a matter that I do not know more about than any one else, but $1,000 would go but a little way in keeping up a library of that character, which is drawn upon by probably two thousand persons.

Mr. MORRILL. The books are constantly wearing out.

Mr. BECK. I only want to say a word. We have stricken out, it will be observed, the appropriation of $1,000 and inserted $500, and we have added:

And for the purpose of limiting the appropriations, the head of each Department shall report to Congress, at the beginning of the next session of Congress—

Which is only about four months off—the condition of the several libraries in his Department, the number of volumes in each, and duplicates in all, and a plan for consolidating the same, so that hereafter there shall be but one library in each Department, and the amount of annual appropriation necessary to maintain said departmental library.

The idea we had was to give them $500 now to supply their necessary wants, and in the mean time between now and next December, we shall get information as to how far they have extended the libraries beyond what are necessary in the bureaus and elsewhere. The chances are that if we can consolidate them we shall find a good many books and duplicates that can then be arranged, and in December we can make up in the form of a deficiency bill, or some other way, if we have a statement in regard to it and know what is necessary to keep up one library and keep it up well. That was the idea we had.

Mr. MORRILL. The sum is very pitiful, and I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment. I have seen messengers there who were studying diligently scientific books while they were sitting at the doors and guarding the entrances of the Department. I trust the full amount here will be appropriated. There is an accomplished librarian there, and I know the books are constantly used, and must be worn out often by their frequent use.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Vermont encourage the idea that the employés of the Government shall during business hours be engaged in reading light literature, or in reading scientific works or anything of that kind?

Mr. MORRILL. Where they sit at the doors waiting merely to open a door and let people in, of course they have leisure time. It does not interfere with the discharge of their duties in the least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 20, noes not counted.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "dollars," in line 898, to insert:

And for the purpose of limiting the appropriations, the head of each Department shall report to Congress, at the beginning of the next session of Congress, the condition of the several libraries in his Department, the number of volumes in each, and duplicates in all, and a plan for consolidating the same, so that hereafter there shall be but one library in each Department, and the amount of annual appropriation necessary to maintain said departmental library.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 906, to strike out:

For the purchase of books and serials for use in the office of the Government actuary, $250, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 915, to insert "the total cost of which enlargement shall not exceed $100,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For materials and labor for repairs on the United States court-house and post-office at Des Moines, Iowa, and providing additional room therein for the courts and post-office, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $45,000, the total cost of which enlargement shall not exceed $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the "appropriations for armories and arsenals," in line 1014, to reduce the item "for repairs of arsenals, and to meet such unforeseen expenditures at arsenals as accidents or other contingencies during the year may render necessary," from $50,000 to $40,000.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have an amendment which I intended to offer and am inclined to offer now, at the end of line 1014, but I understand the agreement is that other than the committee amendments shall be reserved until the bill is passed through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The text of the bill will be open to amendment after the bill is read through. If the Senator wishes to amend the amendment of the committee he had better offer it now.

Mr. LAPHAM. No; I wish to add a new item.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be reserved. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "buildings and grounds in and around Washington," in line 1032, to reduce the item "for painting iron fences, vases, lamps, and lamp-posts" from $1,500 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1034, to reduce the item "for purchase and repair of tools" from $2,000 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1046, to reduce the item "for improving various reservations" from $15,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1049, to reduce the item "for improvement and care of Smithsonian grounds" from $7,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1050, before the word "improvement," to strike out "commencing;" and in line 1051, after the word "same," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

For improvement of reservation numbered seventeen and site of old canal northwest of same, $10,000: Provided, That no part thereof shall be expended upon other than property belonging to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1055, after the word "roadways," to insert "and sidewalks;" and in line 1056, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For paving roadways and sidewalks to the north front of the Executive Mansion, $10,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1065, after the word "Mansion," to insert "including the improvement of the drainage of the basement," and in line 1067, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For repairs and fuel at the Executive Mansion as follows: For care and repair of the Executive Mansion, including the improvement of the drainage of the basement, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation "for lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds," in line 1081, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That for each burner not connected with a meter in the lamps on the public grounds no more than $25 shall be paid per lamp for gas, including lighting, cleaning, and keeping in repair the lamps, under any expenditure provided for in this act; and in case a contract cannot be made at that rate the engineer in charge is hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material in the lamps on the public grounds, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1118, to insert:

For furniture, carpets, file-cases, and shelving for the north wing of the State, War, and Navy Department building, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1121, to insert:

For constructing hydraulic passenger-elevator for building corner of Seventeenth and F streets, known as the Winder building, the same to run from the ground floor, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Signal Service," after the word "dollars," in line 1142, to insert:

Provided, That the work of no other Department, bureau, or commission authorized by law shall be duplicated by this bureau.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why the appropriation for the Signal Service has been reduced more than one-half over the last year. A table has been handed me showing that the appropriation amounted to $592,000 in 1881. There are three systems of reports; one weather reports, warnings used for the benefit of cotton-growing countries; another system for the benefit of tobacco-growing countries; and another for warnings of storms off the coast of Texas. I am told that those systems will be necessarily abandoned for want of funds should the appropriation be confined to $250,000, which is, as I say, less than half of that made last year.

One hundred and twenty thousand dollars is alleged to be necessary to maintain these three systems. Of their value I am not competent to speak. Of the fact that they were established and carried on I believe there is no doubt, and the allegation is that they will necessarily be abandoned, and the service to that extent crippled, unless the appropriation shall be increased beyond that which the committee have recommended. These are public questions, and if the suggestion of inefficiency is made from any source it had better be made openly. I know my friend from Iowa would prefer that the suggestion be made and answered openly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations adopted the House view with reference to the appropriations for the Signal Service. The difference between this year and last year I believe is about $110,000 for the items included in this paragraph. The general in charge of the Signal Service estimated for $50,000 less than was appropriated last year, and he made that estimate on the ground that a portion of the funds appropriated every year had been abstracted by one of the officers of the bureau; but the House of Representatives allowed him $60,000 less than he demanded in his estimate.

The Committee on Appropriations summoned the Chief Signal Officer before it and he stated that unless we added $60,000 to the House provision he could only take two reports a day of storms instead of three, as now. After considerable discussion with the Chief Signal Officer the committee thought it wise to test the efficacy of two reports per day instead of three. Therefore we declined to report the $60,000 additional required by the Chief Signal Officer. Of course, if we give him $60,000 he will continue the three reports per day, as are now made. The committee were of opinion that he could make very good suggestions, perhaps equally exact, from two reports as from three.

Mr. BECK. Let me ask one question of the chairman in that connection. My recollection is that the two reports which are made reach every part of the country, and that there was no suggestion made to us that it would cut off any special report at all except the third report.

Mr. ALLISON. The custom of the Signal Officer is to take one report at seven in the morning, another at noon, and another at midnight. The midnight report, of course, does not go into the morning newspapers, but the observations or calculations are made up from the seven o'clock and noon reports as a rule; so that the committee thought, in view of the great desire everywhere for economy, it would be wise to test the efficacy of these reports when made twice a day.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator think that any of the reports, which I believe are valuable at least in regard to the cotton and tobacco growing, and the warning against the approach of storms in Texas, will be suspended or diminished by the present allowance?

Mr. ALLISON. Not in the slightest degree, except that the Chief Signal Officer will only take two reports per day instead of three. That is my understanding.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have been unable to hear every word that has been said by the Senators, but I submit to the chairman of the committee that it is a mistaken economy to reduce the number from three reports to two separate reports a day. You have the same number of stations; the same number of operators; you have your contract with the Western Union Telegraph Company; and to take another report is by no means adding 50 per cent.; it is adding a comparatively small portion to what you will have to give for two reports, and three reports make the basis of estimates a great deal more valuable. I think it is altogether a mistaken economy. If the Senator will tell me what the figure was that the Signal Officer desired, I will move to insert it. Though I heard his statement at the time, I do not remember the exact figure.

Mr. ALLISON. The Chief Signal Officer desired in line 1141 in lieu of $250,000 to insert $310,000. If that sum is inserted that is all the Chief Signal Officer desires.

Mr. HAWLEY. That shows not far from the proper arithmetical proportion of the supposed saving. For an addition of $60,000 to $250,000 you will have a report which is a great deal more than 50 per cent. more valuable.

It is quite impossible that with two reports a day there shall be as good an estimate as with three. The general supposition is that those prophecies of the weather are accurate in the proportion of about 80 or 85 per cent. By this reduction of the bases of the estimates, you reduce the general accuracy perhaps to 75 per cent., and you will begin to make people think you might as well save the whole of the money. I do not think there is economy in it, though perhaps it is not the time to move to increase the appropriation now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The text of the bill will be open to amendment after the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are gone through with.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will wait until the committee amendments have been disposed of, and shall offer such an amendment as I have indicated at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, inserting the proviso which has been read.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the chairman of the committee why not change that so as to read:

That the work of the Signal-Service Department shall not be duplicated by any other Department, bureau, or commission authorized by law.

If it should happen that some other Department is performing any part of the same work, that restriction should be on the other Department, and not on this. The change of the language which I suggest will accomplish the same object.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think I quite understand the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. The proviso is:

That the work of no other Department, bureau, or commission authorized by law, shall be duplicated by this bureau.

Now the change I propose is that the provision shall be that the work of this bureau shall not be duplicated by any other Department, bureau, or commission authorized by law. It will be leaving in full force the duties of the Signal-Service Department, and accomplish the object, and prevent a duplication of work.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest to the Senator that the proviso be allowed to stand, and he add the words he suggests. Then we shall have ample security. It will then be that the Signal-Service Bureau shall not duplicate other work, and that other Departments shall not duplicate the work of the Signal Bureau. Then we shall accomplish it.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; let it be so that this Signal-Service Bureau shall perform all the work authorized by law, and that other Departments or bureaus, if by chance they have any authority, shall not duplicate it.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator if he has information that the work of the Signal Service is being duplicated by other Departments in any way?

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that it is, but the suggestion of this very amendment indicates that there may be some double service of that kind. I would put the restriction upon other Departments, and let the Signal-Service Bureau perform its lawful work.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to adding what the Senator suggests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Michigan state his amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. Before the Senator from Michigan offers his amendment let me suggest what I think perhaps was the view in putting this amendment in the paragraph. I think it is hardly possible that any other bureau of the Government can duplicate anything which the law absolutely requires the Signal-Service Bureau to do. There is no other Department or bureau of the Government which has that control of the telegraph and of the machinery necessary to gather up the records of storms and so on; but the committee were advised that this bureau was duplicating the work of the Mississippi River commission; in other words, that it was gathering the records of the last overflow, say, for a sample, of the Mississippi Valley, a work which seemed to be rather remotely connected with the work of the Signal-Service Bureau any way, and a work which the Mississippi River commission would necessarily engage in for the purpose of properly carrying out the object of the creation of that commission. It was not thought necessary to have that labor performed by the Signal-Service Bureau, which required a great deal of investigation upon the ground, a great deal of work to put it in shape, and a great deal of printing to put it before the public, while it was absolutely necessary that it should be done by the Mississippi River commission.

That is enforced by a consideration of the fact that in many other Departments of the Government there has been a disposition to do this thing, and not necessarily, as I said, growing out of any improper idea about the expenditure of money or any improper wish to enlarge the functions of special bureaus, but out of the natural extension that is constantly going on of the purview within which these people work. Thus you find different bureaus of the Government gathering statistics, and so on.

Inasmuch as this seemed to be rather obvious, the committee thought it was well to say that they should not do what some other commission is required to do by law. The Senator will see that the proviso inserted by the committee prohibits them from doing anything that some other Department, bureau, or commission is authorized by law to do. We thought, inasmuch as the Signal Service had a certain track in which it worked by reason of the character of the limit imposed upon it by law, it ought to stay there and not get into the work of some other Department, bureau, or commission.

Mr. CONGER. I move to add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall restrict the performance of all duties of the Signal-Service Bureau prescribed by existing law.

That, I suppose, will cover it.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course there is no intention in the amendment of the committee that it shall operate to limit the duties of Signal-Service officers.

Mr. CONGER. My amendment is different, that there shall be no pretense that the other clause restricts them in any way because some other bureau happens to have charge or happens to have done heretofore any work prescribed by law for the Signal Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "northwest," in line 1148, to insert "under the supervision and direction of the several departmental military commanders, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, as follows," and in line 1159, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the construction, maintenance, and repair of military telegraph lines: For the construction and continuing the construction, maintenance, and use of military telegraph lines on the Indian and Mexican frontiers and in the Northwest, under the supervision and direction of the several departmental military commanders, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, as follows: for the connection of military posts and stations, and for the better protection of immigration and the frontier settlements from depredations, especially in the States of Texas and Nevada and the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Dakota, Washington, Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming, and the Indian Territory, under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1875, and June 20, 1878, $40,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that amendment ought to be transposed, and put in the nature of a proviso at the end of the paragraph, after the word "dollars," in line 1160. A note from the Chief Signal Officer suggests to me that some seventy or eighty different stations are now under his control on the frontier, and by inserting this provision where it is now inserted the control will be taken from him, and placed in the military commander, which ought not to be done. Therefore I suggest that the Senate do not agree to the amendment proposed by the committee, but add at the end of line 1160 the following proviso:

Provided, That the construction of new lines of telegraph shall be under the supervision and direction of the several departmental military commanders, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FERRY. I notice the chairman of the committee uses the term "new lines of telegraph." Does he design it not to apply to all telegraph lines, those now existing as well as new lines? The expression "new lines of telegraph" would seem to confine it to those now being constructed, and would not apply it to those already existing.

Mr. ALLISON. The object I have in view is to place the construction of these new lines under the direction of the several departmental military commanders, and not under the direction of the Signal-Service Bureau. It is perfectly evident that these military commanders can construct lines of telegraph better than they can be constructed under the direction of the Signal-Service Bureau; but I do not want to place the use of those lines under the control of the military commanders. I wish to leave them as they are now, under the control of the Signal-Service Bureau for the purposes of the bureau.

Mr. FERRY. Then the Senator designs to confine it to the new lines?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa striking out the words proposed to be inserted by the committee after line 1148 and inserting them as modified at the end of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1160, to strike out the following clause:

That all the receipts from private messages sent over the United States military telegraph lines may be expended for the maintenance of said lines; but an account thereof shall be kept and rendered to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1164, to insert:

For the construction of a military telegraph line, for the proper establishment of cautionary signal-stations on the Island of Nantucket, Massachusetts, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1168, to insert:

For the purchase and laying of a cable, and for the construction of the necessary land line to connect old Fort Mackinac, Saint Ignace, and the Island of Mackinac, in the State of Michigan, for equipping the line with the necessary instruments, battery, &c., and for maintaining and operating the same for one year, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "national cemeteries," in line 1207, after the word "dollars," to strike out "not more than $1,000 of which shall be used in constructing a wharf at Chalmette National Cemetery, New Orleans;" so as to make the clause read:

For national cemeteries: For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1211, before the word "superintendents," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "seventy-three;" and in line 1212, after the word "cemeteries," to strike out "fifty-nine thousand seven hundred and twenty" and insert "sixty thousand four hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For superintendents of national cemeteries: For pay of seventy-three superintendents of national cemeteries, $60,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1221, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this and the preceding paragraph shall be expended unless in each case the amount appropriated shall complete said roadways.

So as to make the clause read:

For the completion of the roadway from Chattanooga National Cemetery to the city of Chattanooga, Tennessee, $5,000: Provided, That none of the money appropriated by this and the preceding paragraph shall be expended unless in each case the amount appropriated shall complete said roadways.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1228, to reduce the appropriation "for repair of the road leading from the Aqueduct Bridge, Georgetown, District of Columbia, to the Arlington National Cemetery, Virginia," from $5,000 to $1,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the committee will not insist upon that amendment. The road to the national cemetery is in a wretched condition, as is known to every one who drives over it. One thousand dollars is totally inadequate to complete it. I think Senators who are as familiar with the ground as I have become by driving over it must know that $1,000 will be totally inadequate to make the necessary improvements.

Mr. BECK. The House appropriated $5,000 and we reduced the amount to $1,000. We have a free road over the Long Bridge, from which some years ago we required the removal of all the tolls, so that persons could go to the cemetery without having to pay toll. This is another road to the cemetery, one passing over the Aqueduct Bridge, where the bridge company charges everybody who drives over it twenty-five cents. We did not quite understand why we should give $5,000 to repair the road to induce people to go over that bridge and pay the company twenty-five cents every time they passed over it.

If the Senator from Ohio can explain to us why we should build up a road for a toll-bridge to get all the pay, I should like to hear the explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think myself that that toll-bridge is a nuisance and that it ought to have been abolished long ago. It is not only a toll-bridge but one almost dangerous to life and limb. But this question relates to the building of a road from the end of that bridge to the national cemetery. The national cemetery is maintained at great expense; the drives through it are beautiful; it is one of the most beautiful places about Washington; but the road from the bridge to the cemetery is sometimes almost impassable. I merely say that $1,000 is not sufficient to put it in good order.

Mr. BECK. We have one means of approach now without any toll-bridge, and we desire to make this road reasonably good with $1,000. If any means can be invented whereby we can buy out that bridge company or get control of it or stop them from requiring men to pay toll I hope it will be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why does not the Senator move a provision directly to appropriate that bridge for public uses? It ought to have been done long ago.

Mr. BECK. It might be regarded as legislation on this bill, and we are afraid of the Senator from Ohio when we come to that point.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say that I find there is a great deal more legislation on this bill than I supposed there was from the statement made yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER. There is a bill on the Calendar now providing for the purchase of the bridge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. BECK. I ask for a division. I want to see things arranged about that bridge before we give any more money than the committee proposes to induce people to pass over it.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 26, yeas 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. BROWN. Before we pass from that portion of the bill, I desire to move to add at the end of line 1224, that the sum of $2,500 is appropriated to construct a roadway from the corner of the square in Marietta, in the State of Georgia, to the Federal cemetery, about one mile distant. I have not yet written out the amendment. I will state that there is a very large Federal cemetery there where those who fell on the Federal side in the great campaign between Sherman and Johnston are buried to the number probably of ten or fifteen thousand; I do not know exactly the number. The city of Marietta is a small city; it has not the means to keep its own streets in very good order. This cemetery is located east of the city upon a high hill, and it is almost an impassable way now to get to the cemetery. With as large a number of Federal soldiers as I have already mentioned buried there, I think the sum of $2,500 would make a good roadway, so that every one desiring to go to the cemetery could go upon a road in good condition. I move an amendment appropriating that amount for the purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask if that is one of the cemeteries such as are appropriated for in the bill?

Mr. BROWN. It is a cemetery regularly established by the Government. I think over 10,000 Federal soldiers are buried there. The road is in very bad condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia will be reported.

Mr. BECK. I think that would break into the agreement we made that the amendments of the committee should be acted on first. I say to the Senator from Georgia that if he will allow the amendments of the committee to be acted on first, his amendment will not be precluded or embarrassed.

Mr. BROWN. I have no special choice as to the time and manner of presenting it, only I do not wish to be precluded from the right to offer the amendment.

Mr. BECK. The Senator's right will not be embarrassed by waiting until the amendments of the committee are all acted on.

Mr. BROWN. It comes, though, in this connection, and I do not think it will take any time to vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will observe that the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is an amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee, and is exactly like what was done a few moments ago on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. BECK. I do not care anything about it. I only made the suggestion.

Mr. BROWN. I prefer action now.

Mr. ALLISON. I think perhaps we should facilitate action on the bill if the Senator from Georgia would take a little time to prepare carefully his amendment. I shall not object to it when it is put in the proper form.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection; but I have prepared the amendment, and it will take no time to dispose of it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "roadways," at the end of the paragraph, in line 1224, it is proposed to add:

And that the sum of $2,500 is appropriated for a roadway from Marietta, Georgia, to the Federal cemetery near that city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote on agreeing to the amendment of the committee at this point will be reconsidered if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to offer an amendment to that part of the bill. At the end of line 1217 I move to add:

For the road from Beverly, New Jersey, to the national cemetery near that city, $3,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

This amendment was submitted to the committee, but was not adopted by them. I asked originally for $5,000, but I have modified it to $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to waive that amendment until we go through with the amendments of the committee. We can come back to it. There are one or two others of a like character to be offered.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the chairman that a similar amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia has just been adopted, of which no one complained. However I have no objection to letting it go over until the amendments of the committee shall have been acted upon.

Mr. FERRY. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia was an amendment to a committee amendment. It was not strictly in order, but being an amendment to an amendment, on a generous construction it would be in order. But the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is entirely new, being offered to the text of the bill, and if new propositions are to be taken up I have an amendment to offer. I think if the Senator from New Jersey will waive his amendment until we get through with the amendments of the committee we shall facilitate business.

Mr. SEWELL. I waive it for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "miscellaneous objects," to strike out the following clause, from lines 1242 to 1249:

For photolithographing and engraving maps, diagrams, and other illustrations, including paper and printing, for the annual report of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army for 1882, the work to be done under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, and to be furnished in such time that the complete report may be ready on the assembling of Congress on the first Monday of December next, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1249, to insert:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For printing and issuing charts for use of navigators, electrotyping copper plates for chart printing and completion of office work, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1259, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven;" and in line 1262, after the word "year," to strike out "thirty-three thousand" and insert "thirty-six thousand three hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the publication of the official records, and printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of 11,000 copies of a compilation of the official records, Union and confederate, of the war of the rebellion, so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, $36,309.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would suggest to the chairman of the committee who has the bill in charge that the language in the printed bill does not precisely convey what is intended. It would be better if, after "War," in line 1287, it read "shall inform the Senators, Representatives, or Delegates who have designated the same, who thereupon may designate other libraries, public institutions, or individuals." As it reads now all duplicate orders are sent to the Secretary of War, who sends one set, and the other he sends to whom he chooses.

Mr. ALLISON. We referred this whole clause to my friend's committee, and inserted it exactly as they sent it back to us; and if there is any amendment or suggestion that he can now make to improve the language, I shall be delighted to accept it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I take the responsibility of the error in the amendment and therefore I have intruded on the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the language—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That clause has not been reached. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in lines 1262 and 1263.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 1267, after the word "law," to insert "1,000 copies for distribution by the Secretary of War among officers of the Army and contributors to the work;" so as to read:

The volumes of the official records of the war of the rebellion shall be distributed as follows: 1,000 copies to the Executive Departments, as now provided by law; 1,000 copies for distribution by the Secretary of War among officers of the Army and contributors to the work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same paragraph, in line 1281, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven;" so as to read:

The remaining copies of the 11,000 to be published, and all sets that may not be ordered to be distributed as provided herein, shall be sold by the Secretary of War for cost of publication with 10 per cent. added thereto, and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now move to strike out from the word "War," in line 1287, down to and including the word "him," in line 1289, and in lieu thereof to insert:

Shall inform the Senators, Representatives, or Delegates who have designated the same, who, thereupon, may designate other libraries, public institutions, or individuals.

The word "organizations" is used in the original text, and that might as well be put in for "public institutions."

Mr. ALLISON. What do you strike out?

Mr. ANTHONY. All after the word "War," in line 1287, to the word "him," in line 1289, and insert what I have just read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. As amended the clause will read:

If two or more sets of said volumes are ordered to the same address, the Secretary of War shall inform the Senators, Representatives, or Delegates who have designated the same, who thereupon may designate other libraries, organizations, or individuals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1379, to insert:

For completion of the new barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $47,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1382, to insert:

For erection of additional quarters for officers at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $41,211.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1389, to strike out:

At Fort Bliss, Texas: To open and construct the approaches to Fort Bliss, Texas, $5,000.

Mr. MAXEY. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill to this item that the Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out, lines 1390 and 1391:

At Fort Bliss, Texas: To open and construct the approaches to Fort Bliss, Texas, $5,000.

I beg to state to the Senator and to the Senate that I am advised by the Representative of that district that the Secretary of War wrote a letter recommending this appropriation for the construction of this road, which was laid before the House Appropriations Committee, and that committee approved it and put it in the bill.

I will state further that it is about a mile and a quarter from Fort Bliss to El Paso. At the time Fort Bliss was established as a fort there was no road there at all. There are now about five railroads, and the supplies, troops, &c., for that fort are brought over the railroads and taken up to the fort. This $5,000 will complete the road to the grand plaza, which connects directly with the depot, where they have to go for everything. I think it is a wise appropriation. I hope the Senator will not persist in the amendment, but will let the item stand as it came from the House.

Mr. PLUMB. The point in the amendment of the committee is that the railroad on which the supplies are transported runs through this reservation.

Mr. MAXEY. But all the depots are down in the town and there is no depot on the road which runs through the reservation, and that is only one of five railroads over which supplies, troops, &c., are obtained.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say further in regard to it that it seemed to me, and I think it did to the committee—I am willing to assume a large share of responsibility for this amendment—that we are in the habit of appropriating a great deal of money to do the police work about posts, which the Senator himself knows from his experience was done by the volunteer soldiers themselves, and might as well be done now by the Quartermaster's Department, who have generally lying idle enough men to attend to the ordinary police work of the garrison. For instance, I know at Fort Leavenworth there is a long road which is macadamized, built very nicely, and it has been done by the persons employed there and who had been put in the guard-house for various minor offenses.

I think we are appropriating every year a great deal of money for the doing of little odd jobs of this kind around posts and garrisons which the men themselves would be very much better off if they were required to do.

I do not know except in a general way about the geography of Fort Bliss; but I do know that it is in a somewhat contracted cañon, and if there is any necessity there requiring the expenditure of any little sum of money outside of ordinary labor, the post itself ought to supply it. Of course I will yield to any statement the Senator may make as coming from his own observation as to the facts of the case.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not want to detain the Senate, but I wish to say this—

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will allow me to complete my statement, I will not address the Senate further on this subject. We have appropriated in the Army appropriation bill a large sum, I think $300,000, which is subdivided by the Secretary of War among the different departments and divisions of the country, and which can be used and is used for these very purposes. It seems to me that that is sufficient without making a specific appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. MAXEY. I stated that the Secretary of War, with full knowledge of the facts, has recommended this appropriation. I beg to say in addition that across the river are the mountains, and the land on this side is broken land. The distance is a mile and a quarter. The amount here appropriated will make a good passable road for wagons to haul supplies back and forth, and in my judgment it is a wise appropriation. If I did not think so I would not recommend it. I believe the appropriation is right, and that the House was right, and the Secretary of War was right. Of course, if the committee oppose it, I cannot help myself, but that is my opinion about it that they are not acting wisely in striking out the item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to read in regard to this particular matter the letter to which I referred:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 25, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, inclosing House bill No. 4131, appropriating $5,000 to open and construct approaches to Fort Bliss, Texas, and, in compliance with your request for information on the subject, to transmit herewith a report from the General of the Army, dated the 23d instant, in favor of the passage of said bill. The views of that officer as herein expressed are concurred in by me.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. C. UPSON,
Of Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

I will also read the following letter from General Sherman, and that is all I shall have to say about it:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1882.

SIR: In returning to you the communication of the Hon. C. UPSON, of February 20 instant, with copy of House bill No. 4131, appropriating $5,000 for road about Fort Bliss, I have the honor to report:

Fort Bliss, Texas, is near the town of Franklin, one and a half miles distant. The present road passes over low gravel hills and is in some places very steep. With the expenditure of $5,000 the location of the road and its grades could be greatly improved. This new road would lie almost entirely outside the present reservation. There can be no doubt that it would be advantageous to the service of the post to have this road improved.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant.

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

Hon. R. T. LINCOLN, Secretary of War.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 1397, 1398, 1399, and 1400, in the following words:

To enable the Secretary of War to have commenced the necessary buildings to be erected at the proposed military post at Fort Selden, New Mexico, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1403, to insert:

For the erection of a building for a quartermaster and commissary depot at Saint Paul, Minnesota, for the Department of Dakota, $48,500: Provided, That lot 3 and the lower portion of lot 4, block 31, Saint Paul proper, offered to the United States for the erection and maintenance of said building thereon, be conveyed without cost to the United States for said purpose by a good and sufficient deed, which, together with the title to the premises, shall be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States, and no money shall be expended until said title is perfected.

Mr. BECK. I agreed to that amendment, but communications made to our committee in regard to it I should like to have placed in the RECORD, so that the House may see them. If the chairman has them I should be glad to have them put in the RECORD.

Mr. ALLISON. I will furnish them to the Reporter when I lay my hands on them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1418, to increase the appropriation "for completing a sea-wall already commenced on the west side of Governor's Island, New York Harbor, and constructing a sea-wall on its southeastern portion," from $30,000 to $39,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "transportation," in line 1426, to insert "to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of War;" and in line 1428, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

For artificial limbs: For furnishing artificial limbs and appliances, or commutation therefor, and transportation, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of War, $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 1429, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter all appropriations for furnishing artificial limbs and appliances, or commutation therefor, transportation, and surgical appliances for persons disabled in the military or naval service of the United States, including the unexpended appropriations therefor made by the act of March 3, 1881, shall be expended and disbursed in the manner prescribed in section 4789 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1454, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And no alcoholic or fermented liquors shall be sold on the territory ceded to the United States for the said home the sale of which would be a violation of the laws of Maine if no such cession had been made.

So as to make the clause read:

For current expenses, including construction and repairs, at the Eastern branch, at Togus, Maine, $147,020; and no alcoholic or fermented liquors shall be sold on the territory ceded to the United States for the said home the sale of which would be a violation of the laws of Maine if no such cession had been made.

Mr. BECK. That is a change of existing law, and I think is evidently meddling, and I make the point of order.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BECK. I make the point of order.

Mr. FRYE. We regard it in Maine as a very important amendment. My colleague has succeeded in getting it on the bill, and I hope the Senate will leave it there.

Mr. BECK. I think the Senator's colleague would do all he could to keep it there; but I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Following the line of decision by the permanent occupant of the chair—

Mr. BLAIR. Before that point is decided I should like to move an amendment to the amendment, to see if the Senator from Kentucky will object to that.

Mr. BECK. I make the point of order here and now.

Mr. BLAIR. Perhaps the Senator, if he hears my proposed amendment, will not.

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to hear anything.

Mr. BLAIR. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. BECK. No, sir; I make the point of order.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to strike out the word "the," before "territory," in line 1455, and insert the word "any" instead thereof; and also to strike out from and including the word "for," in line 1456, to and including the word "made," in line 1488, and to insert in lieu thereof:

By any State for use as a beverage.

That will apply impartially to the entire country.

Mr. BECK. I know there are gentlemen who make cheap reputations by things of this sort. I object. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FRYE. What does the Senator from Kentucky mean by the remark he has just made?

Mr. BECK. I meant the Senator from New Hampshire who is endeavoring to be very extensive and to make a very grand performance.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kentucky does not object to the amendment I offered, I suppose.

Mr. BECK. I object to him appearing more virtuous than all the rest of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kentucky does not need to indulge himself in language of that kind. He will know the Senator from New Hampshire better some time. It may not always be the most prudent method to pursue with the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, for the purpose of saying one word on this subject, I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I suppose that is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair follows the precedent set by the regular Presiding Officer.

Mr. PLATT. I want to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky in all fairness whether this amendment ought not to stand, and whether he ought not to withdraw his point of order. It is known that the State of Maine prohibits the sale of liquors, alcoholic or fermented, throughout its borders. It has ceded to the United States the territory on which this soldiers' home is located. I cannot suppose that the Senator from Kentucky desires that on that territory liquors should be sold, when by the laws of the State of Maine they are not permitted to be sold anywhere else within the borders of the State. It cannot be for that purpose, I am sure, to allow the sale of liquors there, that he interposes this point of order, and I think it simply fair to a State, whether it be in this matter or in anything else, that we should not permit on land which the State has ceded to the United States the laws of that State to be violated, or that we should not permit anything to be done which if the territory had not been ceded to the United States would be a violation of the laws of the State.

I took the appeal simply for the purpose of suggesting to the Senator from Kentucky whether he would not withdraw his point of order. It affects no general principle here; it does not drag into this bill the moral aspects of the temperance question in any manner, and it seems to me a very proper amendment. I do not care to press the appeal from the decision of the Chair, for, under the decisions which have been made, I suppose it is technically proper; but I do hope the Senator from Kentucky will withdraw his point of order, and then that the Senator from New Hampshire will not try to bring anything else into this amendment, and that the amendment as it stands may be adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to suggest in aid of what my colleague has said that if my recollection serves me—I have not time to look it up—in our national laws concerning the distillery business and the whole liquor business we are careful to provide that nothing in them shall interfere with the local regulations of a State. I think it entirely fair and just in accordance with the proper interpretation of a reasonable doctrine of State-rights that we should let Maine do as it pleases throughout all its own territory proper.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to ask the Chair under what rule the Chair rules this amendment out of order? I can see how the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire may be considered general legislation and out of order on this bill, but where the State of Maine cedes a portion of its territory and parts with the jurisdiction of it to the United States, it is well and proper and fit and judicious that the United States should bind herself to conform to the laws of the State of Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would say to the Senator from Michigan that the ruling made by the present occupant of the chair is upon the ground that it is in harmony with the ruling of the President of the Senate. The present occupant of the chair does not desire to initiate any new ruling upon questions of this kind. The point of order is sustained under Rule 29, it proposing general legislation.

Mr. FERRY. Will the Chair have the Secretary read the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

The Acting Secretary read Rule 29, as follows:

29. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. FERRY. Now, Mr. President, I cannot see to which of the features of that rule the amendment is objectionable. It is certainly germane, because it pertains to this very subject, the State of Maine having parted with jurisdiction to the United States over the land on which is located the home here appropriated for. If the question of relevancy applied, of course the Chair would be compelled to submit it to the Senate, and therefore I consider that the Chair does not rule on that point. I should like, so as to be informed on that matter, that the Chair would indicate on what point in the rule the Chair holds this amendment to be out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the Chair will submit the question to the Senate on the appeal.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President—

Mr. PLATT. I do not insist on pressing my appeal. I merely made the appeal for the purpose of asking the Senator from Kentucky if on reflection he would not withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to withdraw it, because there will be no end to this kind of thing.

Mr. PLATT. Then I withdraw the appeal. I think the decision of the Chair was correct on the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us go on with the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to say that, as usual, confusion arises on this question of jurisdiction. There is but one kind of jurisdiction that can be exercised by the United States in cases of this kind, and it has been so held. The Federal Constitution declares that Congress shall exercise exclusive legislation, which has been construed by the courts to mean exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask what the question before the Senate is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is proceeding by courtesy.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This amendment I would say proposes to make an offense within a jurisdiction which is exclusively cognizable under the laws of the State.

Mr. LOGAN. They have concurrent jurisdiction with reference to crimes.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. They have not. There is no such thing as concurrent jurisdiction in such cases. It is either exclusive or nothing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed. The Acting Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill to line 1466.

Mr. CONGER. What has become of the appeal?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was withdrawn.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that under Rule 29 the Chair should submit this matter to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair proposed to do it on the appeal, but the Senator from Connecticut withdrew the appeal.

Mr. CONGER. I hope it will be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand the Senator.

Mr. CONGER. I understand the Chair rules that this amendment is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. CONGER. And I understand from the reading of Rule 29 that when the question arises the Chair shall submit it to the Senate, and not decide it himself.

Mr. HARRIS. If the question of relevancy arises it must be submitted to the Senate; but if the question of legislation arises it is a proper question for the decision of the Chair, and the Chair has decided it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair expressly stated that he sustained the point of order made by the Senator from Kentucky that this was general legislation. The Senator from Connecticut thereupon appealed, and when the Chair was about to submit the question on the appeal to the Senate the appeal was withdrawn, and thereupon the Secretary proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair decided that this special clause of special legislation relating to the State of Maine about a subject-matter in Maine and in conflict with their laws was general legislation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so held.

Mr. CONGER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BECK. The appeal was made and withdrawn and two more paragraphs of the bill read, and I object to going back. It requires unanimous consent to go back.

Mr. CONGER. We might as well decide it now. I should like to have the opinion of the Senate on a proposition of this kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly the present occupant of the chair would be very glad to submit it to the Senate, and if that is the wish of the Senate it shall be so done.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we had better go on with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Iowa makes the point that the appeal of the Senator from Michigan comes too late, the Chair will have to so hold.

Mr. ALLISON. I make that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appeal was withdrawn, and part of the bill further on read.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say a word on that point. The Chair may not be aware from the position he occupies in the Senate that in this part of the Senate Chamber it is utterly impossible to know with the most careful attention what propositions are made or are withdrawn. I venture to say that there are not a dozen men in the Senate who knew that the appeal was withdrawn. I could have no information of that kind. The Chair did not announce it even.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CONGER. It was the duty of the Chair to announce that the appeal was withdrawn so that every Senator could have heard the statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator that the appeal was withdrawn, and the Chair announced the fact within a very short space after it was announced by the Senator from Connecticut in his place, which is not very far from that of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Connecticut occupied the middle of the area at the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced that the appeal was withdrawn. Certainly the Senator from Michigan should understand that the Chair would be very glad to submit this question to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. After these amendments are concluded it will be perfectly in order to renew the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I think the time is to take these things as they arise, and I say here that except for the proceeding of the Secretary to read the bill members would have had no idea but what that matter was still pending. I had none, and that was the reason why I called the attention of the Chair to it. It is too late perhaps; but if it is to be so that the reading and the announcements are to be in such tone that Senators have no means of knowing what is said and done, then it is best that we have permission in some way to get nearer to the Chair and know what is going on.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw any objection I made, and will let the Senator from Michigan go on with whatever he desires to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan appeals from the decision of the Chair, which was that this amendment was general legislation and that the point of order made by the Senator from Kentucky was well taken.

Mr. FERRY. I would suggest to my colleague that he allow the case to be submitted under the rule to the Senate, instead of on an appeal from the Chair. The Chair has stated that he has ruled in accordance with the decisions of the President pro tempore of the Senate. That would embarrass me a little, because my tendency is to sustain the Chair. If my colleague would indulge me, and let the Chair submit the question to the Senate whether this is in order, so that we can vote on that, I should be less embarrassed than I should be under the form of an appeal.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President—

Mr. ANTHONY. The Chair has already decided the question. The Chair cannot withdraw that decision and submit the question afterward to the Senate. The question must be taken on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. BECK. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. BECK. It is that after the Presiding Officer had decided the question, and the appeal was taken and withdrawn, and the Chair had so announced, and the Secretary had proceeded to read the following paragraph, it is not in order without unanimous consent to go back, and I have objected to going back, and I do so now. I would not do it but for the fact that the Senator from Michigan has all his rights here to move again to insert this clause in the Senate, or make any motion he pleases, and argue it; but having proceeded through two paragraphs after the appeal was withdrawn and the fact was announced, and the Senator from Michigan not being cut off from any right to make all the questions hereafter, I object, so that we can go through with the bill now and discuss that afterward. If his rights were affected at all I would not insist on this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order. Let the Senator from Michigan take his appeal.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, the little technical objection to keep in the power to sell somewhere in Maine a little of the product of Kentucky will not sound very well to the country, I think; for that of course is the only object of such a proposition as this being stricken out, that there may be some little place somewhere where the laws of Maine cannot reach it, and where this traffic may continue. But has it come to this that, after the statement I have made of not having heard of the withdrawal of the appeal, and after the appeal I made to the Chair to reconsider his decision under the ruling which he has made, as I understood, without having, as the rule requires, submitted the question to the Senate, I am to be bound by a decision made hastily and contrary to the rule? If there is so much objection on the part of the Senator from Kentucky and any other Senators in regard to the question of selling, on ground of the United States, alcoholic liquors and beer, I think I have accomplished my object by having that view expressed so forcibly by the Senator from Kentucky. I think he may well pride himself upon having defended in other States the right of his own State to dispose of its product wherever there can be an opportunity. I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have not a word to say except that I made the point of order, the Chair sustained me, and no mean fling made by anybody can divert me from my rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to say that he has endeavored to rule very liberally toward the Senator from Michigan, and thinks he has done so. The rule does not require the question to be submitted to the Senate except upon a certain contingency, which did not arise in this case. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1493, after the word "hereby," to strike out "repealed" and insert "revived and continued in force;" so as to read:

And section 2 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for deficiencies, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1881, is hereby revived and continued in force.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or some member of that committee to explain the effect of this provision in relation to the pensions that may be due to inmates of the national homes for soldiers, as also the effect of the amendment proposed. I have had no opportunity to examine the act which it is proposed to revive and continue in force; but I suppose that the effect of this provision with the amendment will be to deprive the soldier of his pension if he chooses to become an inmate of a soldiers' home. I do not know but that that is right; but upon consideration in the past it has been changed so that the soldier who is in the home enjoys his pension at the present time. I understand this to be a return to the law as it formerly was, and if so I should like an explanation why the committee think that is desirable.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision is precisely the existing law, excepting that under the act approved February 26, 1881, the home cannot deduct from the soldier's pension fines and penalties, and in case of the death of the soldier his pension goes under that act to his family, if he has a family. The House proposed to repeal what we regarded as a wholesome provision. On examination of this statute we found that it was a mere limitation upon the appropriation act of last year, and instead of repealing it we thought it ought to be revived and continued in force, and we have so provided. If the Senator will turn to that act he will see that the phraseology is substantially the same as that contained in section 2, except as to fines and penalties and as to what shall be done with the residuum of the pension in case of the death of the soldier.

Mr. PLATT. I am unable to find the act at this time.

Mr. ALLISON. I will find it in a moment.

Mr. PLATT. Upon the explanation of the committee I shall make no further opposition.

Mr. ALLISON. Here is section 2 of the act of 1881:

SEC. 2. All pensions payable, or to be paid under this act, to pensioners who are inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be paid to the treasurer or treasurers of said home, upon security given to the satisfaction of the managers, to be disbursed for the benefit of the pensioners, without deduction for fines or penalties, under regulations to be established by the managers of the home.

Under the provision as it would have stood without the amendment of the committee fines and penalties would be deducted. We merely re-enact this second section of the act of 1881, which provides that the pension shall be disbursed for the benefit of the pensioner without deduction for fines and penalties. Then, in addition:

Said payment to be made by the pension agent upon a certificate of the proper officer of the home that the pensioner is an inmate thereof and is still living. Any balance of the pension which may remain at the date of the pensioner's discharge shall be paid over to him; and in case of his death at the home, the same shall be paid to the widow or children, or in default of either to his legal representatives.

Mr. PLATT. Then by the law as it is proposed in this bill the treasurers of the homes would become trustees for the soldier for the pension while he is there?

Mr. ALLISON. While he is there; and when he leaves the home he takes the remainder of the pension with him. It is our purpose to leave the law exactly as it stands under the act approved February 26, 1881.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "salaries," in line 1501, to insert "at the rate of $5,000 each for three civilian members;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries, at the rate of $5,000 each for three civilian members, and traveling expenses of the commission, office expenses, and reduction of work; for continuation of surveys and gangings of the Mississippi River and its tributaries; for permanent gauge-stations and borings; and for publication of maps and results, $150,000; and an itemized statement of the expenditure of this sum shall be included with the annual report of the commission to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "navy-yards and stations," in line 1554, after the word "dry-dock," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred;" so as to read:

For the navy-yard at Mare Island, California: For completing iron-plating shop, $3,000; for continuation of dry-dock, $300,000; for enlarging reservoir, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 1556, to strike out the following words:

And the said dock shall be completed of granite, unless the Secretary of the Navy shall, upon reinvestigation of the subject, be convinced that the dock can be completed with equal strength and durability with other material for less money.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this amendment to strike out. So much of this provision as reads "and the said dock shall be completed of granite" I desire to have stand, and I will agree to the striking out of the rest of the clause after the word "granite." But this dock is a great national work; it is the only dry-dock upon the Pacific coast belonging to the Government, and it has been thus far built of granite, which is the most substantial material of which a dry-dock can be built. There has been a large amount of money expended upon it, and now a proposition has been made to finish it with artificial stone, or concrete, which is a perishable material, not having the strength and durability of granite. If the dock is completed with this material, you will have a part of it, two-thirds or three-fourths of it, of granite, and one end of it a dock built of concrete or artificial stone. There would be a little saving perhaps in building it of artificial stone; but a work of this sort intended for all time, and a work that will be used as much as this must necessarily be used, ought to be constructed of the best material.

There is no stone equal to granite. Artificial stones of any kind or description and concretes of every kind and description are liable to abrasions and disintegrations by the action of the elements, the action of salt water—part of the time under water and part of the time out of water. The experience of engineers and of everybody who has had anything to do with the artificial materials employed as a substitute for stone is that they are not available materials and not fit for this purpose.

I do not know what has induced the engineers to recommend any such change in the construction of this great work, and I insist that it should be completed of natural stone, as it has been begun and continued until this time. I ask the chairman of the committee to consent that the action of the House shall stand, or so much of it as requires the completion of this dock to be of granite.

Mr. FARLEY. The amendment of the committee my colleague and myself both agree is correct after the word "granite," in line 1557, on page 64. The importance, as suggested by my colleague, of completing this work with granite cannot be underestimated by those who know the character of the granite we have there, the number of large quarries that have been opened, and from which the building material has up to this time been applied to this dry-dock. Unless there is some other interest than the making of this a substantial dry-dock the amendment ought not to prevail. After the word "granite," in line 1557, I am in favor, as is my colleague, of permitting the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to stand; but if the amendment be adopted as reported the Secretary of the Navy would be allowed to make contracts with persons to furnish artificial rock or concrete, persons having patents for that kind of material, to be used in the building of this dry-dock. Up to this time the dock has been built with the best of granite, and there is none in the United States or anywhere else, in my opinion, that is a superior article of granite to that which we have in the immediate vicinity of where this dock is being erected. I hope that part of the committee's amendment after the word "granite," in line 1557, will stand, and that the words "and the said dock shall be completed of granite" will remain as a part of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this dry-dock at Mare Island has been under construction for a great many years. The Government has already expended on it a million and a half of dollars. Last year two civil engineers were sent out there to make examination of it, and they made report to the Navy Department that the dock could be completed with concrete much more cheaply than with granite, and that the concrete would be equally as good and durable. If it is to be completed of granite it will cost $1,025,000.

Mr. FARLEY. More than has been appropriated?

Mr. ALLISON. It will cost a million more. A million and a half has already been expended on this dock, and if it is to be completed of granite $1,025,000 will still be required to finish it, whereas if it is to be completed of concrete about $500,000 will complete it, or a saving to the Government of from $450,000 to $460,000. These two engineers have recommended this change. I do not know whether it is a wise change or not. Of course I cannot say. I have no doubt it would be more convenient in some respects to complete the work of granite, but if it can be made as good and durable of concrete, as these engineers say, I do not see why the Government should not save $450,000.

Mr. FARLEY. Does the Senator believe that a dry-dock built of concrete would be as durable and lasting as one built of granite?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not an engineer, and I would not like to venture an opinion on that subject; but I should think that if two engineers, such as those sent out there, both concur that concrete is equally durable and much cheaper, I should be justified in following their advice rather than expending the additional sum.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think the Senator from Iowa is in error in his figures, in the first place, about the amount it would take to complete this dock, and secondly, as to the amount that will be saved if we use concrete.

In the first place, neither of the engineers nor anybody in the Engineer Department has given any estimate of the saving. They do not know what this artificial stone will cost. They simply recommend that the dock be built of artificial stone. What is artificial stone? It is not the ordinary concrete which the Government itself uses and makes in the construction of the foundation for buildings, but artificial stone is a patent stone. It is made of cement, sand, and gravel put under pressure, and the right to make it is secured by letters-patent. I have examined this subject, and I say that there has not been an estimate made in the Navy Department or by any officer or engineer of the Navy Department as to what this artificial stone will cost. It may cost as much as granite, because granite in California is cheap, and it is good and durable, as good as there is in the world.

I am not an engineer myself, but I have had a great deal to do with artificial stone, and if all the engineers in America were to say that artificial stone is as durable for this purpose as granite I should not believe them, because I know better; I know better from experience; I have seen it tried and tested. This artificial stone more nearly resembles sandstone than any other, because it is made of sand and cement.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no pretense that this is to be completed with artificial stone.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That is the pretense exactly; it is what the engineers recommend.

Mr. ALLISON. I have here a statement from the chief of the bureau in charge of this matter, which I will read:

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., July 18, 1882.

History of the stone dry-dock now under construction at the Mare Island navy-yard, and commenced in 1872.

On the 27th of October, 1871, the Bureau of Yards and Docks submitted its annual estimates to the honorable Secretary of the Navy and asked for a special appropriation of $200,000 for commencing the construction of a stone dry-dock at Mare Island, and on the 19th of January, 1872, the bureau notified the commandant of the yard that it had asked for an appropriation of $200,000 to commence the construction of a permanent stone dry-dock, and instructed that officer to direct Civil Engineer Calvin Brown to make careful examinations to determine the best location of such dock, having in view the probability of finding a rock foundation, as was the case at San Francisco; also to direct the engineer to prepare a plan for a dock of the largest size—say to admit a ship of three hundred and seventy-five feet length, sixty-five feet beam, and twenty-five feet draught—and to make a full report on the subject, with estimate of cost and information as to the kinds, qualities, and quantities of stone and other materials to be obtained in the vicinity, and particularly as to the facilities for obtaining stone in abundance.

Plans, estimates, and data were accordingly forwarded June 29, 1872, as follows, namely: total length of dock over all, 500 feet; length of floor, 393 feet; length of invert, 41 feet; width of floor, 30 feet; inside of dock at coping, 104 feet; width to outside of concrete foundation, 130 feet; depth from floor to top of coping, 35.4 feet; depth from coping to floor of invert, 32 feet; extreme depth to bottom of concrete foundation, 42.4 feet; depth of floor to chamber of dock, 8.4 feet; depth of floor to invert, 10.4 feet. Total estimated cost, $2,149,099.

On the 10th of June, 1872, an appropriation of $20,000 was made by Congress for commencing the work, and soon after the construction of the coffer-dam was inaugurated.

By recommendation of Rear-Admiral John Rodgers, United States Navy, the length of the dock was extended from 500 to 525 feet over all, the other dimensions remaining the same.

The following amounts have been appropriated and expended from year to year to July 1, 1882, upon the structure:

| Date of appropriations by act of Congress. | Fiscal years. | Amounts.* |
|--|---------------|--------------|
| June 10, 1872..... | 1872-'73 | $200,000 00 |

| June 10, 1880..... | 1880-'81 | 112,500 00 |
| March 3, 1881..... | 1881-'82 | 199,901 80 |
| Total..... | | 1,506,143 97 |

* Amounts appropriated and expended to July 1, 1882.

Present condition.

The excavation of the dock-pit has been completed, with the exception of about 500 cubic yards at the entrance of the dock.

The foundations have been completed from the end of the dock as far as the invert, and there remains yet to be done the whole of the foundation from the invert, extending 41 feet, to within 5 feet of the foot of the coffer-dam.

The granite floor has been laid along its whole length. The side concrete walls have been built to an average height of eighteen feet on both sides, extending from the ends of the dock to within a short distance of the invert, leaving convenient steps on the wall to receive the ultimate lining originally recommended of granite.

Of the inside lining the five first altars above the bottom have been laid to within a short distance of the invert, and sufficient granite is now on hand to finish them. The coffer-dam was built ten years ago, and has been reported on several occasions as showing signs of decay and weakness.

The necessary plant to carry on the work is reported as ample and in good condition.

The cost of the work up to the present time is $1,506,143.97, and the necessary amount to complete the work in accordance with the original design is $1,026,378.56. Of this amount $513,480 is estimated as the cost of the necessary granite to complete the inside lining of the dock.

In March last the civil engineer attached to the bureau, assisted by the civil engineer of the Mare Island navy-yard, made a full examination of the work in its present condition, and also of the material available for its completion, with a view of ascertaining the practicability of reducing the cost of the work without impairing its efficiency. It was recommended that a great portion of the proposed granite lining of the dock be substituted by cement concrete, which in the opinion of the engineers would be sufficiently strong, equally efficient, and reduce the cost of the work $433,515.

The above recommendations were approved by the bureau and by the then Secretary of the Navy, but no work has yet been done to carry out that recommendation, as the balance of appropriation in hand has been applied in the more important work of extending the foundations and side walls toward the coffer-dam.

With these modifications the amount of money required to complete the work in one year is $521,788.24; an amount which the engineer considers as ample to finish the dock in every respect.

Should these recommendations be finally rejected, the amount required to complete the dock with granite, as stated before, will be $1,026,378.56.

The precarious condition of the coffer-dam makes it imperative that the entrance of the dock be constructed, machinery and caisson put in place ready for operation, with as little delay as possible, and for this purpose on the basis of the recommendations above referred to an amount equal to $337,889 will be required; but if the granite is retained as the proper material to finish the dock, $513,480 will be needed for the same purpose.

Respectfully submitted,

EARL ENGLISH,
Acting Chief of Bureau.

So that it is merely a question whether the inside lining of this dry-dock shall be of concrete, or whether it shall be of granite, the difference in cost being about $450,000.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The reports of the engineers I have read. Engineer Menocal recommends making it of artificial stone, and he uses the words "artificial stone." The lining of this dry-dock in granite according to that statement is to cost $530,000, and if artificial stone or concrete is substituted it saves $430,000, making the concrete for the lining cost about $100,000.

Mr. ALLISON. If the inside lining is to be of granite it would cost $1,026,000.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But there is certainly work to be done which is not done in granite. What you want to consider here is the difference between lining this dock with granite and lining it with artificial stone or concrete, and I submit that we have no estimate here except a mere bare statement of the chief of the bureau. We have no estimate of the engineers as to what it will cost to line this dock with concrete, but we have an estimate as to what it will cost to line it with cut granite.

It is not to my judgment good policy or good economy to finish the lining of this dock with concrete, because if you do it it will only be a few years until you have to reline it, and finally you will have to do it with granite, because that is the only material of which any good dock has ever yet been built.

Mr. LOGAN. According to McClellan.

Mr. MILLER, of California. According to McClellan and other engineers. I do not know that McClellan is the best engineer in the world, but I know that first-class engineers throughout the world prefer granite to any kind of sandstone, and this is the first time I have ever known an engineer to recommend the lining of a dock with concrete. Concrete does well enough for the foundation upon which the lining shall rest, but in shoring up your ship you want a hard material for the supports to rest upon; otherwise it will disintegrate and break off, and after a while you have nothing but a slope without any benches on which to place your supports. It is considered the very worst thing that could be done with this dock. If it is completed as begun—and it is now more than half done—of granite, it will be one of the finest docks in the world and will last as long as a dock is needed. It is the only dock the Government owns or ever expects to own on the Pacific coast, and it ought to be completed of the best material. It is always economy to build of the best material.

Mr. FARLEY. I understand the question to be on agreeing to the amendment of the committee after the word "granite."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask to have it divided?

Mr. ALLISON. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that they are voting whether we shall expend $500,000 or a million dollars on this dock on which we have already spent a million and a half.

Mr. FARLEY. In answer to that proposition I will suggest to the honorable Senator whether if you are building a dry-dock going to cost the amount which he suggests, you had not better build it out of substantial material than to put in material that will require a continuous appropriation hereafter to keep the dock in repair and order.

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing to leave that whole question to the engineers of the Navy, who know or ought to know something about it, and not interfere with them by legislation.

Mr. FARLEY. Up to this time the whole of that dock has been built of granite, and the persons having the construction of the dock in charge believe that the dock would be more lasting, more substantial, if continued of the same kind of material than if you put in artificial stone or concrete. The truth is you would have to continue appropriations for the dock the next twenty years if you put in any other material than granite.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks that the following words shall be left in the bill:

And the said dock shall be completed of granite.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to decide whether or not this is a divisible question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think it is; the Chair thinks it is all one question.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

Mr. FARLEY. The committee propose to amend by striking out:

And the said dock shall be completed of granite—

And then comes—

unless the Secretary of the Navy shall, upon reinvestigation of the subject, be convinced that the dock can be completed with equal strength and durability with other material for less money.

What I propose is to agree to the amendment of the committee after the word "granite," commencing with the word "unless," in line 1557, and going down to the end of the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the words after "granite" qualify the preceding words.

Mr. HOAR. Cannot the Senator from California move to strike out the paragraph now in the bill after the word "granite," which perfects that section which the committee propose to strike out, before the vote is taken on striking out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done by a motion to strike out the last part of the clause. Does the Senator from California move to strike out the words:

Unless the Secretary of the Navy shall, upon reinvestigation of the subject, be convinced that the dock can be completed with equal strength and durability with other material for less money?

Mr. FARLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to ask the Senator from California if it should turn out that this could be completed with other material for less money, would he not be willing that the Government should do it, or is he determined to have granite, whatever it costs? It seems to me that is a most amazing proposition.

Mr. FARLEY. That question is not involved in this amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am perfectly willing to let this language stand as it comes from the House. I am not afraid of the Secretary of the Navy ever deciding that concrete is as good as granite.

Mr. FARLEY. I should hope not.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Not if he is in his right mind, which I suppose he is generally. I would prefer to have it constructed of granite and put in this bill so, but if there is no way to get at it—

Mr. FARLEY. But there is a way to get at it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move to strike out all the words in the paragraph after the word "granite."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause comes from the House as a whole, and the Senator moves to strike out beginning with the words "unless the Secretary of the Navy," &c.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to understand the effect of this motion. The committee is in favor of striking out also the additional words.

Mr. FARLEY. But we are not in favor of striking out the additional words.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the motion of the Senator from California to strike out the words after "granite," in line 1557, to the end of the clause.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the yeas were 18.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think one side of the House or the other do not understand how to vote.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays. I see one side votes and the other does not. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish the Chair would state the proposition. I supposed I was voting with the committee when I first rose, but I find the chairman voting the other way, and I thought I knew how I was voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California moves to strike out, after the word "granite," in line 1557, the words:

Unless the Secretary of the Navy shall, upon reinvestigation of the subject, be convinced that the dock can be completed with equal strength and durability with other material for less money.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to submit how can you strike out part when the pending question is to strike out the whole of that clause.

Mr. LOGAN. That is it exactly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I say it is not in order to strike out a part.

Mr. HOAR. You can perfect the part to be stricken out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That vote cannot be taken, in my judgment.

Mr. HOAR. Before the motion to strike out an entire section of the bill is put a motion to perfect that section first by striking out part of it and leaving the rest is in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the Senator may not recollect that the part of the bill as it came from the House was the whole, and the committee has moved to strike out from the word "and," in line 1556, as I understand.

Mr. HOAR. The bill that comes from the House is already before the Senate. The amendment of the committee is nothing more nor less than an amendment moved by a single Senator. It has no weight except that the question is taken on the first. The committee move to amend by striking out four and a half lines, and that paragraph may be amended, if the Senate please, before the question of striking it out is put. It is proposed to perfect it by striking out part of it. There is no more doubt about the proposition than there is that two and two make four.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think there is doubt about it. The committee's amendment is to strike out from the word "and." Now it is moved to strike out a part of that. I think the committee's amendment is the first in order to be voted on. You cannot strike out a part of what the committee has already moved to strike out, because the committee's amendment embraces more, and if the Senate refuse to strike that out it ends it.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will reflect a moment he will perceive that if a vote is taken on that and it is stricken out, all parts of it go. It would then be impossible for any Senator to reach it. The only time to reach it and perfect the matter to be stricken out is while the motion to strike out is pending. On the same principle, though a motion to strike out and insert is by the rules indivisible, you can move to strike out part of the matter, and in moving to strike out you can perfect the matter proposed to be stricken out before the motion is put to strike out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, yes; but in this case there is no motion to perfect; the only motion is to strike out, and that is a very different proposition. Nobody moves to perfect. The motion is to strike out less than the committee propose to strike out.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will say to the Senator that we propose to do one thing at a time.

Mr. FERRY. The motion of the Senator from California to strike out a part is in his judgment to perfect the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. MILLER, of California. And that will be followed by another motion.

Mr. FERRY. Then the question will recur, if that is stricken out, on the amendment of the committee shorn by the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is wasting time to discuss this question of order. I hope the Chair will decide it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no point of order raised.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then what is the discussion about?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are asked for on the motion of the Senator from California to strike out the words:

Unless the Secretary of the Navy shall, upon reinvestigation of the subject, be convinced that the dock can be completed with equal strength and durability with other material for less money.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Before we vote upon that I desire to ask a parliamentary question. Suppose these words are not stricken out, would it be still in order to take the question on striking out these words in connection with the other words proposed to be stricken out by the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; if they are not stricken out then the question will recur on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. If they are stricken out the question will be on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the words "and the said dock shall be completed of granite."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask a question of the Chair. Is it not proper to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from California so as to include the other words in line 1556 from the word "and," including the whole clause the committee recommend to strike out? I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from California by striking out also the words "and the said dock shall be completed of granite."

Mr. FERRY. That would be an amendment in the third degree, and is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, it would not be in order. The question is on striking out the words "unless the Secretary of the Navy shall," &c., on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on striking out the rest of the words proposed to be stricken out by the committee, namely, after the word "dollars," in line 1556, the words:

And the said dock shall be completed of granite.

Mr. FARLEY. We do not wish to strike out the rest of the clause, which provides that the dock shall be completed of granite. Those words should be retained in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out these words.

The question being put, there were on a division—yeas 20, nays 25.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I want to ascertain whether when engineers of the Navy propose to save $450,000 in the construction of a work that costs two million and a half the Senate is going to force him to construct it of material which he says does not increase its efficacy, for the benefit of a granite quarry.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That statement is gratuitous. It is not for the benefit of a granite quarry. I wish to know if the Senator from Iowa knows of a dry-dock in any part of the world built of concrete?

Mr. LOGAN. Of what are they built?

Mr. MILLER, of California. They are built of stone, of granite. Even the locks of small canals are built of stone of some kind or other, and never of concrete, because it disintegrates. You might as well build the steps of the Capitol here and other buildings with that material. In the first place, Mr. Menocal, who is the author of this proceeding, is not an engineer of the Navy.

Mr. ALLISON. He is an eminent civil engineer.

Mr. MILLER, of California. He is too eminent for us entirely. If we are going to build this dock we want to build it of the best material or not have it built at all. If you want to strike out the appropriation, strike it out, but do not build a perishable, crumbling, miserable dock which will not stand the heavy weights of ships, and which must be repaired every year. There is no economy in doing that.

Mr. HALE. What the Senator wants is the most money expended. That is all there is of it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I want money enough expended to build a dock of the most durable sort. I am as economical in the use of Government money as is the Senator from Maine or any Senator here.

Mr. ALLISON. I only ask for the yeas and nays, and want a vote on striking out the words which the committee propose to strike out.

Mr. HAWLEY. I cannot abstain from saying a word or two after what has been said, for I am altogether unconvinced that any board of engineers anywhere would say that a dry-dock could be or ought to be built of concrete. I have seen a good many; I am not an expert; but I do not know of a dry-dock built of concrete anywhere. If it has been discovered that we have a concrete that is better than granite, let us substitute it in all our public buildings. It would be very much better in a public building or in public grounds than in a dry-dock, where it is not liable to be stricken, pumped, torn, and worn, as it must be in a dry-dock. This having been partly built of granite, I am utterly unable to see any logic or sense in the proposition that concrete shall be used in completing it, especially in lining it with concrete. If the interior of it were constructed of concrete there would be some sense in the proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all we propose. It is for the inside lining of the dry-dock.

Mr. HAWLEY. How far in?

Mr. LOGAN. Only a small portion of the way.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is to be the thickness of the lining of granite?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know. The engineer who has charge of it will know that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know of any docks like that, but as that intimation has been made, I think it is quite as likely that there is a job on the part of some man with regard to concrete as that there is on the part of granite.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would not vote to build a dock of any material, either of granite or concrete, but I would leave it to the Secretary of the Navy. I hope that the words proposed to be stricken out by the committee will be stricken out and that the bill will not be left as it came from the House. We order the dry-dock to be built. We are not capable here of deciding of what material it shall be built. That is for the engineers who instruct the Secretary of the Navy. I am in favor of leaving the matter in his hands, which will be the case, I understand, if these words are stricken out.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But when the Secretary of the Navy tells me that if the bill is passed without any instruction as to what material he shall use he will build the dock of concrete, I want something put in here to compel him to build it of granite. That is the reason why I am insisting on retaining the words in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. How much of this work is already done? This is a provision for completion, not for construction.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is built about half the length with granite, and now it is proposed to finish it out with concrete.

Mr. FARLEY. I simply want to say in addition to what has been already said by my colleague and the Senator from Connecticut that I am satisfied myself, although I have not the documents before me, that there are parties in my State who are seeking to put what is called artificial stone in this dry-dock. The Senator from Iowa asks, if you can save three or four hundred thousand dollars in the cost of building this dry-dock by putting in different material from granite, why not do it? My answer is simply that you may save perhaps that much money at the present time in completing this dock, but the material you put in will not last like granite, and in less than ten years you will have again to make appropriations to keep the dock in repair. If you build it with a substantial material like granite, such as is already in the dock, such as it was commenced with, with such material as has been put into it all the time, then you will have a substantial dry-dock that will last almost to time immemorial. If you put this sort of concrete or artificial stone into that dock you will have to continue your appropriations, and while it may be a present saving, I suggest to the Senator from Iowa it will not be a permanent saving.

Mr. HALE. I believe in granite as a material for permanent construction of public works, over and above all other materials. Some of the finest buildings erected by the Government in the last ten years have been built of granite coming from the shores of my own State and from the district that I formerly represented. I am always proud to inspect and look at those buildings; but I have never asked, and no man who believes in granite ought to ask, to put it into a legislative bill that granite shall be preferred to anything else. It is so good a material that it will stand the test of scrutiny in the administrative departments, and that ought to be the rule here. If the Navy Department believes upon all the considerations that can be urged here, or there, or elsewhere, that granite is the material to finish this dry-dock, it ought to go in. But much as I believe in granite, I think we ought not to put in here any constraining clause in favor of granite, or marble, or anything else, but leave that to the discretion of the Department, assisted by the engineers; and granite will hold its own on that competition. To put it in here is a thing it seems to me shifting from the administrative department, where it ought to be settled, to the legislative department, where it ought not to be settled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded by the Senator from Iowa on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the words "and the said dock shall be completed of granite."

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I announce my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.]

The roll-call was concluded; and the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 31; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1561, after the word "stations," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty;" in line 1562, after the word "dollars," to strike out "$50,000 of which may be used" and insert "and $50,000 additional, which shall be used only;" so as to make the clause read:

For navy-yards and stations, $150,000, and $50,000 additional, which shall be used only in the care and preservation of such yards or stations as the Secretary of the Navy may deem expedient to close.

Mr. BAYARD. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the propriety of striking out in line 1563 the words "and $50,000 additional, which shall be used only in the care and preservation of such yards or stations as the Secretary of the Navy may deem expedient to close." As yesterday he was relieved of that discretion, there is no necessity to provide for it here.

Mr. ALLISON. I will modify the amendment by inserting "as may be closed." That conforms it to the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I do not understand that any will be closed.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether any will be or not. If any shall be, then this amendment will apply; if not, of course the amendment will not apply.

Mr. BAYARD. Let the Secretary report the amendment as suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 1565, after the word "stations," it is proposed to strike out the words "as the Secretary of the Navy may deem expedient to close" and insert "as may be closed;" so as to read:

For navy-yards and stations, $150,000, and $50,000 additional, which shall be used only in the care and preservation of such yards or stations as may be closed.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think that reaches the case.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is nothing to be gained by that change in the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday the objection made by the Senator from Delaware—and the Senate quite agreed with him—was giving the discretion to the Secretary of the Navy to close these yards. My amendment seems to be in accord with that idea. It leaves no discretion in the Secretary of the Navy. I quite agree with the Senator from Delaware that there should be no discretion allowed in this bill, inasmuch as we struck it out in the other. I want the two to be in accord. Therefore we simply provide that this additional appropriation shall be used for such as may be closed. I do not undertake to say how these navy-yards may be closed, whether by legislation, by the President, or by any other mode.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if there is any authority in the naval bill to close any of these yards now?

Mr. ALLISON. The naval bill is in a state where it is not passed; at least it is hanging up between the two Houses.

Mr. SEWELL. Then I move to amend the amendment by adding the words "under authority of law."

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That will cover it.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not dispute with Senators. I suppose, of course, these navy-yards will not be closed in violation of law. I hope not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1566, to insert:

For the navy-yard at New London, Connecticut: For quay-wall along the river front, in connection with present wharf, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Before we pass from the navy-yards I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the recommendations of the Government with respect to the Pensacola yard. I gave notice of an amendment, and I desire to refer to the matter now.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator that there are several amendments relating to navy-yards, and that we pass on in the reading of the bill and conclude the amendments of the committee. The Senator's amendment will not be prejudiced by anything we do.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1569, to insert:

For the new naval observatory: To commence the erection of a new naval observatory on the site heretofore purchased therefor, in accordance with plans approved by the commission authorized by the act of February 4, 1880, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 1574:

For the United States Naval Academy: To prepare and perfect plans, specifications, and estimates for rebuilding and improving the quarters of the cadets, the recitation-hall, the mess-hall, and for repairing the quarters of the superintendent at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, in accordance with the recommendations of the Board of Visitors of 1882, $3,000; said plans, specifications, and estimates to be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Navy in December next.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1584, to insert:

For Naval Museum of Hygiene: For rent of quarters necessary for the preservation of objects already collected, transportation of contributions intended for exhibition, preparation of models and drawings to be used in the illustration of sanitary science and its progress affecting the Navy, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1590, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the owners of the Norwegian bark Vasa for damages sustained by said vessel in a collision with the United States steamer Hartford, in March, 1877, $133.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting at its close:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay to Isaac A. Sylvester, for the losses and damages sustained by him on account of the collision of the United States sloop of war Lancaster with the drill-platform and sloop Derry, at Gangway Rock, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, the sum of $2,940.

This amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. ALLISON. The committee examined into that matter. I think that probably it is a just claim, but this class of claims have been hitherto paid out of what is known as the contingent fund of the Navy Department.

Mr. ROLLINS. The Secretary of the Navy says:

This amount ($2,940) is deemed to be justly due to Mr. Sylvester, but as the Department cannot, in view of the current wants of the service, pay this sum from any appropriations for the present year, I respectfully recommend that a special appropriation of the sum of $2,940 be made by Congress.

Mr. HALE. I hope the chairman of the committee will not make a point upon this amendment. I think it is a very meritorious claim, and there is no money in the contingent fund for its payment, as the Secretary of the Navy says.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1595, to insert:

For repairing bridge over College Creek, on the Government farm, at Annapolis, Maryland, to be expended under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1599, to insert:

For repairing and extending wharf and the erection of boat-houses on Coasters' Harbor Island, $5,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish simply to inquire whether the United States has acquired title to Coasters' Harbor Island. I intended to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, but I forgot it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The State of Rhode Island has ceded that island to the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the United States accepted it? Has the United States authorized anybody to accept that island?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know. I do not think it has.

Mr. HAWLEY. Coasters' Island is quite a considerable ground. The approaches to it are not very good. If it is to be made so that vessels are to go up to it, there is a great deal of excavation and wharf-building to be done.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, the water is more than fifty feet deep against it.

Mr. HAWLEY. No Secretary of the Navy and no other person has been authorized to accept this additional navy-yard ground, or training-ship ground, or whatever it may be.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Connecticut gets five times as much as we do in this amendment. If the Senator raises the question on us we shall have to raise it on him, so I think he had better not raise it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no bargain made anywhere.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, I have no bargain made.

Mr. HAWLEY. I merely asked for information. I did not know.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Government can have it whenever it chooses.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know whether we have any title to it or not. We are using it as a training-school. It is a naval station. I suppose we have title enough to use it for the purposes for which it is now being used. I do not think there is any trouble about the title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1602, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain on what terms can be had such additional lands and water front contiguous to the Norfolk navy-yard as are deemed necessary for the construction of a wet-dock, and such other works as are demanded for the sufficient capacity and efficiency of that yard; and that he report the result of such investigations to the next session of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1610, to insert:

To defray the expenses of removing and transporting to the United States from their present place of burial the remains of Lieutenant-Commander George W. De Long, United States Navy, and his companions, eleven in all, and for their proper burial within the United States, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1623, to insert:

For the construction of a passenger elevator for the Interior Department building, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1625, to insert:

For the erection of a brick and metal fire-proof building, to be used and occupied by the Pension Bureau, in accordance with plans to be approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, under the supervision of General M. C. Meigs, late Quartermaster-General, United States Army, retired, $150,000, in addition to the sum of $250,000 appropriated by the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1881, which is hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose. Said building to be erected on the open space opposite the Smithsonian Grounds, at the intersection of Ohio and Louisiana avenues and Tenth and Twelfth streets, in the city of Washington; Provided, That the Attorney-General shall approve the title of the United States thereto.

Mr. BECK. I ask that that provision may be passed over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. PLATT rose.

Mr. BECK. I did not see the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. PLATT.] He and others desired to look into the matter a little further. The bill will not likely be finished to-night, and I hope there will be no objection to passing over the amendment so that it may be fairly examined.

Mr. PLATT. I rose for the purpose of making the same request of the chairman of the committee, that the amendment might be passed over until we conclude the consideration of the other amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing to pass it over, but before doing so I wish to offer an amendment which I think ought to be agreed to. I move to insert in line 1640, after the word "Washington:"

Or on such other Government reservation as the aforesaid commissioners may in their judgment deem for the best interests of the Government.

Mr. PLATT. If I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee for a moment, I had prepared an amendment to come in at that point in these words:

Or upon such other Government land in said city as may be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions, and General M. C. Meigs.

Mr. ALLISON. For myself I am entirely willing to accept the suggestion made by the Senator from Connecticut. I am willing that that may be inserted.

Mr. PLATT. I will then offer this amendment, which seems to be acceptable to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BECK. I desire to make a suggestion. Is it well to take the chief of a bureau instead of the Secretary of War? I think it ought to be the head of a Department.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there is some force in what the Senator from Kentucky suggests. The Secretary of the Interior is the head of the Department having charge of pensions. The first part of the proposition of the committee leaves the matter in the hands of a commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, and General Meigs. I think perhaps it had better be left in that way.

Mr. PLATT. I am not very particular about the officers who shall have charge of the selection of another site, if one should be thought to be necessary. I simply want the building which is to be erected for the Pension Bureau located in a healthy place. I do not know that the place designated is unhealthy, but I think there ought to be some discretion somewhere to select another place, if it should be found upon consideration that it is an unhealthy place. There are fifteen hundred clerks to go into that building. The location is in somewhat near proximity to the famous Kidwell flats, which are supposed to exhale death and destruction all through the year.

It seems to me it is a fair question to inquire whether, if those flats are productive of malarial influences, as it is asserted upon all hands they are, it would be quite a healthy place for the building, especially during the months of August and September. All I desire to do in the matter is to provide that some other place may be selected, if that should be found to be so upon examination. I do not know that I ever heard of that place being selected until the sundry civil bill was brought into the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Connecticut think it wise to intrust these three Government officers with the power over all the Government lands in Washington?

Mr. PLATT. That was the reason why I desired that the matter might lie over until to-morrow morning. I had some trouble about it; and yet I do not think there can be a great deal of difficulty. My reason for placing the Commissioner of Pensions on the commission was that though he is not the head of a Department, he has more business under his charge, and more power, and more responsibility than the heads of some of the Departments have. I thought it quite proper to insert his name in the commission, but I do not know that I will insist upon it. I think I will take the suggestion of the chairman and accede to his amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Inserting "the Secretary of War" in place of "the Commissioner of Pensions?"

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say one word in justification of the amendment of the committee. I think nearly every member of the committee has personally investigated the square on which it is proposed to erect this building. So far from its being in the region of malarial influences, what are known as the Kidwell Bottoms, it is farther away from that region than the Smithsonian Institution, or the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, or the Treasury Department, or the War Department, or even the White House.

I will say that General Meigs himself investigated this ground, looked it over, and upon his statement I became satisfied myself, as I think did the whole committee, that this is a very excellent place for the Pension Office. It is contiguous to Pennsylvania avenue, Ninth street, and Twelfth street; cars run all around it. It is in an absolutely open space, fronting on the south the Smithsonian grounds, and has wide streets all about it. But if there is any question about it, I desire that the commission shall have authority to select ground elsewhere. What the committee desire is that the Pension Office shall be built in order to stop the enormous rents that we are paying in this city for buildings to be used by the Pension Bureau and other offices of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am surprised to hear the Senator from Iowa say that this is a desirable place for a public building. If I remember it aright (I only know it from the locality) it is a low place near the market-houses, and about the most obscure part of the city.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that it is two squares from the market and a square and a half from Eleventh street and Pennsylvania avenue, and about eight inches lower than Pennsylvania avenue itself.

Mr. SHERMAN. Pennsylvania avenue has been covered with water to the extent of two and three feet deep.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that to put a building containing a large number of men in that low place would not be a wise selection. I should rather strike that out and leave it to these gentlemen to say where the location should be. I have not been on the ground, only I know its locality.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from Ohio before expressing an absolute opinion will take an opportunity of looking at the place.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have known it for a long time.

Mr. ALLISON. I think myself it is a very good location. I do not say that it is a specially good location. I would prefer a place, and I have no doubt the Commissioner of Pensions would, higher up, on K street or on Massachusetts avenue. That would be a little more agreeable, I have no doubt, but land in that region is pretty expensive, and the street-cars do not run in that direction quite as conveniently as they do in the direction of this proposed building.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa whether I correctly understood the proposed location to be north of the Smithsonian. It is north of the Smithsonian, I understand?

Mr. ALLISON. It is north of the Smithsonian, between the Smithsonian and Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. VOORHEES. Therefore it is upon lower ground than the Smithsonian. It is in what might be in propriety termed a low throatway of ground. There is the most singular infatuation here that I have ever known on the subject of getting that low piece of ground to build public buildings on. There is not a Senator here who has not seen it overflowed; there is not a Senator here but who has seen it very often in the last two or three years surrounded by water so that persons upon it have to be released by boats.

Yet, with a pertinacity perfectly wonderful to me, you can hardly propose a public building of any kind but what somebody wants to build it down on that piece of reclaimed ground called the Island. It has been reclaimed in the course of ages past from the sea, and the structure or quality of its soil shows it to be of that character.

To begin with, a foundation cannot be secured there with any certainty.

I do not know how large this building is to be; it must be a very considerable structure; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate again, as I did some time ago, to the fact that right down here at the foot of Capitol Hill, which is higher ground than where this building is proposed, in seeking a foundation for the monumental structure of modern statuary they had to descend through rotten earth forty feet before they could, by spiles and otherwise, find a foundation. With the pumps going all the time to keep the water from drowning the workmen, they got a foundation at last. That is the fact, and all the way down from there to the river the soil is of that quality.

Why it is that gentlemen desire to have buildings erected, even if they could get a foundation, on low ground, so that they will be overlooked by splendid heights all around them, is a mystery to me.

There is plenty of ground about this city. We are favored here. There is first one rise and then another where ground can be procured reasonably and where we can have slightly buildings. For my part I confess that I am weary of building along the brow of this first rise from the low bottoms; and to do it, to make a hole in the side of the hill as it were, as the Treasury was built and as the new State Department is being built, instead of going to some slightly rise or eminence in and about this splendid city.

I do not know whether it is the desire to put buildings in malarious ground where the breathing will be bad or what it is that wins for this soft piece of ground so much fair favor as a building spot. I admit that there are here and there little rises that can be utilized for a low building like the Museum, not a very heavy one, and the Smithsonian, and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. There is a little ridge running across the Island that can be utilized, and has been for buildings of that kind; but I do say, after having given some attention to that part of the city as a place for building, that which is proposed here is near the old bed of the canal; it is nearly the lowest spot there is down there; and I doubt if a foundation can be got there with an excavation of less than fifty feet.

I am for this building, but I do insist that it shall not be tied down to that spot; and I suggest to the committee, with an earnest desire to expedite the public business, that this amendment should be left so that the officers in whose charge it may be will have a discretion to select a good, sanitary, wholesome piece of ground.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Indiana must have been out when I offered an amendment looking to the very purpose which he has indicated.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg pardon, I have been out of the Chamber. If there is an amendment of that kind pending I want my speech to be understood as supporting the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the amendment which I suggested may be reported as it has been modified.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After the word "Washington," in line 1640, it is proposed to insert:

Or upon such other Government reservation in said city as may be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, and General M. C. Meigs.

Mr. PLATT. I inquire whether that is satisfactory to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BECK. It is all to be passed over until the morning, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the understanding, as the Chair thought.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut to put into his amendment that the site may be selected by these officers "with the approval of the President." This may be a very small matter with reference to these particular men, but to give any board of officers a right to put a large public building on any place they choose, right at the Capitol steps if they see fit, or to take Judiciary Square, or Franklin Square, or Lafayette Square, these officers being the officers specially interested in the building, it seems to me, is a bad precedent. It is a very important power, though it may be exercised harmlessly in the present case.

Mr. PLATT. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. I understand that this whole matter is to be passed over until to-morrow. I think there can be no objection to the amendment modified as has been suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MORRILL. Clearly what ought to be done would be to take the ground that we already have purchased of the Freedman's Bank and extend the building there.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will allow me to say that we considered that proposition very fully. The trouble with that ground is that it is not large enough and that it is needed for other purposes. The truth is we ought in this very bill to begin four or five buildings in this city, instead of paying, as we are now paying, nearly $200,000 per annum for rents, and enormous rents in many instances. That ground ought to be built upon, and it was only the desire of the committee to keep this bill from being unusually large in the aggregate amount that we preferred not to bring in a provision to erect a building upon that site.

I think a building ought to be erected there, but it will not be half large enough for this Pension Office when erected. There are plenty of other uses to which that ground can be applied. I hope the Senator from Vermont or some other member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will make a proposition to erect a suitable structure on that vacant space between the Attorney-General's Office and the White House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over informally.

Mr. BECK. I understand now that the Senator from Connecticut and others do not care about its going over. I merely asked that it go over for the accommodation of Senators who desired to look into it.

Mr. PLATT. I think, perhaps, it is as well to dispose of it, since it meets the approval of the committee in the form I have proposed to amend it.

Mr. ALLISON. We have no care about the particular ground. What we desire is the building, and that it shall be erected on some spot where the Government owns the land.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PENDLETON. Let it be read as modified.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "Washington," in line 1640, it is proposed to insert:

Or upon such other Government reservation in said city as may be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, and General M. C. Meigs, subject to the approval of the President.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1648, after the word "grounds," to strike out "including permanent approaches to the House and Senate wings;" in line 1650, after the word "of," to strike out "landscape architect;" and in line 1651, after the word "workmen," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving the Capitol grounds: For continuing the work of the improvement of the Capitol grounds, pay of one clerk, and wages of mechanics, gardeners, and workmen, $25,000.

Mr. VEST. I trust that the Senate will reject these amendments proposed by the committee. The Joint Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have considered in detail and with great care the expediency of making these improvements on the wings of the Capitol. Every Senator present must know from personal observation that these improvements must be made. Twenty-five thousand dollars is utterly inadequate to this work. If the amount is reduced from $75,000 to $25,000 it is simply saying that the work shall not be done, at least for the present.

In regard to the next amendment of the committee, which I might as well discuss now very briefly, the committee propose to strike out any appropriation for the landscape architect. I undertake to say that he is one of the best officers in the employ of the Government. He has made these grounds a marvel of beauty. He stands at the head of his profession, and he has never received more than one full year's salary. For what purpose the committee now propose to virtually abolish this officer I am unable to see. They leave a clerk here, for whom there is no necessity really. There is not half so much necessity for a clerk as there is for the employment of this architect. It is simply impossible to perfect these grounds and make the necessary improvements unless the services of this official are retained.

I have not heard from the committee what their reasons may be, and I cannot imagine how the beauty of these grounds is to be preserved, how they are to be made worthy of this magnificent building and of this great nation, if the services of the man whose genius and skill have done more than all other causes combined to put them in their present condition, imperfect though it is, are to be dispensed with. I hope that these amendments will not be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am very certain that the Committee on Appropriations had not the information that was necessary to decide upon this subject. It was very carefully considered by the Committee on Appropriations in the House, and if it had been supposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate that there was any disposition to cut this down from the small appropriation made by the House they certainly would have appeared before the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Instead of the full sum appropriated by the House it really ought to be a sum very much larger, for we really ought to complete the approaches to this Capitol both upon the front and upon the wings. Of this appropriation of $75,000, $50,000 will be required to be spread over the grounds to put on more stone-work and to make various improvements that are already in progress; and only $25,000 was intended to cover the approaches from the two ends at the Senate and House wings of the Capitol. Every one knows the awkward condition they are now in, and it is very desirable that they should be improved for the convenience of Senators and members of the House.

I trust that the committee will not insist upon their amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have no doubt the Senator from Vermont states correctly when he states that the Committee on Appropriations knew nothing about this. Of course we did not know as much about it as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but we believed that it was not a wise thing to enter upon the permanent approaches to the House and Senate for the reason that we knew that to complete these approaches would cost about $600,000, and we did not believe that the sum of $75,000 was worth while as an amount to be applied to such a purpose. I have learned that the only object of this appropriation is to arrange the grounds on the north wing of the Capitol where we enter now to the main eastern entrance and also on the like wing of the House of Representatives. If that is the only object of the appropriation, I do not know that I have any great objection. I think we had better fix the amount the same as was fixed last year, $60,000.

Mr. MORRILL. That will not do anything, because it will take $50,000 for the completion of the stone walls along about the grounds.

Mr. ALLISON. The landscape architect stated that he could build the wall as suggested in this paragraph for much less than $25,000.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; but he said he could not build both of them for $25,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I know. Is $50,000 required for these two walls?

Mr. MORRILL. No; I do not know precisely the amount required, but $50,000 is required for the other improvements that are going on on the central grounds and other places.

Mr. ALLISON. I will modify the amendment of the committee by inserting "sixty" instead of "seventy-five," and let the Senate do as it chooses.

Mr. MORRILL. That will not be enough.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont, not in any spirit of criticism, what is the cost of keeping the grounds in order, if he knows, without any improvement upon them at all?

Mr. MORRILL. I know that there is not a sufficient amount so that they can be kept in such order as they ought to be; but the precise amount that is expended to keep them in order I do not know.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me we ought, at least, to have, out of the appropriation we make, the grounds kept in good fair order. They look to me like an abandoned patch just now. Certainly there are no private grounds that I know of anywhere in any country where it rains where the evidence of drought is more visible than on these grounds at this moment. Looking back now nearly six years that I have been here, and considering the large sum of money appropriated every year, it does seem to me that a very considerable portion of it must have been used after the fashion that Mr. Girard, I think it was, was said to have employed a man who wanted employment, to take coal out of his bin and put it back again. I cannot certainly see, with the eyes I have been blessed with, that very much has been done with a very large sum of money.

My idea about it would be—and I express it with the utmost deference, not only to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but the chairman of the committee, for whose judgment and taste I have the highest respect—that we ought to appropriate a sum of money enough to keep the grounds in order, and it ought to be applied to that purpose. Then we shall know whether what we appropriate is properly spent or not. It seems now we are appropriating a certain sum which can be used one way or the other, according as the fever for improvements or the fever for keeping up the grounds is uppermost, and the consequence is that we do not get the grounds kept in good shape and we do not get the improvements made on them.

I have seen the plan suggested by Mr. Olmsted. I do not want to disparage him by saying that I would indorse it at all, though it seems to me on the whole pretty fair, but we ought to do the work in some way so that we may get during a twelvemonth something that is completed visibly, perceptibly, for the money we spend. As it is now, doing a little here and a little there, tearing down and building up, putting up a few curbstones here, and a few there, we do not seem to make any real, tangible, substantial progress in the work of improving and beautifying these grounds and making this Capitol what it ought to be.

I admit much ought to be done. I should be glad to see that unsightly deformity on the west front of the Capitol removed or in some way modified, but it seems to me that we are pursuing the matter now in a way that does not yield any result.

Mr. MORRILL. If I shall live, I will endeavor to have a sum sufficient appropriated next year that will satisfy the Senator from Kansas. But certainly according to his suggestion there should not be any diminution from this little sum that is proposed, barely $25,000 for the approaches on the ends of the wings of the Capitol, and these should be made whether the terrace is completed or not. We want better approaches on each end of the Capitol for the House and for the Senate. I trust the Senate will be unanimous in favor of retaining the House provision.

Mr. BECK. I consented to striking down the amount to the small sum now given in order to allow the Capitol grounds to be let alone for a year. I knew very well that if the language "including permanent approaches to the House and Senate wings" remained, it could be construed to mean to make the beginning of these permanent approaches of which we have had some beautiful pictures on the west side of the Capitol, which would cost in my judgment several hundred thousand dollars—how many I do not know. If we are going to make these permanent approaches, fifty, or sixty, or seventy thousand dollars is not more than enough to tear up what we already have, and then we should be in a condition where we should be obliged to give whatever was asked for. I do not want to make approaches to the Capitol in that way.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Kentucky will understand that this does not tear up anything. It merely appropriates $25,000 for these approaches.

Mr. BECK. I do not know whether it does or not, for there is nothing before us to indicate. Approaches have been made from Maryland avenue and Pennsylvania avenue, and steps have been laid and steps have been torn up again, and side-walls have been built.

Mr. MORRILL. Nothing has been torn up since the present landscape architect has had charge; not a foot of earth has been changed or moved since he has had charge.

Mr. BECK. We had steps made three or four feet wide at one time, and a man could not step from one to the other; and they have been changed within the last year or two, I know, and I think the change is a good one. These grand approaches that are spoken of here may be according to the very plan that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has hung up in his room for extending the west front out so as to provide for the Library. I do not want to approach matters that way. If we are going to invest a large sum of money to make approaches to the Capitol, say so. If you are not going to do it, let them alone.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Kentucky mean to say that this touches that matter?

Mr. BECK. The western approach, the plan of which I have seen, will cost three hundred or four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. VEST. It will not cost that, I am sure.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator tell me how much those structures on the west side cost? Will he guess within $20,000? Will he say that $75,000 would pay for them, or will he say that they are worth seventy-five cents now that they are there?

Mr. VEST. That is not the question before the Senate.

Mr. BECK. The question before the Senate is the approaches to the Capitol, and I want to know what sort of approaches are to be made and what is going to be spent for these approaches before I vote money to tear the ground up. That is what I want to get at, and until it is determined, until we have some plan, some information, I want the Capitol grounds to be let alone for a little while. If good approaches are to be given, let us have them, let us see the plan of them, and let us know what they are going to cost.

I know the Senator from Vermont has been extremely anxious to have grand approaches made on the west side, and we have had the plans laid down, and I know the Senator from Massachusetts has had a grand plan to raise the dome and extend the building out on the west, and if these grand approaches are made they may cut off his plan, and force the Library to be put somewhere else.

I want things done directly. Let us have some information, and if we cannot get it, I am opposed to making appropriations. Here was a thing built down in the grounds on the west side of the Capitol, going from our wing to Pennsylvania avenue. What was that for? I heard it was built for a monkey-house. [Laughter.] I do not know what it is. Then, what was that thing near Senator JONES's house built for? Nobody knows, except to spend money. Then there are those two things built of granite and gilded all over, on the east side of the Capitol, and no Senator here can tell within $20,000 of what they cost. If we can get proper information I will vote any amount of money that is needed. I have tried for five years to find out.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Kentucky tell us why the Committee on Appropriations struck out the appropriation for the landscape architect? Is it proposed that that official shall cease to exist? Do the committee hold that there is no necessity for it, that things shall be left to the laborers?

Mr. BECK. We thought that Mr. Clark, who has charge of these grounds, if the grounds were let alone, could see to it that they were well cared for, and that until some definite plan is established we need not pay $4,000 a year for a landscape architect to come here from New York twice a month to look at things. That is all he does as far as I know.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that he is entirely mistaken in relation to the compensation of the architect. He had but $4,000 to begin with, and he had that only for one year, and renounced one-half of it ever since. He is not a selfish man at all, and I have no doubt he would rather be retained in charge of these works than to be dismissed, even if he had no pay at all. But I think he fully earns his money by coming here and staying as long as he does every season.

Mr. BECK. My information is that Mr. Olmsted is a very able man, and I have no objection to leaving him here to look at it, and paying him any proper sum for coming and looking at it. All I say is that unless we have some definite plan as to how we shall spend the money we had better let things alone. Twenty-five thousand dollars will care for everything until the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds can give us a plan of what they want done, and what the cost of it will be, and how they are going to do it; and until we get that let us content ourselves with taking care of what we have got.

I am willing, as far as I am concerned, to reject the amendment that leaves Mr. Olmsted out, and pay him to look at the grounds and see that nothing is interfered with; and whenever the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds give us a good plan that they themselves will agree on, and tell us what it is going to cost, I shall be willing to vote money; but I have been much astonished and surprised at the structure put in the western grounds on the House side; it looks to me a disgraceful thing, and so with this little concern below on this side coming up to the Capitol. Surely they are of no sort of use. I do not know what they call them.

Then there is the Washington statue on the east side, with those granite things near it with gilding on top. I know they cost a large sum of money, more than is asked for in this bill, from all the information I have, and I never have seen a man yet who could tell me within $20,000 of what they did cost. What they are meant for I do not know. If Mr. Olmsted is going to do any more work of that sort and do any more of these things, I want to see the plan of them and have the approval of the Senator from Vermont and his committee before anything is done, so that somebody may be responsible.

We shall meet here again in December, and we shall find the whole thing torn up, and perhaps it will cost four or five hundred thousand dollars to make the grand approaches on the west, and we cannot stop the work then. I want to do nothing until we are told what is wanted, and then I am willing on a proper plan to vote any amount that is necessary. I believe we had better leave Mr. Olmsted in; I think perhaps it was a mistake to strike him out. I will vote any amount necessary, but I want to know what it is for. In the approaches to the Capitol from Pennsylvania avenue there were broad steps made at one time that had to be changed, and the wall there is no improvement on the old grade as it was when we used to come up here ten years ago. I have no doubt $100,000 has been spent in making those changes; I do not know that that would pay for them; and with these approaches the grounds do not look any better. It is certainly not safe, and until we know what is to be done we can afford to stand still and just keep the grounds in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VEST. I understand in regard to the landscape architect the committee are willing to let that stand in the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky, if his position is right and only money enough is to be provided in this bill to keep up the ordinary repair of the grounds, on what he bases his opinion that it is best that $4,000 a year should be paid to a landscape architect when there is no sort of necessity for him?

Mr. BECK. My information now is that that architect has not charged his full pay, or more than half of it, and that his supervision of these things is necessary, and when we adopt the plan which may be agreed to by Congress next session nothing ought to be done to destroy the harmony of what has been done. This present architect is known to be a man of ability and a man of integrity, as all agree.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand the Senator's position to be that there shall be no change.

Mr. BECK. Until December, when we can have a report from our committee. In the mean time I would rather retain the landscape architect at the salary he wants for supervision over the grounds than to run the risk of having a new man called in. All agree that there is no more competent man than Mr. Olmsted.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will any danger arise from calling in another man?

Mr. BECK. I do not know. It is better to hold on to a man you know is good than to run the risk of a bad one.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Kentucky does no more than justice to Mr. Olmsted, a man connected with the Central Park of New York from the beginning until very lately; called in to take care of Prospect Park in Brooklyn; now in charge of the park work of the city of Boston; in charge of the park work at Buffalo, and also of the Southern Park at Chicago, an architect the most expert in that business in the United States, a man of charming character and the highest ability.

When appropriations were made some time ago and this work was begun he was called in as the man whose advice it was best to have. They put down for him a salary of $4,000. The appropriations were not large enough for the particular work in the style he desired, and he went to the Architect of the Capitol and said, "Put my salary down. It should not be more than $2,000 if you are not going to expend more money than this." And he has not taken it, and does not desire it. He would rather go on and see this work through for nothing than lose the chance of seeing it done and giving it his own special and friendly interest.

The appropriation of $75,000 proposed by the House is small enough. It does not contemplate entering on the larger improvements, the terraces around the whole west front of the Capitol, but has in view only the northeastern corner of the Senate wing and southeast corner of the House wing. Senators will remember there is but a rough plank near the corner of the building. Something has to be done to make that better. And then some of the work is to be on the east front of the Capitol.

The work, so far as has been done within six or eight years around the Capitol, is admirable, and is going to make ultimately of this building and these grounds the most beautiful spot in the world architecturally. Nor is it Mr. Olmsted's own doing. It has been done in consultation with the Architect of the Capitol, with engineers, with landscape gardeners, and with the best talent and taste of the country.

I wish the $75,000 might stay in the bill, just that these two corners may be put in better order within the year, and I am very glad to see the disposition to keep Mr. Olmsted anyhow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri suggests that the words "landscape architect," in line 1650, by unanimous consent, be retained in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Take the amendments as they come.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the first. The words "landscape architect" may be retained instead of stricken out. If there be no objection, the question is on the rest of the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I want to take the vote on the amendment in lines 1648 and 1649 first, including the word "wings," in line 1650. I trust the Senate will retain them all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator wants a separate vote? Mr. MORRILL. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on striking out the words "including permanent approaches to the House and Senate wings."

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Iowa suggested a change of the amount.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggested $60,000, the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. BECK. The approaches alluded to are simply those coming up on the east side and south side, and not the great central work, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the understanding.

Mr. BECK. Then I will not object.

Mr. MORRILL. Then leave the clause as it came from the House. Sixty thousand dollars will not be enough. Fifty thousand dollars is really required for other things, and it will take more than $10,000 to make one approach.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont what other things require $50,000?

Mr. MORRILL. Curbing that yet has to be done.

Mr. ALLISON. Where?

Mr. MORRILL. At various points.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think we ought to spend $50,000 in curbing.

Mr. MORRILL. It is not all for that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to retaining all the words in this paragraph that the Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out, and then to come to the question of what shall be the amount of the appropriation? ["No!" "No!"] There is no objection to retaining all the paragraph except the amount of the appropriation. The question then is on striking out "$75,000" and inserting "$25,000."

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senator from Iowa to put that at $65,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I will compromise on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved to insert $65,000. Is there objection to that? The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 5841) to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6520) in relation to land-patents in the Virginia military district of Ohio.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1845) to authorize the Postmaster-General to extend the mail service in certain cases, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases;

A bill (S. No. 1120) for the relief of Eugene B. Allen;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) requiring the Public Printer to publish certain decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, and agreed to other amendments with amendments in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator in charge of the pending bill to give way for a moment, in order that I may call up the naval appropriation bill and move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following action of the House of Representatives, which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 1, 1882.

Resolved, That the House concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, numbered 7, 26, 28, 29, 32, 33, 37, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 65, and 66, and non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to said bill numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 38, 41, 53, 57, 62, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, and 76; and that it further concur in amendment numbered 63 with an amendment as follows: In line 7 page 21 of said bill, after the word "advantage," insert "with such necessary attachments and appliances as will render redocking of the ships unnecessary;" and that it further concur in amendment numbered 64 with amendments as follows: In line 5 of said amendment, after the word "report," insert "to the Secretary of the Navy," and at the end of said amendment add "and the said Secretary shall transmit said report to Congress at its next session, with his recommendation thereon."

Attest: EDWARD MCPHERSON, Clerk.

Mr. INGALLS. Will not the Senator explain the amendments the House has concurred in?

Mr. HALE. I have been looking over the amendments. They are simply given by number, and I find that the amendments which have been agreed to which I have marked as I have looked through the printed bill are the immaterial amendments, the amendments where verbal corrections that were made, amendments where there was a small increase or decrease of the running appropriations, and amendments of but little account.

Mr. INGALLS. What was the action of the House on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] in regard to the completion of the unfinished iron-clads.

Mr. HALE. I will come to that as I run over the bill. Such amendments as changing "these purposes" to "that purpose," substituting "thirty-five hundred" for "five hundred," "twenty thousand" for "fifteen thousand," are concurred in. There are two amendments where there are agreements with amendments that we may as well agree to.

To the amendment providing for completing the Miantonomoh and the launching to the best advantage of the iron-clad steamers Monadnock, &c., the House have agreed with an amendment declaring that the work shall be done with such appliances that the ships will not need redocking. If the Secretary will read that amendment every Senator remembering the discussion will at once see what its condition is.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 7, page 21 of the bill, after the word "advantage," in the Senate amendment, the House propose to insert:

With such necessary attachments and appliances as will render redocking of the ships unnecessary.

Mr. HALE. So that the amendment will read:

And to the launching to the best advantage, with such necessary attachments and appliances as will render redocking of the ships unnecessary, of the iron-clad steamers Monadnock, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror.

I move that the Senate concur with that amendment of the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is that reducing the amount?

Mr. HALE. Not changing it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The reduction of the amount was in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in this amendment of the House of Representatives to the Senate amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HALE. The next amendment of the Senator from Kentucky reads thus:

That no further steps shall be taken or contracts entered into or approved for the repairs or completion of any of the four iron-clads aforesaid until the further order of Congress; and the naval advisory board, created by this act, is directed to report in detail by the 1st day of December, 1882, as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing the engines, armor, and armaments of said iron-clads, and whether any changes in the original plan or plans should be made, together with the cost of the completion of each according to the plans recommended, if the completion of any of them is recommended.

The House has agreed to that amendment with this amendment: after the word "report" insert "to the Secretary of the Navy," and at the end of the amendment insert:

And the said Secretary shall transmit said report to Congress at its next session with his recommendation thereon.

It seems to me we had better agree to that, and I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in that amendment of the House of Representatives to the Senate amendment?

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HALE. Now I move that the Senate insist on all its other amendments disagreed to by the House and ask for a conference.

Mr. ROLLINS. Cannot we have this bill printed so that we can understand it?

Mr. HALE. It is printed.

Mr. ROLLINS. With these amendments?

Mr. HALE. It is printed with the Senate amendments all numbered. All that anybody needs to do is to send for the bill with the numbers and he will see at once how it stands.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have the bill printed as sent to the House.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to have it printed what the House concurs in and what they non-concur in.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that being done.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let the bill be printed as it stands.

Mr. HALE. The bill is printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move that the Senate insist on its amendments?

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference, and that the bill and amendments be printed with the action of the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee, Mr. HALE, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 29th ultimo approved and signed the act (S. No. 1068) for the relief of certain citizens of Tennessee.

The message also announced that the President had on the 31st ultimo approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions: An act (S. No. 114) to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to Indian traders;

An act (S. No. 314) to designate, classify, and fix the salaries of persons in the railway-mail service;

An act (S. No. 1819) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth C. Custer;

An act (S. No. 838) to grant the right of way for railroad purposes through the lands of the United States powder depot near Dover, New Jersey;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 83) relating to the memorial cards to accompany the memorial address on the life and character of the late James A. Garfield; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the Saint Lawrence River.

RETURN OF REGIMENTAL FLAG.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag which belonged to said regiment, and which is now in the custody of the Secretary of War; and it was read by its title.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire that that resolution shall be put upon its passage now. I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and there is no objection to it whatever.

The joint resolution was, by unanimous consent, considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I offer the following amendment to this joint resolution, to come in at the end:

And the Secretary of War is also authorized and directed to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to said regiment by the citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania, which was captured by the confederate forces on May 12, 1864, at the battle of Spotsylvania, Virginia, and subsequently retaken by the United States troops at the fall of Richmond.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that might be passed as a separate bill without difficulty. It is hardly worth while to encumber the joint resolution.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw the amendment. He can pass that as a separate bill, but do not embarrass this by sending it back to the House at this stage of the session.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Very well; I withdraw the amendment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3506) amending sections 1926 and 1927 of the Revised Statutes so as to extend the limits of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. No. 3668) to authorize a change of record in the case of Lewis Rodrick was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 5841) to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 6520) in relation to land patents in the Virginia military district of Ohio was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. C. G. WILLIAMS of Wisconsin, Mr. WILLIAM W. RICE of Massachusetts, and Mr. P. V. DEUSTER of Wisconsin managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "public lands," in line 1696, to increase the appropriation "for contingent expenses of the office of the surveyor-general of Dakota: for rent of office for the surveyor-general, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses," from $1,500 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1737, to increase the appropriation "for contingent expenses of the office of the surveyor-general of Montana: for rent of office for the surveyor-general, fuel, books, stationery, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses," from $1,500 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1769, after the word "each," to strike out "four hundred and eighty" and insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 each, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1772, to increase the appropriation "for incidental expenses of the several land offices" from $103,000 to $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "claims" in line 1777, to strike out "for indemnity;" and in line 1779, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of agents employed in adjusting claims for swamp lands, and for indemnity for swamp lands, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso from line 1807 to line 1817:

Provided further, That no certificate issued for a deposit of money for the survey of lands under section 2403 of the Revised Statutes and the act approved March 3, 1879, amendatory thereof, shall be received in payment for lands except at the land office in which the lands surveyed for which the deposit was made are subject to entry, and not elsewhere; but this section shall not be held to impair, prejudice, or affect in any manner deposits and contracts made under the provisions of said act prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will not concur in the recommendation of the committee unless some more satisfactory reason can be given for it than I have yet heard. There has been very serious complaint made in regard to the surveys of the public lands. It has been charged on the floor of the Senate that there has been maladministration in regard to these public-land surveys.

I think it is due to the Senate before we concur in striking out a proviso of this character that we should have more of the facts before us than we have now. This provision of the House bill, which seems to be a wise and judicious one, confines all certificates issued to locations within the land districts within which the lands are surveyed. What reasonable objection can ever be to that system? As the laws in force now have heretofore been interpreted, a universal field has been opened up to these certificates; a certificate issued in New Mexico could be taken and located in Washington Territory or Dakota. We have had during the present session, I believe, a resolution of instruction to the Committee on Public Lands to inquire into this matter and investigate it. I have not heard of their report. I should like to know what has become of the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK,] which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, instructing, as I remember, that committee to make an investigation into this subject. In other words, I should like to have some light on this question.

Mr. BECK. I want to have some light on this question too. We sat in the Appropriations Committee room for four or five days devoting the greater part of the time to hearing discussion upon this very subject. I believe the chairman of the committee has communications from the Secretary of the Interior in regard to it; and the views of persons who appeared before us were absolutely conflicting, some taking one view and some the other. I am obliged to say that I changed my mind three or four different times during the discussion as to what was best. If the Senator from Missouri, who is a member of the committee, wants further information about it I want it as well.

I can state generally that for the current year we are paying $12 per linear mile for standard and meander lines. We have reduced that $12 to $9 in the present bill. We are now paying $10 for township lines. The present bill reduces it to $7; $8 for section lines is here reduced to $5; $16 now paid for standard lines in mountainous country is reduced to $13; $14 for township lines in mountainous country is put at $11; and $10 for section lines in mountainous country is reduced to $7. The Secretary, and those who take his view, agree that there have been a great many surveys made by young engineers who are out in Colorado and elsewhere for which they have received the high prices we have been paying. They admit that men go on to make surveys tempted a good deal by the high prices. Cutting down the prices, it is believed, will reduce to a great extent this inducement, and the thing will not be carried on to an improper extent; and if it is not, no serious damage can be done by striking out the proviso, which is entirely new legislation inserted by the House.

The Senate may not be aware of how this matter has grown up. Under the provisions of existing law an actual settler has a right to go and make a deposit of, say, $700 and demand that the township in which his quarter-section or half quarter-section is located may be surveyed, and it has to be done. Although charges have been made that it is not done well, investigation in nearly every case proves that it has been done well; but the United States was having more surveys made than it needed, because there might not be more than one settler in a township, and still it was necessary to have all the public lands in that township surveyed if one man demanded it. The money thus paid for surveys was put in the form of a certificate which can be used by homestead settlers and pre-emptors in lieu of money.

Thus surveys have been made sooner than we needed them, and the attorneys for the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company and other railways now being built across the continent west claim the benefit of them so as to take up alternate sections as fast as the surveys are made. In this way large parts of New Mexico and Arizona may be surveyed where surveys may not really be needed for seventy or eighty years. It was shown that in Colorado, Wyoming, and other places the amount of actual locations was very small in comparison with the lands that have been surveyed, and that we were paying for surveys faster than we ought to pay for them.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] I think can throw a good deal of light on that side of the question and is opposed to the view taken by the committee. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the tables he exhibited and the reasons he gave why we should agree to the House provision; and yet there are equally intelligent reasons given on the other side, and I do not think the Senate Committee on Appropriations will feel very much aggrieved at any action the Senate takes.

Mr. ALLISON. In order to contribute light on this subject, I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior that the Senator from Kentucky has called for be read. I send it to the desk.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 20, 1882.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 15th instant calling my attention to lines 1480 to 1516, inclusive, of the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883. I think the entire proviso included within the lines 1506 and 1516 ought to be stricken from the bill. Some complaint has been made against the system of surveying called the deposit system, as provided for in section 2401 of the Revised Statutes. I have expressed my views quite fully on the subject in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives under date of June 7, 1882. I adhere to the opinion therein expressed that it is not wise to destroy that system. I have no doubt that there has been some surveying done not demanded by the settlers; yet I think it better that large areas should be surveyed before settlements are made thereon than to leave large numbers of settlers on unsurveyed lands, unable to make title to their homes.

The deposit system enables settlers to advance to the Government the cost of the survey of the township in which they reside, the Government taking from the amount so deposited the purchase-money of the settler's lands and returning to him the balance in certificates, which by law are assignable and receivable at all the land offices in lieu of money for the purchase of land. The provision in question, if it becomes a law, will greatly depreciate the certificates, which must be the loss of the settlers.

The statute provides that such deposits shall be made by the settlers, and it is clearly within the power of the Department to see that the provisions of the statute are not abused, and that no surveys of this character are made except in cases where the settlers in good faith desire such surveys for their own protection.

I am of opinion that if proper instructions are given the surveyors-general as to the proof of settlement on the land and the bona fide character of such applications for survey there will be no abuse, but the system will be of value to the Government and the people. The price of the surveys as fixed by the bill will afford no temptation to parties not settlers to procure surveying for the profit to be made by so doing.

I especially call the attention of the committee to section 2401. It will be seen that such surveys are as completely in the power of the Government officials as if made under appropriation by Congress. If the provision in question is retained it will in effect, I believe, repeal the provisions of sections 2401, 2402, and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and in such case the appropriations heretofore proposed are entirely too small for the surveys demanded by the rapidly increasing settlement of the country. The appropriation for such surveys ought not to fall below $1,250,000 if the deposit system is abandoned or the limitation now proposed be put on the certificates issued for such deposits.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,

Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I think this a somewhat important question, and I cannot agree with the Secretary of the Interior. No one will go further than myself in providing all necessary means for securing the surveys of the public lands. I think that Congress has fallen far short of its duty in making appropriations for that purpose, and I have no doubt that small appropriations have led to the adoption of the present system of certificates. Believing that, however, I do think that the proposition of the House of Representatives should stand. I believe that it affords all necessary facilities for surveys.

By reading that provision you will perceive, Mr. President, that it authorizes certificates to be used throughout the land district in which the surveys have been made. It seems to me that goes far enough. If there are any settlers in any given land district for whom the Government does not make the necessary surveys, they may make them themselves and use the certificates within that land district. Under the present system you may survey land by the millions of acres on the arid deserts of Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico, where nobody wants the lands surveyed for any practical purpose except to get paid for surveying them, and use those certificates in any part of the country. That has led to very serious abuses within the last year or two. I want to call attention to one or two of them.

Take Wyoming, for instance. The total number of acres surveyed in 1881 was 1,055,000. The total number of acres taken by pre-emption and homestead was 9,216. Under the existing law certificates may be used by homestead or pre-emption claimants, and these settlers, according to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, are required to make oath when depositing the money for surveys that they themselves are bona fide settlers in the district to be surveyed. Notwithstanding that this is the law and these parties were required to make this statement, only 9,216 acres were actually entered by homestead or pre-emption in Wyoming, while 1,055,000 acres were surveyed. I think that makes a very clear statement of the case that the lands were surveyed for the sake of the surveys and the certificates rather than for the use of settlers.

Take the State of Colorado, for instance. The total number of acres surveyed was 7,435,084, and yet the total number of acres taken by pre-emption and homestead settlers was only 115,500, a very small percentage actually taken by the homestead and pre-emption settlers of the amount surveyed.

Let me repeat these figures and I will only give round numbers. The law permits the use of these certificates for homestead and pre-emption. In Colorado there were only 115,000 acres thus used, while 7,435,000 acres were surveyed. There are several other States in which almost the same disparity between the amount surveyed and the amount used would appear.

We know that these certificates are taken in those States and Territories where the surveys are not needed, and they are carried to Dakota, to Minnesota, all over the Northwest, and used for entering land in those States and Territories. Now, Mr. President, I firmly believe that there has been a very great fraud in this business, and that it ought to be stopped. Take the surveys of last year under certificates. The total amount of certificates issued was $1,803,975.31, and a very large proportion of that was in States where there was no necessity for surveys, where the fact as shown by the Commissioner of the General Land Office is that the settlers have not occupied the lands that have been surveyed. Let me read a brief extract from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office:

The vastly increased area of the public-land surveys during the past fiscal year as compared with that of previous years, is due to the facilities afforded to individual depositors under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, amending section 2403 of the Revised Statutes so as to allow the assignment of certificates of deposit by indorsement, and making them receivable in payment for any public lands of the United States entered by settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws.

The aggregate of deposits by individuals applying for surveys and declaring themselves, under oath, to be bona fide settlers amounted during the year to $1,874,523.68, thus exceeding the Congressional appropriation ($300,000) in the ratio of 6 to 1.

Very extensive tracts of inarable lands, devoid of timber sufficient even to supply posts for marking the corners of the public surveys, have been surveyed, and the topographical features, when delineated on township plats from the field-notes of deputy surveyors, fail in a majority of cases to show any evidence of settlement.

As I stated at the outset, I am willing to allow this to stand to an extent that will afford ample facility for these surveys, but it does seem to me that if the settlers have got the lands surveyed under the spirit of the law it is sufficient to allow them to use these certificates within the land district where the surveys are made, and the House bill does authorize that. It goes far enough, in my judgment.

As has been said by several other Senators, this matter has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the honorable Senator from Nebraska has given a good deal of attention to it and is a member of that committee. I should like to know whether any investigation has been made or any inquiry whatever that will throw further light on this subject.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt of the fact that there have been abuses under this deposit system, and my own judgment is that the whole thing ought to be abolished. I believe that the Government of the United States ought to appropriate money enough to survey the public lands; but failing to do that, some years ago it was provided that any settler in any township could deposit money with the surveyor-general and secure the survey of that township. That went along, until a year or two afterward it was provided that certificates might be issued upon such surveys by the surveyor-general, and that these certificates could be used as money in entering homestead and pre-emption lands. The result of that was that under that law enormous prices were paid for surveys, because, confessedly, if this provision is right, under the old law we paid entirely too much for the survey of the public lands. The result was that a band of engineers or surveyors would gather together in the Territories like Wyoming or New Mexico and survey large quantities of land and procure these certificates. Then the certificates would be sold at a discount of say 5 or 10 per cent., and would be carried off to Minnesota and Dakota and other regions of our country where vast quantities of public lands were needed for settlement.

That class of surveyors came in contact with another class of speculators, the speculators in Minnesota and Dakota, who were doing the same thing; that is, they were going and depositing money in the public land offices and were thus procuring large contracts for surveys, and this scrip which came from Arizona and New Mexico and Wyoming came in conflict with their scrip, and thus in this controversy between these two classes of speculators Congress became aware of the injustice that was being done by this mode. These are the facts. The surveyors in Minnesota of course did not want the surveyors in New Mexico to be bringing their scrip up there. They wanted a monopoly of the scrip, in order that they might sell the scrip at an advance. So they came in and disclosed the enormities of these people in New Mexico and Wyoming.

The Committee on Appropriations are in thorough sympathy with the suggestions made by the Senator from Minnesota in regard to this question. We do not want these frauds to go on, and a majority of the committee believe that under the restrictions already provided in this paragraph the frauds will not longer continue. We have reduced, as the Senator from Minnesota will observe, very largely the price of surveying, so that it will not be any longer an object to speculators in Minnesota or Dakota or New Mexico or Wyoming to make these combinations and deposit a large sum of money with the surveyor-general and thus secure an opportunity of making public surveys. The margin of profit is reduced very largely, indeed 33½ per cent., by the operation of the House bill before we come to the proviso. So that on the whole a majority of the committee believed that these frauds, if you call them frauds, that have been committed hitherto owing to the fact that enormous prices were paid for the surveys would no longer continue under the reduced provisions of this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator answer me this question? I understand his position is that because of the reduced compensation paid for surveys these frauds will not be carried on to the extent they have been. Is that the position?

Mr. ALLISON. That is one position. That is not all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, will the Senator say that the proviso put in this bill by the House will not absolutely stop all chances of fraud? Does it not cut it off absolutely without any ifs and ands about it?

Mr. ALLISON. If I were to exert myself with the vigor of my colleague upon the Committee on Appropriations I should answer him yes; but we must remember that as long as we make these small appropriations for public surveys a settler, even in Wyoming or New Mexico, has some rights. We must not provide simply for the regions of country in Minnesota and Dakota, where lands are valuable. A settler now and then goes to the arid regions, and he has a right to have his land surveyed in some way, and if he does have it surveyed at cost price, it seems to be a very hard measure indeed that he shall not be permitted to use the certificate which he receives for the amount of money which he pays into the office of the Surveyor-General in payment for land.

That is all there is about it. The Committee on Appropriations have no special wish in the matter. The majority have thought it wise to strike out this proviso. For myself I care not whether it is out or in.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I should not trouble the Senate with any considerations or suggestions at this time upon this matter except for the fact that the Senator from Missouri, and also the Senator from Kentucky, both on the committee, and the Senator from Minnesota alluded to the fact that early in the session I had called the attention of the Senate to this matter by a resolution which set forth the difficulties and frauds which were committed by the system, which have been substantially acknowledged to be correct by both gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations who have spoken, by the Senator from Kentucky as well as the Senator from Iowa. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. An investigation was had far enough by them to show that the specific matter of the resolution was correctly stated; that there were abuses and frauds under this system of special deposits. That the Senator from Iowa admits by a nod of his head, and also by word of mouth.

These abuses and frauds were clearly demonstrated to be in the office of the Land Commissioner of the city of Washington. So there was no need that this matter should be pursued any further by the Committee on Public Lands. The facts stated in the resolution were established, established to such an extent that the committees of both branches have come to the same conclusion. The House committee directed their attention to this matter, and they found that the abuses and frauds under the law and under this management existed, and they directed their attention to the remedy; not to strike out the whole system of surveys by special deposit, not even to put it back where it was before 1879, but to strike a middle course which would secure all that was intended to be secured by the system and protect the Government from frauds and abuses which the Committee on Appropriations this very hour admit exist and have been perpetrated under the existing system.

The committee of the House, as well as the House itself, by a very decided majority, after full investigation and consideration, agreed on this proviso in the bill. It has been thoroughly examined by the committee and by some members of this body.

I supposed that when I called the attention of the Senate and made some few remarks on this matter, and also furnished the proof necessary, my duty ended, and I made no sort of preparation to say anything further on the subject. My only excuse for rising now, when I desired not to do so, is that allusion was made to the resolution and to the investigation in such a way that I did not feel at liberty to let the matter pass without making a suggestion.

The fact that abuses and frauds exist to a very great extent in this matter is conceded. Now the question is, how is it proposed to remedy these frauds and abuses? The law, in the first place, before 1879, which extended the benefits of this system to the settlers on the public domain, was intended to reach the actual settlers of the country. It was not the mining interest, because that was not troubled by the law originally; it only applied to the agriculturist, the settler upon the public domain, that he might know exactly the lines of his farm, that he might be enabled, if he happened to be where there had not been a full public survey, to deposit $600, which was supposed to cover the cost of the township survey, for which he received certificates. That law provided that the certificates might be used by pre-emptors paying for their lands within the township surveyed, because that law contemplated a survey where more than one settler lived in the township; otherwise, if there was only one or none, (as in hundreds of cases where lands have been surveyed in Colorado and New Mexico, where there were no improvements and no settlers,) it would be asking a great deal of the Government to pay $600 to survey a township where there were no entries being made. That law, which was supposed to be beneficent when it was passed, was afterward in 1879 amended.

If the gentlemen of the committee had had their attention called to the peculiar manner in which that amendatory act became a law in 1879 it would certainly have aroused some suspicion. It went through this body with very little suggestion and went to the House of Representatives late in the session. The House Committee on Public Lands, after they examined the bill, struck out all after the enacting clause and left the title only, and instead of this little provision to survey the public lands they inserted a timber-claims act, as they thought it would be a great deal more for the benefit of settlers.

That bill as amended did not come back to the Senate. It was near the end of the session; the reaction passed the next session came; it slumbered till nearly the close of that session. It never came back to this body; it slumbered till nearly the close of that session, and then what was suggested? That this bill had been lost, when the committee and the House had taken the bill and struck out all of it and put in a timber clause. But it was said then that it had been lost. The Speaker announced that it was lost, in the interest of those who wanted it lost, and a resolution was passed that the House should ask the Senate for another copy of the bill. Strange that no member of that body or of its Public Lands Committee should have risen and said, "No, the bill was not lost, it was defeated."

This was only two or three days before the end of the session. The bill was called back from this body on the pretense that it was lost, and they immediately put it on its passage. What developed at once? It was developed that these certificates were on hand to be located. It gradually grew until in a little over one year $2,000,000 were abstracted, possibly not in money from your Treasury, but abstracted from your public domain.

It is said these lands should be settled. I ask my friend from Kentucky, I ask my friend from Iowa, was there any necessity for surveying 7,000,000 acres of lands in New Mexico; was there any necessity to survey 7,000,000 acres of land in Colorado? I ask both these gentlemen if they believe in the interest of any administration, if they believe in protection to any settlers that it was necessary to pay $600,000 in about sixteen months to survey public lands in the State of Colorado when only about sixty or seventy thousand dollars in value were entered by settlers and pre-empted in that State during that time?

Need anything more be said? That a huge fraud grew out of this is conceded. If gentlemen had time to examine as it appears in the General Land Office, they would find in the map of Colorado every township marked so as to show the improvements, some of them not one-half the sections taken, most of them very few, some only one ranch. In New Mexico seven million acres surveyed and in the larger portion of the townships not even a single ranch or a corral, no improvements, no settlement, showing this to be an absolute fraud on the Government.

And now my friend from Iowa says this can be held in check by Government officials; that is what the letter that was read stated. The Government officials have had charge of it for the last two years, and the public domain has been robbed and plundered, and both these gentlemen admit it. It was in the hands of the Government officials during the past two years. Do you put it anywhere else for the next two years? You leave it there. You may say that the present Land Commissioner is probably more efficient and more careful. Grant it; but what guarantee have you of the length of service of an official who gets a reputation for honesty and the protection of the land and treasure of the people from those men who seek to plunder and destroy them?

It is too weak a protection to stand between the rapacity and cupidity of men on the one side and the Treasury, or what is the same thing the public domain of this nation, on the other.

My friend from Kentucky the other day told the story of the man who offered to hold the stakes, when it was suggested that it would need somebody to hold the man. That is exactly it. Here are men appointed to protect the domain of this nation. Who is to hold them? Here is their record for the last two years. Two or three hundred thousand dollars' worth of land gone. Was the land entered by the men you say this law was made to protect? Do you believe it? Hundreds of thousands of dollars have gone to survey the hills and rocks of Wyoming; and $3,000 worth of land was all that was entered there.

Who would suppose that it was necessary to say a single word on this matter? There is the proof conceded, undisputed; frauds and abuses admitted, and yet you retain the system, and you give us nothing in place of it. You say you reduce the price of surveys. My friend from Iowa probably does know that heretofore the price paid for public surveys has been such that your surveying contracts were let out to favorites. It has been so in all administrations. I suggest to my friend from Missouri that when the Democratic party were in power it was so. That has been the system. The price of surveys has been sufficient to enable them to have the surveying done, and one-half of the proceeds of the contract for surveying has been divided among personal and political favorites, the other half paid for the actual work of the survey. That was where the "little joker" was in this case. Two million of survey in sixteen months, and one-half of that was profit.

This public-survey system has been a sort of political hospital out upon the prairies and in the mountains.

Where is your evidence of better administration? To-day the same men are named by the President and confirmed by the Senate. You have done it here; you have sent men in here as surveyors-general to take control of this branch of the Government—of the public-land laws—who know nothing about surveying or the discharge of duties which they can only learn either by being educated to it or having grown up as surveyors. No heed is taken of that. Will you be safe in going to the country on this matter when all your reliance is upon a better administration?

I admit that our Committee on Appropriations are treating this question fairly; but if this law is to be preserved to protect the settler, then I ask if he is not protected by allowing the certificates of deposit to be used within the land district? Before the law of 1879 they might be used in the township; since the act of 1879 they can be used anywhere, and are assignable. They are by the bill allowed to be assignable, and are allowed to be used anywhere within the land district. New Mexico is a land district. They get the benefit of them. Nebraska is a land district, and they can be placed anywhere in Nebraska. What more should be asked?

I think my friend from Iowa admitted that the honest settler, if he desires a survey, will be protected by allowing the certificate to be used within the land district where the survey is made. That, I understand, is the proposition made by the House. In the face of the fact that the abuses and the frauds of this system are admitted and conceded, I ask how it is possible to vote to continue this system which is conceded to have been fruitful of such results?

The proposition of the House is a compromise in this matter; it protects the honest settler in a measure, and it protects the public domain.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I have an impression about the method in which the act which has been a subject of animadversion by the Senator became a law; and sometimes I suppose Congress does good by stealth.

The original purpose of this law was a good one. It has been abused somewhat, but still I think on the whole that abuse is reduced to rather modest proportions when you come to consider it. The abuse has been, I think, largely one of administration. Perhaps the legislation of Congress had something to do with it in increasing the prices for surveys, and still I will not say that the prices for surveys have been enormously large, but it is so alleged, and I am willing to admit it.

The Committee on Appropriations of the House met that phase of the controversy by reducing the price of surveys to a very moderate limit, within which it is conceded everywhere, I think, that no profit which is unusual or extraordinary will inure to the benefit of the surveyors.

Now what was the original proposition? The proposition was to make a system of surveys which could be adjustable according to the necessities of the frontier. In the first place, we have a class of surveys denominated "public surveys," as distinguished from the deposit system, which are paid for directly by appropriations out of the Treasury. We have appropriated every year for a number of years $300,000 for what are called public surveys. That sum, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is divided among the different surveying districts of the United States. There is so much to New Mexico, so much to Dakota, so much to Nebraska, so much to Washington Territory, so much to Oregon, so much to California, and so on; and that sum necessarily has been, as it will be hereafter, controlled by the surveyors-general of the respective districts to which the assignment is made.

The surveyor-general under the law lets a contract within the limits provided by the statute for the expenditure of this money and makes the surveys within his district. He says in effect what lands shall be surveyed; he says it upon his judgment prima facie of what the necessities of his district require in regard to settlement. I have no doubt that under that assignment many surveys have been made of lands not yet occupied. I have no doubt surveys have been made of lands that will not be occupied for many years to come. I have no doubt there have been minor abuses under the operations of this general law, and there will always be a liability to abuse under the operations of any law where discretion is lodged with anybody.

The experience of the country demonstrated that enough money was not appropriated to enable the surveys to keep pace with settlement. It was therefore provided that if citizens of the United States went upon public lands in advance of the survey they might provide for their necessities by depositing with the surveyor-general the money necessary to survey the lands they were interested in. Bear in mind that you cannot survey under our system of surveying and under any system of surveying anything else than a township of land, thirty-six sections. It would not be economy to do it; it would not be policy to do it; it would not be possible to do it, because you cannot make any alignment or any connection with subsequent surveys unless you survey a township.

It may possibly seem to some persons that it is not wise to survey a township of land in advance of the immediate demands of settlement, unless that township is settled up, unless every quarter section of that township has a settler upon it, or at least half the township; but I beg the Senate to observe that we have not dealt thus with the pioneers of our frontier. Wherever any man goes out upon the public lands to make a home upon the invitation of the Government, the Government interest in that man is that it will survey the land he seeks to enter, even if it is but forty acres, and in order to get that forty acres surveyed there must be a township of land surveyed. We do many things by anticipation. It costs $700 to survey a township of land, and I think on the whole that $700 is not thrown away, even if there is not at that particular moment of time more than one settler on that township of land.

In order to make a system of surveys which should be adapted to the necessities of the frontier we provided that a man might deposit the money necessary to survey the township upon which he was located, or one or more men might do that, and thereby place around their possessions a boundary in order that they might obtain title. Subsequently the law was enlarged by a method which the Senator from Nebraska thinks was not entirely right—I do not know anything about that—so that the certificate which a man got for the money he deposited might be used elsewhere than in the entering of those particular lands; and that was right, as I think any one will see in a moment.

Here a man goes out onto the public lands in Dakota and seeks to enter a quarter-section. The price of that land when he enters it is a dollar and a quarter an acre, which is $200. If he enters it under the homestead law the total fees are $14, but he is required to put up $700 in order to get the benefit of his land, and the law as it originally was was to the effect that a man should get a certificate to the amount of $700, but it could only be used in that township, that is to say, practically in paying for the land surveyed by the deposit of his money. Every one knows that the men on that frontier do not go there because they want to, they go there because fortune has been unkind with them in some other quarter. It is sometimes a burden to go one hundred, two hundred, or three hundred miles, as they must necessarily go in order to reach the nearest land office and enter their land and pay the $14 fee required by the Government for a homestead. Whether it is $14 or $200, it is a burden generally very seriously felt by the persons on whom the burden falls.

The law subsequently was amended in the right direction to allow the man who deposited this money to obtain a certificate of the deposit, and allow that certificate to be located elsewhere than in the township which was surveyed by the deposit, in order that it might have a commercial value and then enable the person who had deposited the money to realize back again that which he had paid for the survey of the land of the Government, and practically speaking the law could not have been carried out if some such device had not been adopted, because the man who goes on to that frontier with $700 is as one in a thousand, he is as one in ten thousand. The men who go with their families. The little wagon holds everything they have in the world, and food and supplies enough to get them to their location, but almost nothing else. So it was impossible to carry out this law as originally intended unless a man was authorized to get from the Government something he could use as money in place of the money he was obliged to deposit for a survey.

About two years ago these surveys commenced to be carried on upon a pretty large scale, and I may say here—and I think I am entirely justified in saying it—that grew out of the unfortunate fact that the circular issued by the General Land Office used a word not in the law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me, before he passes from the point as to these moneys being paid by men located upon the land and wanting to have their boundaries established, to call his attention to the language of the Commissioner of the General Land Office? The Commissioner says:

Applications for surveys are fraudulently prepared by or through the instigation and management of deputy surveyors, who, for the purpose of securing the contract for making the survey, either themselves or through friends advance the money for the deposit, thereafter sell and assign the certificates, and thus reimburse themselves and secure their profit from the surveying contracts.

The applications for these surveys, I understood the Senator from Kansas to state, were made by persons locating the lands on which they lived. It seems that they were not made by persons who are bona fide settlers, but in order that profit may be made out of surveys.

Mr. PLUMB. I was just coming to that point. What I would have said in a moment or two would have covered that, I think, like a blanket.

I was saying that the whole trouble, or a large portion of it, I think, grew out of the fact that after the law said settlers only should make this application, unfortunately in the wording of the circular of the General Land Office the word "persons" was substituted for the word "settlers."

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator stop long enough to explain the expression "unfortunately." I want him to explain how it was unfortunate. When we appoint a public officer, a man of intelligence enough to be Commissioner of the General Land Office, and he, with the law plainly before him which applied only to settlers, deliberately sat down and opened the door to these frauds by saying "persons" in violation of the law, now you tell us that it is safe to leave it in the hands of Government officials.

Mr. PLUMB. It is unfortunate in this world of ours that we have to deal with human beings. I have no doubt in that better land to which the Senator from Nebraska will some of these days be deported that he will deal with somebody entirely free from all the ills of flesh, and that he will not have to deal with a Government official at least who seems to have somehow or other come under his ban.

I used the word "unfortunately;" the Senator from Nebraska can treat that as he chooses; he may call it malevolently, corruptly; I do not so say; I say "unfortunately," because I am not now trying anybody; I am speaking now of the system, and I say the trouble has been with the administration rather than with the system.

As I said, the unfortunate substitution of the word "person" for the word "settler" has led to very much, if not the whole of this trouble. But that is not all. While we are looking for the responsibility a part of it has been due to legislation as well. Congress never has provided the means of inspecting these surveys nor the books of the surveyors-general in any way whatever. Persons come in and state, "We have settled down on this land;" the surveyor-general sits there with his hands in his pockets and he must take their statements. The Commissioner of the General Land Office was in a similar condition, he had nobody to send out to ascertain whether there were settlers there or not, and he had nobody to ascertain whether the surveys were performed with fidelity. We have endeavored to remedy that in a bill recently before us. We have provided for an inspection of the offices of surveyors-general in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill which has been passed by the Senate and by the House and is now in conference and will undoubtedly become a law, and in the prior part of the provision which is now the subject of this debate is an appropriation of $50,000 for the inspection of surveys.

I want the Senator from Nebraska and everybody else to understand that whatever fraud there has been in assuming to survey and in surveying must equally have attached to the regular surveys as well as to the surveys under the deposit system. There has been no way of doing the one that has not been accomplished in the other.

If a man who should make a survey under the deposit system has not done it, thereby defrauding the Government, there is just as much reason to suppose there has been equal fraud committed under the regular system, because there has been no method of inspection in either case. A remedy is provided against that in this bill most carefully, and hereafter I do not think it is possible that any one shall assume to make a survey and get his pay for it without that survey actually having been made.

Something was said by my friend from Minnesota in regard to that practice. I am surprised that a man knowing the operation of the land laws should make the extraordinary statement that he did when he pilloried this system, as he thought, by the statement that there had been only 9,000 acres of land entered in Wyoming, and therefore no land had been settled upon. Under the homestead laws it requires five years till a man can enter a homestead, and this land may have been surveyed five years before. If the Senator will go to the Land Office here he will find that it may be seven years, because under the practice a man may wait two years after the five before he makes his final application without forfeiting his right. So it may take five years and perhaps seven to disclose the actual fact of entries of public land in the Territory of Wyoming.

But we have done a great many things. The whole western part of the State of Kansas was surveyed ten or fifteen years before settlement and long before the deposit system was adopted. There are millions of acres surveyed in Nebraska to-day that have never been entered and that will not be for years to come.

I can remember well when what is now the Atchison and Topeka Company was discussing the question whether it would build through the State of Kansas or not; when it was believed that every acre of land west of the town of Newton, only one hundred and fifty miles west of the eastern border of Kansas, was perfectly worthless; and yet they have sold millions of dollars' worth of Kansas land west of that line and west of that point, which is the most profitable land in Kansas.

In other words, the boundary line we put between the arid and sub-arid region and what are known as the fertile lands of this country has constantly shifted. There is not a year that that line does not move west at least the width of a county. Men talk about arid land in New Mexico, Arizona, and so on, but I say from my experience during the past twenty-five years that there is not a foot of land on the American continent in the soil of which there are the elements of fertility that will not some day, and within a comparatively brief period, be brought into a condition suitable for cultivation. When you talk about arid land it must be land on which there is no soil, because it is a truism in that country that the men who go into it carry with them all that is necessary to make the climate yield to their necessities. Wherever man has planted himself on that western frontier, and has staid with any degree of persistency, he has lived to see that climatic change which has made profitable cultivation possible.

As I said, there are millions of acres of unsettled land to-day in Kansas which have been surveyed for twenty years, and I suppose on the whole that some cheap economist would sit down and compute the cost of that at 5 per cent. per annum, and say the Government has wasted money in surveying that land. So he would say now in regard to the survey of land in New Mexico in anticipation of a settlement yet to come, that the Government is losing money because it pays 3 or 4 percent. on the public debt, and it is surveying these lands in advance of the needs of settlement.

Mr. President, the American people have always done things wrong end first. We have built our railroads in anticipation of public settlement. We have made our surveys in anticipation of public settlement. We have extended our mail service in anticipation of public settlement. What is the result? No well-ordered American citizen will go anywhere that the Government has not had enterprise enough to go in advance of him. He says, "If the Government wants me to settle that land it must survey it; if the Government wants me to go into that country somebody must build a railroad there." He has a decent respect for himself and says wherever he goes he wants all the appliances of civilization to go along with him, or if not along with him, in advance of him, the mails, the telegraph, and everything else.

So if nothing can be said against this system except that these are surveys in anticipation of settlement, that is in its favor. If you can show me that one man has got a contract to survey the public land and that he has actually not surveyed it, undoubtedly it is the fault of the Government. One of the counties of my own State paid $2,000 out of its own treasury to resurvey the public lands in its limits because the survey had not been properly done. It will be the millennium, which the Senator from Nebraska hopes for, before we shall get all surveyors to do precisely what they have contracted to do.

But are we to stop all the public business? Are we to stop surveys of the public lands because forsooth somebody says these things are not done perfectly and the Government is cheated out of a few hundred dollars? Is it not the part of wisdom to say we shall continue the invitations of people to go on the public lands? We will widen, we will broaden, we will make more effective the opportunities to acquire land, and along with it we will put the appliances of legislation and see that every dollar we put on the public domain shall be properly expended. We have done that in this case, and I believe that whatever may have been done heretofore, neither denying nor affirming, under the operations of the cheaper system of surveying here provided for, and under the operations of the thorough and complete and exhaustive system of inspection which we have provided for in this bill and in previous bills, I believe fraud in the public surveys will be comparatively unknown hereafter.

I am thinking of the future. The fact is I have got so much of my life ahead of me yet that I cannot think of what has passed. I am thinking of what is to be done rather than of what has been done; and if the Senator from Nebraska or somebody else says that some law is enacted badly I say that thing is closed up and closed out; let us go ahead; it has been a question of administration and not a question of legislation, as I believe, and I think this law now will be administered to accommodate itself and adjust itself to the growing interests of settlement in remote districts of the country, and will be as free from fraud as any other law we can pass, and unless we simply stop and say because some frauds have heretofore occurred therefore we will have no public survey at all, the best course is to do what is here proposed.

The Senator from Nebraska, I have no doubt, and others who oppose this bill would rather appropriate $1,200,000, as the Secretary of the Treasury estimates for all the surveys, and then what? Where is the guarantee that that money will be better spent than the money applied to surveys under the deposit system? What is the difference? A surveyor is a surveyor. He is not an angel of light because he happens to survey under the Government for cash. He is the same kind of a man; he labors under the same officers; he gets a contract from the same source; he is amenable to the same power for the manner in which he carries on the contract; there is not a single feature of these contracts that is not mutual, that is not equal in both branches of the case.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to say a word or two in answer to my friend from Kansas. My friend says that the protection we have in the future is that the Government—

Mr. PLUMB. We have three inspectors of the offices of surveyors-general, and we have appropriated $50,000 for the inspection of surveys in the field.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My friend from Kansas says there is hope now, it is true we have been plundered in the past. My friend utters not a word of defense for the past. That is substantially conceded. It is conceded by every member of the committee who has spoken on this subject. Now, there is hope in the future, because we have $50,000 appropriated to watch the surveys in the field. Will my friend make a note of one thing, that while in the Senate an amendment was placed that men should be appointed who should have some knowledge of the business for which they were actually appointed, that is, that they should not be as men in the public service appointed without any regard to their fitness and qualifications, but that these three men should be specially qualified to discharge the duties of inspectors; yet, when that went to the other branch, it was there stricken out. Have we any indication that we are to do better in the future because the other House has said no qualifications are needed for the appointment of these three inspectors? I should like the gentleman to go back and see if he can find in the last ten years the appointment of a surveyor-general who, at the time of his appointment, had any fitness or qualification for the office? Not one.

The $50,000 will be paid to the same class of men who are sent out to watch the public surveys. What guarantee have you in that? My friend is hopeful. He says the door was opened to these frauds. He admits them and places them upon a previous Land Commissioner. A previous Land Commissioner did all the devilry; he says he invited all these men to come in. They thought they had a good thing when the bill passed, but they wanted more.

A law was passed in 1879 for "settlers," but this Land Commissioner stated "unfortunately," my friend says, that the Government statute, which did not authorize anybody and everybody to come in, said "person." My friend from Kansas, who is so hopeful of the future, says that was unfortunate on the part of that Commissioner, and yet that Commissioner, who was so unfortunate in the use of language, has been here within the last few days before this Committee on Appropriations begging them to strike out this very provision.

Mr. PLUMB. I can say to the Senator from Nebraska that he is certainly mistaken in regard to that. He was not before the committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Was he not before the sub-committee?

Mr. PLUMB. Who?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Williamson. Was he not before the sub-committee?

Mr. PLUMB. I was not on the sub-committee.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will give way, as he wants to continue longer, I will move an executive session.

Mr. HOAR. Had we not better finish this? The Senate is ready to vote, and we shall have the discussion all over again in the morning.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the Senator from Nebraska finished his remarks?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not quite. I wanted to speak of the officials of whom my friend from Kansas is so hopeful.

Mr. ALLISON. If we can have a vote on this point I shall be glad.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the words which have been read.

Mr. COCKRELL. But one word. Under the law in section 2403 of the Revised Statutes where the settlers make deposits they can use the certificates in payment of land situated in the township in which the deposit was made. There was no fraud and no complaint of that. When the law of March 3, 1879, which opened this door, was passed frauds were committed and complaints have been made all over the land. Now every member of the committee admits that this clause coming from the House will absolutely prevent fraud. Then why oppose it? I hope the amendment of the committee will not be agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does the House provision repeal the act which makes the certificates assignable?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; but it confines the certificate to the district in which the land is situated.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It ought to confine it to the township and repeal the act.

Mr. VAN WYCK. So I said; but the House thought it better not to go so far.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is confined to the land district. I hope the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the proviso from line 1807 to line 1817.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1823, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "thirteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For preliminary survey of unconfirmed and survey of confirmed private land claims in New Mexico, at a rate not exceeding $13 per linear mile, and office expenses, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1827, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "thirteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For preliminary survey of unconfirmed and survey of confirmed private land claims in Arizona, at a rate not exceeding $13 per linear mile, and office expenses, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1828, to strike out the following clause:

For the survey of about one hundred donation claims in Louisiana, in the Greensburg district, confirmed for six hundred and forty acres each to actual settlers under various acts of Congress, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1834, after the word "continue," to insert "as heretofore;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue as heretofore to reproduce worn and defaced official plats of surveys now on file, and other plats, constituting a part of the records of said office, and also to furnish local land officers with same, $20,000.

Mr. HOAR. I make the point of order on the words "as heretofore" in line 1834—a very small phrase, but it makes new legislation by confining the Commissioner to a method once used.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order seems to be properly taken.

Mr. HOAR. The Commissioner now has a discretion to deal with this thing as he chooses, but the putting in of the words "as heretofore" requires him to do it in the particular way he did it last year or the year before and takes away his discretion. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alters the law. Of course the point is well taken.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see how it alters the law.

Mr. HOAR. It compels the Commissioner to do it in a particular way by legal enactment "as heretofore," as much as to say that an officer having had this discretion for years and exercising it shall not now be allowed to do what he has been in the habit of doing.

Mr. HALE. He shall do it in his discretion as he has done it heretofore. The presumption is that he has done it according to law heretofore, and must do it hereafter as he has done it heretofore. Really there is no change in the law.

Mr. HOAR. If there is no change in the law what in the world are the words put in for? The Commissioner has a right, under the direction, of course, of the Secretary of the Interior, to have this done in any way he sees fit, spending the money in a certain way. He has had that power for several years, and he has seen fit to do it in a particular fashion. He might have done it in any one of a hundred other fashions. Now the law ties him up so that Mr. Teller, the present Secretary, cannot change the fashion of his predecessor, although under the legal discretion he may desire to do so.

Mr. HALE. I do not believe that any other Senator could have found, by the most careful and painstaking scrutiny, anything in this excepting just as it reads: "To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue," as he has been continuing, "to reproduce worn and defaced official plats of surveys now on file." He has always been doing it, and this is to authorize him to keep on doing it just as he has been doing.

Mr. HOAR. Why put in the words "as heretofore?"

Mr. HALE. Because that recognizes the fact that it is not a new thing, and we give the appropriation this year, we recognize it, we give an appropriation for a continuing work. In the river and harbor bill we say "to continue as heretofore the improvement on such a river;" that is to say, it is work that has been done. There is not anything in that matter changing the law.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Maine of course is sincere; it is impossible for him to be otherwise.

Mr. HALE. I know I am sincere.

Mr. HOAR. As it is impossible for him to be otherwise he will pause a little, I think, in his statement. The provision of the bill as it came from the House was:

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue to reproduce worn and defaced official plats of surveys now on file.

He does that. The last Commissioner did it by ordering the work to be done in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. He had a right, however, to do it by advertising for the lowest bidder, which the present Commissioner of the General Land Office and the present Secretary of the Interior want to do. If you had wanted simply to enable him to do just what he could have done before, that is, exercise his discretion in the matter and do what he found best for the Government, you would have left it as the House left it, "to enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue to reproduce worn and defaced official plats," &c. Then if Secretary Teller had desired to withdraw this instrumentality he would have done it; but somebody has got the committee to add to the usual phrase which is in all provisions for public improvements, as the Senator says, to continue the work, to continue to do it "as heretofore," that is, in the method in which the last Secretary elected to do it.

Mr. HALE. That is certainly a very narrow limitation on those words. I suppose it has been done in a half dozen different ways.

Mr. HOAR. Why put in the words "as heretofore?" To bind him by law to follow his predecessor's example.

Mr. HALE. Why not a pre-decessor? I suppose it has been done half a dozen different ways.

Mr. HOAR. It has never been done in half a dozen different ways.

Mr. HALE. I never heard of this before.

Mr. HOAR. So I supposed.

Mr. HALE. That anybody should have found in these words a change of the law is certainly a brand-new thought to the Committee on Appropriations; at least it is to me.

Mr. HOAR. There is no use in dignifying this matter; there is a desire on the part of the photolithographic persons to have their competition recognized by the Department in the making of these copies. Now, you said in the matter of the Patent Office that although Mr. Osgood could do it in Boston for probably 25 per cent. of the cost to the Government, yet that it was not safe to allow the Patent Office records and the original specifications to go to Boston or elsewhere out of the custody of the Government officers to be copied, and then there was a struggle on the last bill to allow that portion of the old patent records as to which there was no particular risk to the Government in having them go out of the town to be copied, and I was met by a point of order, although I produced a letter written by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Iowa, from which it appeared that the original impression had been got at without the action of either branch of Congress in a conference. Now comes this provision in relation to "worn and defaced official plats of surveys, now on file," and the same persons who got that in the conference committee have got in these two little words which are as much a change of that law as can be.

Let me repeat for the information of my friend from Maine that as the law now stands and has stood for a few years since this work was originally authorized, the Secretary of the Interior had the right to make a contract with any person as he thought the interests of the Government required him to do, where he could get it done the cheapest and best for the public; but in point of fact the last Secretary of the Interior thought best to employ the instrumentality of the Washington Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The present Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as I understand, would like to have the advantage of competition, and the bill as it came from the House permitted them to do it.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator sees any limitation, rather than have any discussion I will let it go.

Mr. HOAR. You have put in this bill that it shall be done in the way in which the last Secretary elected to do it, taking out all the power.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe that if he was Secretary of the Interior those words would limit him to a special and defined and single method of doing things because it happened to be done?

Mr. HOAR. I do; and these words are put in there for that very purpose. They have no meaning whatever otherwise.

Mr. HALE. I do not think they do have any meaning.

Mr. HOAR. Then strike them out.

Mr. HALE. But the Senator makes the point that they change the law. That phrase is to be found in scores of appropriations, alluding to the fact that a thing has been done before. That is my only point. I do not see that the words are of any account, but when the Senator says they change existing law I take issue with him.

Mr. HOAR. That is the issue. The Chair sees it.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this is a very great matter, and it is now six o'clock—

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator any objection to striking these words out?

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator from Massachusetts seems to think it is important.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HOAR. One moment. Here are two words which seem to me to be inserted for the purpose of making a change in existing law. They are inserted without knowledge of the committee having the subject in charge. The committee does not mention any other reason for putting them in whatever.

Mr. ALLISON. We did not expect to change existing law. We did not desire to do that.

Mr. HOAR. Then why not consent to strike them out?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator, I understood, raised the point of order; and this is a very important question. I want to ask unanimous consent that to-morrow this bill may be finished before adjournment, and also that the five-minute rule may be applied to debate on the amendments. We have gone on now two days, and I think we can afford to apply the five-minute rule to the remainder of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there unanimous consent that the bill shall be finished to-morrow; and also that the five-minute rule in regard to debate shall be applied to the bill and amendments?

Mr. HALE and others. No objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection; and that will be the agreement.

Mr. ALLISON. Now will the Chair state what the agreement is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The agreement is that the bill is to be finished to-morrow, and that the five-minute rule of debate shall be applied to it.

Mr. BROWN. At what time to-morrow is the bill to be finished?

Mr. ALLISON. At any time. I do not say what time. Let us sit until it is finished.

Mr. MORRILL. Now let the Senator from Iowa move to adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. That being understood, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator not have the point of order decided? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It seems to the Chair that if the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Massachusetts would get together they can decide the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Chair will have an opportunity to make up his mind over night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will permit the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon a bill of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4684) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels, reported it with amendments; and on motion of Mr. MILLER, of New York, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

TENTH CENSUS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census, which was, in line 20, to strike out "15" and insert "6;" so as to read:

Also, that 6,000 additional copies of the report on the history of the national loan be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the change made?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate gave to the Secretary of the Treasury 15,000 extra copies of the history of the national loan. The House cut down the number to 6,000, which I believe is in the direction of the wishes of the Senator from Missouri on everything except the Agricultural Reports.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island why it was that none of the census reports on the national loan were printed for the use of the Senate and House?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is printed for the use of the Senate and House with the other census reports, but this is an extra number of copies given to the Secretary of the Treasury. The same number of these reports is printed for the use of the Senate and House as of the other reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 1, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. PAGE. I ask by unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with. I understand it is very long.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask by unanimous consent that we dispense with the reading of that part of the Journal which is merely formal.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that the Journal of yesterday's proceedings is not finished, and so far as I am concerned as an individual member I would be willing to have the remaining portion of the Journal read to-morrow. The Journal of our proceedings ought to be read. It is the only opportunity we have to know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think there will be no objection to the reading of that part of the Journal which relates to the evening session when pension bills were considered.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the reading of that part of the Journal go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the reading of that part of the Journal will be postponed until to-morrow morning.

REGIMENTAL FLAG ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTH OHIO VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I now, Mr. Speaker, ask unanimous consent to call up the joint resolution to which reference was made the other day but which the Clerk did not find at the time consent was asked. I now move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag which belonged to said regiment, and which is now in the custody of the Secretary of War, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag which belonged to said regiment, it being presented by its lady friends, and which was captured by the confederate forces on December 7, A. D. 1862, and was subsequently recaptured by the United States troops, and is now in possession of the Government; said flag to be and remain the property of said association.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not catch the exact meaning of the resolution from the reading at the desk, and will reserve the right to object until I hear an explanation from the gentleman from Ohio as to the reason for this resolution.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The reason is very simple, and I am sure the gentleman will not object when I state the facts. The ladies of Cincinnati presented to the One Hundred and Eighth Volunteer Infantry Association a blue regimental flag. At the time the regiment was captured the color-bearer was killed and the flag was taken by the confederates. Subsequently the flag came into the possession of the United States Government; and this is simply to authorize the Secretary of War to restore it to the regiment to which it belongs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection whatever to that.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH FLEMING AND OTHERS.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6754) for the relief of Elizabeth Fleming, Francis E. Robinson, and Mary and Margaret Johnston, and move that the same be put upon its passage.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCKENZIE and others objected.

Mr. COX, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his objection to the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Several other gentlemen have objected.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LANCASTER, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of House bill No. 4702, for the erection of a public building at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and that the same be put upon its passage.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I object to the consideration of the bill, and demand the regular order.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I will not insist upon the regular order, but I object to this bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. This bill is one that ought to be passed.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I object to it; but withdraw the demand for the regular order.

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE IN CERTAIN TERRITORIES.

Mr. AINSLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 3506) amending sections 1926 and 1927 of the Revised Statutes so as to extend the limits of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That sections 1926 and 1927 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby amended by striking out the word "Washington" and the words "Idaho, Montana," where they occur in said section 1926, and inserting the said words immediately after the word "Colorado," where the same occurs in said section 1927.

Mr. HAZELTON. Let me ask the gentleman how does this change the jurisdiction of justices of the peace?

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the right to object to this bill until I hear an explanation.

Mr. AINSLIE. I will explain to the gentleman from Wisconsin in a moment. In all of the Territories except the three mentioned in this bill justices of the peace have jurisdiction in all cases amounting to $300; but in my Territory, Montana, and Washington it is limited to $100; and in some of the outside counties litigants have to go one hundred and fifty miles to the district court to collect sums of $100 and over. We only want to place the jurisdiction of the justices in these Territories upon the same footing as those in the other Territories.

Mr. HAZELTON. I would like to ask the gentleman if it changes the subject of jurisdiction at all from the present law?

Mr. AINSLIE. No, sir, not at all.

Mr. BRENTS. It gives exactly the same jurisdiction that the justices now have, but only increases the amount to $300.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. This in no way changes the subjects of jurisdiction. It only increases the amount to $300. The Committee on Territories recommend its passage.

Mr. AINSLIE. It is very important for these Territories that this bill should be passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARY OF DISTRICT JUDGE, INDIANA.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4225) to fix the salary of the judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Indiana and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the salary of the judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Indiana shall hereafter be $4,000 per annum.

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

Mr. CALKINS. If the gentleman from Tennessee will withhold his objection a moment until I can explain the bill, I will be under obligation.

Mr. ATKINS. Through courtesy to the gentleman from Indiana, for whom I have a great deal of respect, I will withhold the objection until he explains the bill, but I must object to it.

Mr. CALKINS. I merely want to state, in the presence of the gentleman from Tennessee, that at the time the district judge was appointed for Indiana there was but one place in which he had to hold court—Indianapolis. Since that time, however, he has been compelled under the law to hold court at three other places—at Evansville, New Albany, and Fort Wayne—while there has been no increase whatever in his compensation to meet the increased expenditure to which he is thereby subjected. There is but one judge in the district of Indiana, while in Florida there are two; in Michigan, two; Wisconsin, two; Ohio, two; New York, three, and so on. In this State of Indiana, which is the sixth in population and wealth in the Union, we have but one district judge, who is compelled to go to these other points to hold court, which duty has been imposed upon him since his salary was fixed. Now, this bill increases the salary only $500, about what his expenses are for traveling. This is a plain statement of it, and I hope it will not meet with objection.

Mr. REED. I will say, in addition to what has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana, that the Judiciary Committee have thoroughly discussed the subject, and advised the increase, as they believe it to be only fair and just.

Mr. CALKINS. I have in my hand the report of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. I understand there are four men on each side of the House who have agreed to object to every measure that has in it anything like the raising of a salary or an appropriation. That is the reason why objection was made to the very meritorious bill from New York just now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. ATKINS. I object.

Mr. CALKINS. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will not object on the statement I have made.

Mr. ATKINS. I am bound to object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the regular order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask my friend from Tennessee to withhold the call for the regular order for a moment, that I may present a bill for reference.

Mr. McKINLEY. And also that I may make a report.

Mr. McMILLIN. I withhold the call for the regular order for a moment.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF SHIP BUILDING.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6884) to amend section 2514 of the Revised Statutes, for the encouragement of American ship-builders and ship-owners; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM A. COURTENAY.

Mr. McKINLEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6885) for the relief of William A. Courtenay, agent of the Clyde line of steamers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GUSTAVUS F. JOCKNICK.

Mr. JACOBS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6886) for the relief of Gustavus F. Jocknick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAZELTON addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. HAZELTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] yields to me that I may call up a measure on behalf of a farmer of my district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] calls for the regular order.

Mr. HAZELTON. This is the most innocent thing in the world. I have been waiting six months to have it considered.

WILLIAM F. MARTIN.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which is the proceeding under the Pound rule. The pending question is upon the bill called up yesterday by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. OATES,] under instructions from the Committee on Claims. The Clerk will again read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2151) to pay William F. Martin, of Mobile, Alabama, the value of one hundred half boxes of tobacco illegally seized and sold by the collector of internal revenue at New Orleans.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to William F. Martin, of Mobile, Alabama, the sum of $5,621.06, the value of one hundred half boxes of tobacco, the property of said Martin, which were illegally seized and sold by the collector of internal revenue on account of not being stamped, and the proceeds of which were paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The bill is subject to objection.

Mr. HASKELL. From what committee is it reported?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Claims. Is there objection?

Mr. OATES. If I am indulged in a brief statement I do not think any gentleman will object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire if this is subject to a single objection?

The SPEAKER. It is subject to four objections.

Six members objected.

The SPEAKER. Six gentlemen objecting, the bill is not before the House.

Mr. OATES. I thought under the rule five minutes were allowed for an explanation.

The SPEAKER. The five minutes allowed before calling for objections were occupied yesterday with the reading of the report.

LEWIS RODRICK.

The Committee on Accounts was called.

Mr. URNER. I am authorized by the Committee on Accounts to ask that the bill (H. R. No. 3668) to authorize a change of record in the case of Lewis Rodrick be taken from the Private Calendar and be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the record in the War Department of Captain Daniel Shawen's company of Maryland militia in the war of 1812 to be so amended as to remove the charge of desertion against Lewis Rodrick, (spelled "Rothrock" on the rolls,) late a private in said company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. From what committee does this come?

Mr. URNER. It is reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3668) to change the record in the case of Lewis Rodrick, a soldier of the war of 1812, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report, it being the same report favorably reported by the House Committee on Revolutionary Pensions in the Forty-fifth Congress:

It is in evidence from a report from the Third Auditor's Office, having in charge the muster-rolls of the war of 1812, that the claimant served in Captain Daniel Shawen's company, Maryland Militia, from September 1 to October 24, 1814, when noted "deserted." It is also in evidence that the claimant made application at the United States Pension Office for a pension for said services, and that the claim was rejected by reason of insufficient service, a period of fifty-four days, and also for having been charged with desertion.

It appears from the evidence submitted, to wit, the affidavits of Frederick Hanman and Jacob Hollen, two privates serving with him, one of them serving in the same company, that the claimant served for a period of sixty days. This, however, is not material, as the act approved March 9, 1878, removes the limitation of the act of February 14, 1871, requiring sixty days' service, and provides for a pension for those serving but fourteen days. It is, however, material as to the second ground for rejection, to wit, that of desertion, as corroborative evidence establishing the truthfulness of the allegation of the claimant that he served through the period of active hostilities, and then, believing that the war was over, and ignorant of the fact that he should be mustered out of the service in due form, and that cold weather having come on and he being thinly clad in summer clothes, went home for other clothing, expecting to return again in a few days, or at any time needed, and all of this with no intention of evasion of his military duties, and that in the mean time the company was mustered out, and not being present at that time, although having served through the whole campaign, including the attack by the enemy on the city of Baltimore, was marked as a deserter.

A number of persons worthy of belief, and including among them a Representative from the State of Maryland, certify to his good character and high standing among the people of his locality.

In view of the foregoing facts the committee are of the opinion that the case is one of merit, and that the charge of desertion is not sustained and should be removed, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill herewith returned to the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I notice that the Committee on Accounts have called up this bill which is reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. The inquiry I propound is whether a committee under the Pound rule can call up a bill which has been reported by another committee? I wish for a construction of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the rule is not very specific in that respect; but the fair construction of it, the Chair thinks, would be that the committee that had considered a matter, and had the subject of the bill in charge properly, under our rules would be the only committee that could authorize one of its members to call up the bill. This bill, as appears from the report, was considered in the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair does not think the Committee on Accounts could properly authorize one of its members to call it up.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not object myself, but simply wish the rule to be construed.

Mr. URNER. I think a fair reading of the rule would authorize any bill on the Calendar to be called up by any committee. That is certainly the construction I place upon the rule.

The SPEAKER. It is a question of construction. The Chair thinks the fair construction would be to allow the committee that had considered and reported a measure to call it up. This subject was not before the Committee on Accounts. As there is doubt about it, the Chair is inclined to think the bill should be called up by the appropriate committee.

Mr. URNER. I ask, as this is such a meritorious bill, having reference to a soldier of the war of 1812, that its consideration be allowed by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to proceeding with the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GARFIELD MEMORIAL CARDS.

Mr. MCCLURE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back for consideration during this hour the joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) making an appropriation to defray the expense of printing the memorial cards to accompany the additional numbers heretofore ordered of the memorial address on the late President Garfield.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the sum of $175, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expense of printing at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing the memorial cards to accompany the additional numbers heretofore ordered of the memorial address on the late President Garfield.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCLURE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS AND MINOR CHILDREN.

Mr. CURTIN. I am directed by the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay to call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 3919) to amend section 4702, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4702, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 4702. If any person embraced within the provisions of sections 4692 and 4693 has died since the 4th day of March, 1861, or hereafter dies, by reason of any wound, injury, or disease which under the conditions and limitations of such sections would have entitled him to an invalid pension had he been disabled, his widow, or if there be no widow, or in case of her death without payment to her of any part of the pension hereinafter mentioned, his child or children under sixteen years of age, shall be entitled to receive the same pension as the husband or father would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled, to commence from the death of the husband or father, to continue to the widow during her widowhood, and to his child or children until they severally attain the age of sixteen years, and no longer; and if the widow remarry, the child or children shall be entitled from the date of remarriage, except when such widow has continued to draw the pension-money after her remarriage, in contravention of law, and such child or children have resided with and been supported by her, their pension will commence at the date to which the widow was last paid."

SEC. 2. That marriages, except such as are mentioned in section 4705 of the Revised Statutes, shall be proven in pension cases to have been performed in accordance with the law of the place where the ceremony of marriage was performed; and the open and notorious adulterous cohabitation of a widow who is a pensioner shall operate to terminate her pension from the date of the commencement and during the continuance of such cohabitation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time? [After a pause.] Eight members have risen to object.

Mr. CURTIN. Do gentlemen understand this bill?

Mr. HAZELTON. There is no time to understand it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] entitled to explain the bill before objection is made to its consideration?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled under the modification of the Pound rule to explain the bill for five minutes.

Mr. HAZELTON. To do that after eight members have risen and objected to the consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is entitled to make his explanation, if he desires it.

Mr. CURTIN. I do desire it.

Mr. HISCOCK. When the proposition is submitted to the House for objection, without the gentleman insisting upon his right of explanation, and sufficient objections have been indicated, is not the matter then disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman ought perhaps to have proceeded with his explanation promptly upon the reading of the bill and before the question was submitted to the House for objections. But as the gentleman now states that he desires to make his explanation under the modification of the rule, the Chair thinks he is entitled to five minutes for an explanation, or to the reading for five minutes of the report accompanying the bill.

Mr. CURTIN. I am not familiar with the rules, but have no doubt the decision of the Speaker is right.

Mr. HAZELTON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CURTIN. When I am done.

Mr. HAZELTON. Wait a moment. I desire to inquire of the Chair when the objections indicated by eight members a moment ago operate upon the question of the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair held originally, under this rule, that the question of objection should be submitted to the House immediately after the reading of the bill. But by unanimous consent, on the request of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] the rule was so modified on Thursday last as to entitle the member submitting the proposition to the House to explain it for five minutes, or to have five minutes' time occupied in reading the report.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes; but the point is, when the question is submitted to the House for objection without the gentleman availing himself of that privilege, and a sufficient number of objections have been indicated, is not that privilege waived?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would sustain that point if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] did not insist that he was entitled to make the explanation, which should have been made in advance of submitting the question to the House for objection. But the Chair very promptly submitted that question after the reading of the bill, and the gentleman did not have the privilege of making his statement before the objections were called for.

Mr. HAZELTON. I would like to have the Clerk read the modification of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. ROBESON, so modified that upon the request of a member five minutes may be allowed in explanation of the bill, or five minutes' time occupied in reading the report, prior to the time when objections are called.

Mr. CURTIN. This bill makes but two changes in existing law. The first is that where a widow of a soldier remarries and draws the pension in violation of law and applies the proceeds to the support of the minor children the Government shall not pay that pension again to the minor children, except from date of last payment to their mother. The second respect in which it changes the law is that where the widow of a soldier lives in improper intercourse with a man to whom she is not married she shall not draw the pension, and on proof of the fact the pension shall be suspended; and also that marriages shall be proven according to the law of the place where the ceremony of the marriage was performed. Those are the wholesome provisions which protect the Government and the person entitled to draw pensions. If they are not right, I cannot understand what change or amendment to our pension laws could appeal with more force to the judgment of the House as just and proper.

The question being taken, the consideration of the bill was objected to by four members.

Mr. BROWNE. I rose for the purpose of saying one word in favor of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. CURTIN. Are there objections to the bill? Who could object? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Committee on Elections being called,

Mr. CALKINS said: Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Elections reported the other day, through the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. ATHERTON,] a resolution which I understand went to the Calendar. It was presented for consideration; but I believe the ruling of the Chair was that it could not be considered until it had gone to the Calendar. I ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. ATHERTON] whether he had not better call it up now?

Mr. ATHERTON. I would be very glad to do so; but it was referred to the Committee on Printing; it did not go to the Calendar.

SALE OF LANDS IN DALLAS COUNTY, IOWA.

The Committee on Ways and Means being called,

Mr. KASSON said: I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6609) to authorize the sale of certain lands in Dallas County, Iowa, devised to the United States by the last will and testament of John Gardner, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell, at public auction, in such manner and upon such terms as may, in his judgment, be most advantageous to the public interest, a certain tract of land known as the "Gardner farm," containing about two hundred and twenty-seven acres, situated in the county of Dallas, in the State of Iowa, adjoining the town of Redfield, being the same property devised to the United States by the last will and testament of John Gardner, deceased, late of Charlestown, in the county of Middlesex, Massachusetts, the time, place, and conditions of such sale to be advertised for one month preceding the same in a daily newspaper published in the city of Des Moines, in said State of Iowa, and in such other newspaper published in the vicinity of the said property as he may deem proper, the net proceeds, after payment of the expenses of such sale, to be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. KASSON. I will state in a word the object of this bill. A Mr. Gardner, during the war or soon after, in making his will, devised a farm in Dallas County, Iowa, to the United States to aid in paying off the public debt. The title being in the United States, the property ever since his death has been exempt from taxation. The land lies near a little village, and nothing can be done with it for the improvement of the town, as may be very rightly desired. There is no reason for the retention of the property by the United States; and some one hundred and twenty-five or one hundred and fifty farmers and villagers of the vicinity have presented a petition asking that the land be sold by the Government, that it may stand upon the same footing with other lands in the neighborhood. This bill was prepared at the Treasury Department in order that the officers of the Government may be empowered to dispose of the property, as there is no object in retaining it. Having been prepared at the Treasury Department, the bill has been reported by the Committee on Ways and Means with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the Secretary of the Treasury recommend the sale of the property?

Mr. KASSON. The Treasury Department itself prepared the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But do the officers of the Treasury Department recommend the sale of the property?

Mr. KASSON. By no written letter. I went personally to the Department to inquire about the matter; and it was taken for granted that the property was to be sold, as there is no object in retaining it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I understand, does not recommend the sale, but has merely prepared this bill.

Mr. KASSON. There is no written recommendation; but there is no reason why the property should not be sold. The fact is the land is now lying useless.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How many acres are there?

Mr. KASSON. Two hundred and twenty-seven.

Mr. MILLS. Is this a unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. KASSON. Not an objection was made to it in the committee within my knowledge. It is unanimous so far as I know. If any member of the committee objects to it, he will say so. I believe I have said all I need say.

Mr. RANDALL. I will state that I was not present when this bill was considered in the committee.

The question being taken on the consideration of the bill, four members objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

VIRGINIA MILITARY DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6520) in relation to land patents in the Virginia military district of Ohio.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That any person in the actual open possession of any tract of land in the Virginia military district of the State of Ohio, under claim and color of title made in good faith based upon or deducible from entry of any tract of land within said district founded upon military warrant upon continental establishment, and a record of which entry was duly made in the office of the principal surveyor of the Virginia military district, either before or since its removal to Chillicothe, Ohio, prior to January 1, 1852, such possession having continued for twenty years last past, under a claim of title on the part of said party either as entryman, or of his or her grantors, or of parties by or under whom such party claims by purchase or inheritance, and they by title based upon or deducible from such entry by tax sale or otherwise, shall be deemed and held to be the legal owner of such land so included in said entry, to the extent and according to the purport of said entry or of his or her paper titles based thereon or deducible therefrom.

Sec. 2. That so much of the act approved February 18, 1871, entitled "An act to cede to the State of Ohio the unsold lands in the Virginia military district in said State," and of an act approved May 27, 1880, construing said act of February 18, 1871, as conflicts with this act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CONVERSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement in regard to this bill, if I can get the attention of the House for a few minutes. The bill is reported by the unanimous consent of the Judiciary Committee of the House. That committee has carefully examined the questions involved in the bill, and by a unanimous vote recommend its passage.

When Virginia ceded the Northwest Territory to the United States she reserved the right to locate land between the Scioto and Miami Rivers in the State of Ohio, for the payment of her soldiers belonging to the Continental line. Warrants were issued by the State of Virginia, and they were located from the time of the cession up to the year 1852. In the year 1800 Congress passed a law requiring those warrants to be located and the surveys to be completed within three years from the date of the act. Upon the filing of the warrant and the survey in the Land Office patents were issued for the lands. But the certificate of the survey of the land was not usually filed at the time of the filing of the land-warrant and the location of the land. Sometimes it was not filed for years afterward, and in numerous instances the certificate of survey was never filed.

That law was extended from time to time from the year 1800 up to the year 1857, since which time there has been no extension. The last extension of the time for filing surveys was limited to locations made prior to January, 1852. This bill provides that where a warrant has been legally located but no survey has actually been made as required by law, and where the party or those from whom he holds has been in possession under such location for twenty years or more, that possession shall be deemed and held and taken as evidence of title.

That is in substance the provision of this bill. Under the laws of the United States the statute of limitations does not run against the Government, and technically the title of this land which is still unpatented is in the Government, although it has been in the possession of individuals for more than half a century. The lands have been sold, conveyed, passed by will and inheritance, judicial sales, tax sales, &c., and the persons in possession have believed themselves to be the real owners of the land, though the title is still in the Government, and much litigation is growing out of this uncertain condition of affairs. The object of the bill is to give repose and quiet the titles.

As a matter of fact the locations of Virginia military warrants were all made prior to 1852, thirty years ago, but certificates of survey have not been filed and patents have not been issued. This bill authorizes the possession of twenty years, under valid location, to be equivalent to a patent. In other words it simply quiets title.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask my colleague whether this is not a bill simply to quiet title of old residents?

Mr. CONVERSE. The title is technically in the Government until the patent issues, but the Government cannot issue the patent until the warrant has been located and a lawful survey has been made and returned to the Land Office; but the trouble is there was no law for the return of these surveys after the year 1857, and the warrants were all located prior to 1852.

There being no law for the return of these surveys, it has been thought best by the Judiciary Committee and by every member from Ohio representing any part of the Virginia military district that this bill should be passed in order to quiet title and prevent litigation.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This is simply to quiet the title of those who have regularly and properly located on these lands which have been indicated.

Mr. CONVERSE. Yes, sir; that is it exactly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And have been in possession twenty years? Mr. CONVERSE. Twenty years and over. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] who is familiar with this question.

The SPEAKER. The time has expired.

Mr. CONVERSE. I do not suppose there will be any objection to giving a minute to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, about the year 1857, when this matter came up in Congress, Governor Corwin raised a special committee in this House of members from the Virginia military land district. I was one of the representatives to that district at that time. We endeavored to do then what is now being done by this bill, namely, to quiet the title of men in honest possession of this property.

In the old days the Virginia men who had been in the Revolution came out with their 4,000-acre warrants and picked out the best lands leaving certain gores here and there, and cunning speculators finding these gores tried to cover them with warrants. It led to litigation, trouble, and unrest. The object of this bill is, as I conceive, simply to quiet the title of those honestly in bona fide possession of this property.

It is an old question. It is in the interest of the people living on the lands, and who have held them for many years, and whose title is unquestioned that such a measure as this should be adopted; and no adverse interest can possibly exist except in the hands of a few speculators who may possibly have found out these little gores on the farms and have taken advantage of them in Pickaway County so as to secure them for their own purposes.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if it would be possible to word the present bill so as to apply it also to the same state of affairs which exists in Kentucky?

Mr. CONVERSE. We cannot do it now; but I will state to my friend from Kentucky that we will bring the subject up at the next session and give it consideration in our committee if he desires it.

Mr. WHITE. I hope it will be done, because a similar condition of affairs exists there.

Mr. RYAN. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio with reference to these lands whether any of them are now in litigation?

Mr. CONVERSE. Yes, sir; some of them are. Suits have been brought and are pending now in relation to some of these lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEDUCTIONS FROM GROSS TONNAGE.

The Committee on Commerce was called.

Mr. CANDLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to call up for present consideration House bill 5841, to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States. I move, therefore, to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the said bill and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That section 4153 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting before the last paragraph thereof the following words:

"That from the gross tonnage of every vessel of the United States there shall be deducted the tonnage of the spaces or compartments occupied by or appropriated to the use of the crew of the vessel, but the deduction for crew-space shall not, in any case, exceed 5 per cent. of the gross tonnage. And in every such vessel propelled by steam or other power requiring engine-room there shall also be deducted from the gross tonnage of the vessel the tonnage of the space or spaces actually occupied by or required to be inclosed for the proper working of the boilers and machinery, including the shaft trunk or alley in screw-steamers, with the addition in the case of vessels propelled with paddle-wheels of 50 per cent., and in the case of vessels propelled by screws of 75 per cent. of the tonnage of such space, but in no case shall the deductions from the gross tonnage exceed 50 per cent. of such tonnage; and the proper deductions from the gross tonnage having been made, the remainder shall be deemed the net or register tonnage of such vessels."

"That the register or other official certificate of the tonnage or nationality of a vessel of the United States, in addition to what is now required by law to be expressed therein, shall state separately the deductions made from the gross tonnage, and shall also state the net or register tonnage of the vessel. But the outstanding registers or enrollments of vessels of the United States shall not be rendered void by the addition of such new statement of her tonnage, unless voluntarily surrendered, but the same may be added to the outstanding document, or by an appendix thereto, with a certificate of a collector of customs that the original estimate of tonnage is amended."

SEC. 2. That section 4154 of the Revised Statutes be, and hereby is, repealed, and instead thereof the following is substituted, to wit:

"SEC. 4154. Whenever it is made to appear to the Secretary of the Treasury that the rules concerning the measurement for tonnage of vessels of the United States have been substantially adopted by the Government of any foreign country, he may direct that the vessels of such foreign country be deemed to be of the tonnage denoted in their certificates of register or other national papers, and thereupon it shall not be necessary for such vessels to be remeasured at any port in the United States; and when it shall be necessary to ascertain the tonnage of any vessel not a vessel of the United States, the said tonnage shall be ascertained in the manner provided by law for the measurement of vessels of the United States."

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make all needful regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and he shall establish and promulgate a proper scale of fees to be paid for the readmeasurement of the spaces to be deducted from the gross tonnage of a vessel, on the basis of the last sentence of section 4180 of the Revised Statutes, beginning with the words "but the charge for the measurement."

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce. It is simply to make provision for certain reductions from the gross tonnage of American vessels. The system of measurement in force to-day under our Government is such that no allowance is made for the space occupied by the crew or machinery of the vessels. In other countries a certain allowance is made on this account, and this bill provides that American vessels shall be measured for their freight capacity alone. It will be seen that in competition with foreign vessels, whose laws on this subject are different from our own, American vessels are at a great disadvantage, as they have no allowance made for space occupied by crews or machinery, while the foreign vessels with which they come in competition have such allowance, and consequently their port charges and expenses are less than American vessels.

Gentlemen will at once see the importance of this measure if they consider its effects as regards the carrying trade of this country. It will be remembered that almost 90 per cent. to-day of the carrying trade of the United States is done in foreign ships; and it will also be remembered that our people see the importance of practical and wise legislation to remove by law some of the discriminations which now exist against American vessels. This bill has been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, who has been consulted with reference to the matter, and who offered some amendments to the bill which the committee prepared, and which they adopted and incorporated in the pending bill. He says the purposes of the bill are wise, and that this system of readmeasurement will be of advantage to the country. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] is very much interested in this bill, and has made many practical suggestions with reference to it, I now yield two minutes to him.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The history of the introduction of this bill into the House will probably be the very best argument that could be submitted in support of the measure. The Chamber of Commerce of New York, in considering the impediments to the restoration of our shipping interest, in an elaborate report, enumerated some seven or eight different items where in their judgment changes might wisely be made. On careful examination of all of these items I discovered that this one in regard to the deductions from tonnage measurement is well founded. There were some other alleged grievances which were not so well founded; but I called the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury to this matter and found that he took a great deal of interest in the subject. He wrote to the surveyor of the port of New York, and I ask to have the response to that letter printed in the RECORD in order to show the exact condition of our tonnage laws as compared with those of foreign countries. The fact is we have all the same rule for the measurement of tonnage of steam-vessels, but the British Government and all other maritime nations make deductions from the total tonnage of the vessels for the space occupied by crews, coal-bunkers, and machinery, which amount in the aggregate to about 33½ per cent. of the gross tonnage of the vessel.

Now, when we compete with the British ships for business from New York to Great Britain for instance, we do not suffer any material wrong, for the reason that the British ship pays the tonnage dues the same as an American ship in our waters; but when we go to a foreign port, Havana for instance, for a cargo of sugar, the British register allows 33½ per cent. reduction from gross tonnage, upon which the American vessel has to pay the taxes levied in the foreign port; and in one case which I brought to the notice of the Secretary, it was found that the difference amounted to fifty cents for every hogshead of sugar taken on the vessel. So that a British ship can go into the port of Havana and offer to bring sugar to the port of New York for fifty cents a hogshead less than an American ship can possibly do it. That is due to the fact that we do not make the deduction on the gross tonnage of the vessel which is made on British ships. Of course this ought to be corrected. The Secretary of the Treasury approves it. He caused the bill to be drafted, and it is that bill which the Committee on Commerce have unanimously reported.

The best illustration of the necessity for the proposed legislation is to be found in the attitude occupied by our vessels passing or desiring to pass through the Suez Canal. When that great highway was opened to commerce a conference of the leading maritime nations was held at Constantinople, and it adopted what is known as the "Danube rule" for the admeasurement of vessels passing through the canal. In that conference we did not participate, and the Danube rule was not therefore incorporated in our legislation. The consequence was that an American vessel passing through the Suez Canal was subjected to tolls nearly 50 per cent. higher than those levied upon the nations who had adopted the Danube rule. The consequence was that the Suez Canal was practically closed to our ships.

Under the representations made to the Treasury Department a special form of certificate was prepared, but without any warrant of law, which was accepted in lieu of a register by the authorities in charge of the canal. But not being authorized by law, no knowledge of these certificates has reached the public, and I am informed that not over four of these certificates have ever been issued.

The passage of the proposed bill will therefore be the first important step necessary for the revival of our shipping interest, now the object of so much solicitude, and an awakened public sentiment which I trust will culminate in the removal of every artificial impediment to its renewed growth, and in allowing our people to buy ships in the open markets of the world, so that they may compete on equal terms with the nations which have practically excluded us from the commerce of the ocean, to a fair share of which we are entitled, and of which our countrymen are determined to repossess themselves.

The following are the papers referred to by Mr. HEWITT, of New York, in his remarks:

CUSTOM HOUSE, NEW YORK,
Surveyor's Office, March 4, 1882.

SIR: The Department letter (10,120 D. L.) dated February 18, 1882, transmitting a communication from Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT, relative to the statutes providing for the admeasurement of vessels, and suggesting that the same ought to be amended, having been referred to me for examination, &c., I have to report: The method of ascertaining the tonnage of vessels by what is called the Moorsom system of admeasurement was adopted by the British Government in 1854. By this method is ascertained—first, the cubic capacity of the hold or space underneath the main deck; and, second, if the vessel has more than two decks, the cubic capacity of the space or spaces between decks; and, third, the cubic capacity of the break, if any, and the poop, if any, and of all the permanent closed-in spaces on the upper deck, available for cargo or stores, or for the berthing or accommodation of passengers or crew, and the aggregate sum of all these capacities divided by 100 gives the gross tonnage of the vessel.

This system of admeasurement for ascertaining gross tonnage was substantially adopted by the United States in 1864, (act approved May 6, 1864;) Austria-Hungary, 1871; the German Empire, 1873; France, 1873; Italy, 1873; Sweden, 1875; Spain, 1875; Norway, 1876; Holland, 1876, and Denmark, 1878.

With the single exception of the United States, each of the nations above named provides in its admeasurement laws for certain deductions from the gross tonnage of a vessel, and which deductions having been made from the gross tonnage, the remainder is called the net or register tonnage; but the extent of the deductions is not the same in all the countries.

The deductions from gross tonnage authorized by the British admeasurement laws are—first, as to all vessels; the capacity of the space provided for berthing the crew; but if the capacity of the crew-space exceeds one-twentieth of the remaining tonnage of the ship, then one-twentieth only of the crew-space is to be deducted; and, second, in vessels propelled by steam or other power, the space occupied by the propelling power—that is to say, the engine or other motor, the boilers, and, in some vessels, in addition thereto, the shaft-alley or trunk.

The deductions authorized are not the actual measured capacities of the spaces occupied by the propelling power, but as regards ships propelled by paddle-wheels, if the aggregate of the actual measured spaces is above 20 per cent. and under 30 per cent. of the gross tonnage, the deduction shall be thirty-seven one-hundredths of the gross tonnage; and in screw-ships, if the aggregate of the actual measured spaces is above 13 per cent. and under 20 per cent. of the gross tonnage, the deduction shall be thirty-two one-hundredths of the gross tonnage.

A second rule for deductions is provided by the British law, and which in its practical result is said to approximate to the first rule above stated, and so far as is shown by inspection of British registers the second rule seems to be invariably followed.

This second rule is as follows: the tonnage of the actual measured spaces occupied by or required to be inclosed for the proper working of the boilers and machinery, with the addition in the case of ships propelled by paddle-wheels of one-half and in the case of ships propelled by screws of three-fourths of the tonnage of such space, shall be deducted from the gross tonnage.

This last-stated rule is practically identical with the so-called "Danube rule," which was adopted by the international commission at Constantinople in the year 1873. The British rules relative to deductions from gross tonnage have been adopted by France, Spain, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland.

It will be observed that according to the British rules no deduction from gross tonnage is made for the spaces in a steam-vessel occupied as permanent coal-bunkers.

The German Government has adopted rules for deductions from gross tonnage differing in some respects from the British rules, and which seem to possess the merit of exactness and simplicity. The deductions made are in all vessels the crew space, the same as under the British rule, and, in addition thereto, in vessels propelled by steam or other power the actual tonnage of the spaces used for propelling power, to wit, the engine-room, boilers, shaft-alley or trunk, and, in addition thereto, the tonnage of the spaces occupied as permanent coal-bunkers.

The German rule has been adopted by Norway, Italy, and Austria-Hungary. It is considered that the largest deductions from the gross tonnage are allowed by the British rules.

When Congress in 1864 adopted the Moorsom system for the admeasurement of vessels for tonnage, for what doubtless then seemed good reasons, it entirely ignored the provisions of the British law relative to deductions from gross tonnage, and none of such provisions were incorporated in the United States law.

Whether at this late day it is advisable to amend the admeasurement laws so as to provide for the making of deductions, either according to the British or German rules, is a question for serious consideration. A change in the law will necessarily involve a partial readmeasurement of all United States vessels and corresponding changes or modifications of all official documents, papers, and requirements relative thereto, and it will involve a loss to the revenue if the tonnage tax on vessels, domestic and foreign, liable thereto, is collected on their net instead of their gross tonnage.

I shall be glad to prepare and submit, as soon as practicable, a draft of a law making the suggested changes, if such changes upon consideration are deemed desirable, and when the Department shall indicate which of the methods for making deductions, British or German, is to be adopted as the basis for the proposed law.

I return the papers referred to me.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES K. GRAHAM,
Surveyor.

Hon. WILLIAM H. ROBERTSON, Collector.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 30, 1882.

SIR: Referring to the communication addressed to you by this Department on the 7th instant in regard to a modification of the laws of the United States regarding the admeasurement of vessels, I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your consideration, the draft of a bill to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States.

Very respectfully,

H. F. FRENCH,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT,
House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CANDLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIEUTENANT FREDERICK SCHWATKA.

The Committee on Military Affairs was called.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That First Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, Third United States Cavalry, who was on leave of absence, by proper authority, from March 5, 1878, to October 1, 1880, in order to take command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic, shall be viewed as on duty during that period, and shall be entitled to full pay and commutation of quarters thereof, and to mileage from Spotted Tail Agency, Dakota Territory, (where stationed March 5, 1878,) via New York City to North Hudson's Bay, and return to Vancouver Barracks, Washington Territory, (where now stationed:) Provided, That it shall appear that said Lieutenant Schwatka was not furnished with quarters or commutation thereof by the United States during the period mentioned, and was not furnished with Government transportation over any of the route for which he may draw mileage under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That the Secretary of War may require of the said Lieutenant Schwatka, United States Army, any meteorological, geographical, or other scientific reports of said Franklin search expedition in the Arctic that he may deem fit as valuable for record or deposit in Government scientific institutions, or for other purposes. But such requirements shall not be construed to the withholding of these payments upon the approval of this act. And the Paymaster-General of the Army is hereby authorized to make these payments out of any moneys on hand for pay of the Army, commutation of quarters, and mileage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the report will be read.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read the report in part, as follows:

That Lieutenant Schwatka, of the United States Army, in June, 1878, on leave of absence, granted for that purpose, commanded an Arctic search party, the object of which (founded upon certain information) was to explore the Arctic regions in and around King William's Land, to make discovery, if possible, of the remains, relics, and records of the British exploring expedition of Sir John Franklin, searching for a northwest passage, whose whole party perished in that region in 1848-49. He and his party of four other persons left New York Harbor in the whaling ship Eothen June 19, 1878; landed at Depot Island, in North Hudson's Bay, August 8, 1878, and there having collected a party of seventeen Esquimaux proceeded, April 1, 1879, with dogs and sledges to King William's Land.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order. Has the hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. McMILLIN. When will it expire?

The SPEAKER. There are yet eight minutes of the hour remaining.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would be very glad if members would listen to the reading of the report. I want to say simply this: that Lieutenant Schwatka made one of the most remarkable expeditions into the Arctic regions that have ever been made. He had leave of absence from the Army, and was therefore on only half pay. He made the longest sledge journey into the Arctic region that has ever been made; and it has been the praise and admiration of all countries, unless it may be ours. He discovered beyond question the last remains of the Franklin party and ascertained that the records of Sir John Franklin were destroyed beyond all reasonable doubt.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman state what will be the precise effect of the provisions of the bill as to this officer's pay?

Mr. HENDERSON. The bill provides for giving him full pay instead of half pay while on leave of absence.

Mr. HOLMAN. How long a period does that cover?

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot say precisely; but it was about a year and a half I think.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it cover anything except the pay?

Mr. HENDERSON. The bill allows him pay, mileage, and commutation of quarters while he was absent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the pay is proper enough. But should it go to the extent of allowing mileage?

The SPEAKER. The time for explanation has expired. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand there are five minutes allowed for explanation.

The SPEAKER. The five minutes have been occupied partly in reading the report and partly in debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask my friend from Illinois if he is able to approximate the amount of mileage?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not certain, but think some three thousand miles.

Mr. MAGINNIS. At eight cents a mile.

Mr. HENDERSON. And mileage is not to be allowed where he had transportation.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me the general features of the bill are proper enough. I am not quite so sure about the provision as to mileage.

Mr. HENDERSON. He is not to be allowed mileage by the provisions of the bill if transportation was furnished. I think there can be no reasonable objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEES OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.

Mr. STRAIT. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to call up for present consideration the bill (S. No. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the fees allowed registers and receivers for testimony reduced by them to writing for claimants, in establishing pre-emption and homestead rights and mineral entries, and in contested cases, shall not be considered or taken into account in determining the maximum of compensation of said officers. SEC. 2. That registers and receivers shall, upon application, furnish plats or diagrams of townships in their respective districts, showing what lands are vacant and what lands are taken, and shall be allowed to receive compensation therefor, from the party obtaining said plat or diagram, at such rates as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and said officers shall, upon application by the proper State or Territorial authorities, furnish, for the purpose of taxation, a list of all lands sold in their respective districts, together with the names of the purchasers, and shall be allowed to receive compensation for the same, not to exceed ten cents per entry; and the sums thus received for plats and lists shall not be considered or taken into account in determining the maximum of compensation of said officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report may be read.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired, and the bill goes over as unfinished business.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to make a privileged report. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommend non-concurrence in all of the amendments numbered 1 to 76, inclusive, except 63 and 64.

They recommend concurrence in the amendments numbered 63 and 64, with amendments as follows:

In line 7, on page 21 of the bill, after the word "advantage," insert the following: "With such necessary attachments and appliances as will render redocking of the ships unnecessary."

In line 5 of amendment numbered 64, after the word "report," insert the words "to the Secretary of the Navy;" and at the end of said amendment insert the following: "And the said Secretary shall transmit said report to Congress at its next session, with his recommendation thereon."

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for separate votes on these amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to have separate votes on the several propositions.

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to say in general explanation of this report, which refers to the bill only by numbers, that in the consideration of this bill in the Senate that body in its wisdom has seen fit to strike out substantially all the provisions which this House made for reform in the naval service, and some of its provisions for the improvement of the Navy itself. It has taken square ground as far as can be judged from its action against any reform of any kind, and in the face of the admitted fact that we have too many officers and too few ships the Senate seem to favor more officers and fewer ships.

The bill as it left the House consisted of two general divisions, one of which comprised a series of provisions for the reduction in the future of the personnel of the service, and the other provided certain measures which looked to the increase of the material of the service. The one provided for a reduction of the number of officers, admitted to be now too great; the other provided for an increase of the effective ships of the Navy, which were deemed by the House and admitted by all hands to be too small in number and too weak in effective power.

The Senate in their wisdom have stricken out the provisions with regard to both of these measures. As I understand them, they have endeavored, as far as they could, to neutralize all the attempts of the House toward a limitation of the personnel of the service; and they have postponed the work on the engines of the iron-clads until the next session of Congress, taking the responsibility, in the face of passing events, of postponing for another year the possibility of our having any effective engines of naval warfare, and submitting in the mean time to the naval advisory board, which is provided for in the bill, the old questions which have been already submitted and decided affirmatively by half a dozen boards.

For myself I was in favor of the bill as it passed the House. I myself agreed with the majority of the House that the time had arrived when we should reduce the proportions of this top-heavy institution, and that we should do it with a firm though not unfriendly hand. I thought also that the time had arrived when we should adopt some measures looking toward increasing as far as we might the defenses of our coast lines and our harbors by completing the iron-clad ships upon which only we could rely for that defense. Since, however, the Senate has taken the responsibility of this delay let the responsibility rest upon them, and if disgrace or disaster should happen let them be held responsible for it by the people. And since the Senate have thought proper to antagonize both of the propositions of the House it may be that we should yield something on one or the other. To my mind the first proposition, that of reducing the personnel of the service to a manageable number and putting it upon an economic basis for efficiency, is of the more pressing importance at this time than the question of temporary delay in commencing work upon the engines of the monitors. The four months remaining between now and the 1st day of December next, when by the action of the Senate this board is required to report, in the absence of misfortune will make but little difference.

And though these monitors were built on my responsibility, and I am sure it is both wise and patriotic to finish them at once rather than wait till we feel their want while they are still unfinished, yet I have personally no objection to the delay if the wisdom of the Senate cannot afford to be prompt, and I certainly have no objection to their being submitted to a hundred boards, if that is desired. I have so much confidence in the fact that they are right and the best that we can do that I am willing to submit them over and over again, even when it is done as a pretext for unpatriotic delay; and although they have already been submitted to five or six boards, I am willing they shall be submitted to a dozen other boards if it is necessary to satisfy Congress that they are right. If they are wrong, let them sink; if they are right, examination will only illustrate the fact, and I am willing to take all the means which are necessary to ascertain that fact and make it so evident that he who runs may read while he runs.

With that feeling and under that understanding your Committee on Appropriations have agreed to concur substantially in the recommendations of the Senate with regard to the monitors, adding only to it such an amendment as is necessary to accomplish effectively and economically what the Senate declares itself ready to do. To recapitulate, the Senate have agreed to provide for finishing the turrets of the Miantonomoh, as the House did. They have agreed also to provide for launching of the four other double-turreted monitors, and they postpone the building of the engines until after a new investigation by the advisory board, to be reported to Congress at its next session.

While we differ from the Senate upon that subject, your committee are willing, so far as they are concerned, to give the fullest delay the Senate wishes, and to submit these things to as many fair boards as anybody cares to have put upon them. Therefore we have agreed to ask concurrence in the amendment of the Senate with this following amendment as to the application of the money: "and to the launching to the best advantage with such necessary attachments and appliances as will render the redocking of the ships unnecessary."

These ships are now to go off the ways and be launched, and when this is done we desire to have them so launched—which can be done with a comparatively small additional expense, I believe—that if found proper to be completed they will not require redocking. Redocking after they were launched, without proper preparation for their engines, would be a very expensive process, and would add some hundreds of thousands of dollars to their ultimate cost. The work can be done now without completing the engines, and they can be launched with the necessary appliances and in such condition as not to require us to go to the expense of redocking them. If any additional appropriation is necessary to put these ships in the condition contemplated, this amendment will leave the whole clause open, and we can increase the allowance of the Senate in conference. This provision has met the unanimous consent of the Committee on Appropriations, and with that amendment we are willing to concur in the Senate proposition for delay. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to say that I myself concur in this the more readily because, while I have no other desire than to have this matter thoroughly examined over and over again, if necessary, and both Congress and the country informed as to what is the best to be done for the interest of the Government with regard to our iron-clad ships, I trust I am above letting the pride of my personal opinions interfere with my public duty, and I am anxious so far as I am concerned to strip this bill of all personal considerations, of all idea that I have any pride of opinion to maintain or any idea to enforce in this House or elsewhere about any proposition which is not ascertained to be for the real substantial good of the country. And I am willing to waive for the present all questions in which I may be supposed to have any personal concern or pride to the end that we may be in a better condition to enforce, without incumbrance, the other great reforms which we have sought in this bill; and, Mr. Speaker, when we have yielded to the Senate on every point where we can be suspected of pride or feeling, when the bill has been stripped of all these questions, then if the House will sustain us, we will do what men can toward enforcing the views of the House in favor of those reforms in the general service of the Navy which are so much needed and which we have attempted to inaugurate, and which the Senate in their wisdom have sought to defeat. If need be let all personal considerations, all questions involving any individual or official pride of opinion, be sacrificed to endeavor to accomplish those general reforms in the service, in the desire for which we as lovers of our country are or ought to be substantially unanimous.

These amendments of the Senate number over seventy. Many of them are merely amendments of detail; some are only amendments of phraseology. It is impossible at this late period of the session to go over amendments of this character specially, because it is not possible for the House without critical examination to see the effect of even the insertion or omission of a single word. We can arrange those matters in the committee of conference. There are some perhaps to which we would gladly agree; but we desire to have the whole subject of the reform in the personnel of the service placed in the hands of the conference committee in order that we may be able to do the best we can to enforce those principles which this House by its overwhelming vote has declared should be inaugurated. Therefore I say on the other question I am willing to yield any feeling of personal pride in order that this House may be clear of any suspicion of standing upon anything but what it is sure is exactly right. With these views we make these propositions, to concur in the Senate amendments with regard to the iron-clads, with the amendment I have indicated, and to non-concur in the remaining amendments.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield to me for a question?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The amendment which I understand the gentleman from New Jersey to suggest is applicable, I believe, to amendment 63 on page 27. The language of that amendment is this:

And to the launching to the best advantage of the iron-clad steamers Monadnock, Puritan, Amphitrite, and Terror.

Now, I have not been able to understand from anything the gentleman has said how the language which he proposes to add can by any possibility protect the public interest more effectually than the language of the amendment, which is "the launching to the best advantage." I take it that "the best advantage" means that every possible appliance for the protection to the Government shall be used.

Mr. ROBESON. That would be my construction also; the words "to the best advantage" undoubtedly mean that. But other people might not think so; and if that be true, there can be no objection to the amendment which I have indicated in order to make it absolutely certain that we mean, and mean only, that such necessary appliances and attachments shall be used as will prevent the necessity of redocking the ships. Redocking, as members are aware, is an expensive operation. I do not know that the Government has any docks suitable for docking these vessels. To dock one of these great ships would cost, I suppose, from $150 to $200 a day, merely for the use of the dock.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The dock at the Brooklyn navy-yard can receive any one of these monitors.

Mr. ROBESON. Possibly; but the provision which the Committee on Appropriations propose will limit and settle this question beyond dispute.

Mr. Speaker, before sitting down I desire to ask, as we have entered upon the discussion of this bill and as I do not wish to take advantage of that, to ask that these amendments be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. They are being considered in the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] as the Chair understands, demands a separate vote on each proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Can the amendments upon which the gentleman desires a separate vote be classified?

Mr. RANDALL. I make this demand for a separate vote because I believe that a great many of the amendments of the Senate should be concurred in by the House, and that we can expedite an adjournment by limiting so far as possible the questions of difference between the two Houses upon this bill. In the present state of our business we have ample time for considering these amendments separately.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] if adopted will have the effect which he seems to anticipate. On the contrary, it will, I believe, prolong the session. If we enter upon a discussion, either in the House or in Committee of the Whole, upon these amendments the debate may last two or three days.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania indicates very serious opposition, as I understand, to one or two amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I have not indicated any opposition or any advocacy of anything.

Mr. ATKINS. Pardon me, I understood the gentleman differently.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think if we discuss these amendments in the House it will prolong the session rather than expedite an adjournment. The suggestion made by the gentleman from New Jersey is one agreed to by all the members of the Committee on Appropriations who were present.

Mr. O'NEILL. Not entirely by all.

Mr. ATKINS. I understood the action to be unanimous; but I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL,] who is a member of the committee, perhaps dissents on some propositions.

Mr. O'NEILL. There are some Senate amendments which I would be glad to have acted on in the House, but I agree to the bulk of them.

Mr. ATKINS. If the House will give attention to the motion made by the gentleman from New Jersey, it is this: that the House non-concur in all amendments of the Senate save and except those which relate to the monitors, and that the House concur in the amendments which relate to the monitors with the simple verbal amendment the gentleman from New Jersey has indicated. My opinion is it should be the judgment of the House to adopt that suggestion, that the reform which the House with a full House has already adopted may be better secured than by a scant House, which we have at this time. This matter has been discussed in a full House, by the committee when we had a full House, and I think, sir, there is not any likelihood the House would reverse its action upon subjects upon which it has already passed, especially when they are in the interest of economy.

Mr. RANDALL. One moment, if the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Very many of these Senate amendments have never been voted on in the House.

Mr. ATKINS. The most of the amendments made by the Senate are such as to strike down the reform proposed by the House. The body of the amendments—the gravamen of the amendments—offered by the Senate are those which strike down the provisions looking to the reform of the service which were adopted by the House.

Now, sir, I have no care, none in the world, if the House prefers to go into this matter and go through with it; but it will take two or three days, two at any rate.

Mr. RANDALL. Not more than two hours.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well; I care nothing about it; but my judgment is that it would be better to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, save those indicated by the gentleman from New Jersey, in which he proposes to concur with a verbal amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say as a general proposition, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment it is safer and more satisfactory (and I say it without reflecting on any one) the House should legislate itself rather than remit it to three members of a conference committee. That is one of the principles upon which I think this House should rest its action. We remitted the legislative appropriation bill and the general deficiency bill long ago to committees of conference, and we have not heard from them yet.

Mr. ATKINS. Allow me to say right here that if the House and the Senate had agreed on every single proposition in the legislative and deficiency bills, save the points of difference which now exist, those bills would have been still where they are to-day. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know the reason why there is no agreement, but I wish to express my regret there has not been an agreement, because those are bills which ought to have been enacted into law before we had commenced the second month of the fiscal year.

I really think, Mr. Speaker, this House should exercise its right and perform its duty in legislating itself and not remitting these various questions to a conference committee in order to see whether we cannot come to an understanding with the Senate on at least some of the amendments. I do not believe in remitting to a conference the bulk of the amendments when perhaps there is no disagreement. Why send matters to a conference committee when the House may reconcile disagreements at this time.

Mr. ROBESON. If the gentleman will pardon me I should like to make a suggestion.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. The gentleman has a right to call for a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that.

Mr. ROBESON. That is his right and privilege. I desire to say to him there are none of these amendments we ask to non-concur in which are new propositions of the Senate. They are simply non-concurrence of the Senate with the deliberate vote of the House after long debate.

Now, then, the whole subject-matter has been gone over by the House. Every one of these questions has been discussed until it is threadbare. It is true that we can take them all up and still go over the same ground and debate the matter for another week if necessary, and we can discuss it and have the same speeches substantially made over again if it is preferred. But we are considering nothing but what has been already considered by the House; and with that view, having only a desire to expedite the consideration of the matter, I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in order to facilitate the time of adjournment, in order that we may get away, if we can, by or before the end of the week, if he will not point out the particular amendments on which he wishes a separate vote, instead of reading the whole bill and going through these amendments, seventy-six in number, seriatim.

Mr. RANDALL. I have read the debate in the Senate upon this bill with a great deal of care, but I could not now go through and pick out with certainty, out of the seventy-six amendments to the bill, those upon which I desire to have a separate vote. There are some that I could indicate, of course; for instance, I would like to have a separate vote on the Senate amendment to the commodore question.

Mr. ROBESON. All right, let us have a separate vote on that.

Mr. RANDALL. Then, I think, as to the closing of the navy-yards.

Mr. ROBESON. Very well, have a separate vote on that too.

Mr. RANDALL. And there may be others which escape my memory just at present.

Mr. BOWMAN. There may be also, Mr. Speaker, other members who would like to have separate votes on some of these amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the intelligent way would be to proceed now to consider these amendments seriatim. There will be little or no debate.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words in this connection. The gentleman from New Jersey has spoken of the long and exhaustive debate which has been had upon all of the various provisions of this bill when it was first reported from the Committee on Appropriations of the House. The course the House has pursued upon the bill up to this time has suited the views of a majority of the members. The probability is, though, that now some may have seen fit to change the views which they upheld and advocated upon the floor when we considered the bill in Committee of the Whole. I, too, have read the debate in the Senate upon this appropriation bill very carefully. It was made, it seems to me, the most important appropriation bill which came before that body, and the discussion and action of the Senate was looked upon with great interest by Senators and members. Both House and Senate devoted a great length of time in considering its provisions. Many of us were disappointed by the action of the House upon some portions of the bill. I confess that I have learned a good deal with reference to its purposes by looking over the debates in the Senate just as my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] has by reading those debates as they occur.

I do not believe we gain time by at once referring appropriation bills, as we have been doing so frequently at this session, to conference committees as soon as they come back to us from the Senate with amendments. I think the proof as to whether or not we have hurried business through by doing so must be apparent to every member of the House. Where are we now at the end of an eight months' session of Congress? Many of our appropriation bills are not yet laws. Some of them have been hanging fire in the conference committees for weeks. I doubt, sir, very much whether this letting them go into conference as soon as it is ascertained that there is a difference between the two Houses is likely to expedite business. I believe that if we were to go over this naval bill to a certain extent, at least with reference to some of the more important amendments which might be pointed out, that we could get through the bill finally much sooner than by letting it go now to a conference.

The gentleman from New Jersey has control of the bill. If he is so inclined or in order to defeat further discussion upon these points it will be within his power to demand the previous question, and very likely he will be able to get it, for certainly there are none of us who want to waste any time in useless discussion here in that way. I think we can get through with it much sooner than by letting it go to a conference committee without now considering the amendments. Besides that, it is not at all unlikely that some of us may have seen occasion to change our opinions as to certain features of the bill since it passed the House. I feel myself like concurring in some of these amendments of the Senate, and would like to have a direct vote upon some of them; and I have no doubt that other members feel as I do and would also like the privilege of separate votes.

Now, there is not much to do to-day that I know of. I do not see that we are specially hurried just now in our legislation. We cannot go on with private bills here, because certain members seem to think it within their individual province to decide which private bills shall be taken up, without reference to the knowledge of them which may be possessed by the immediate Representative who has presented them to the House or of the necessities for proposed legislation of their respective constituents; therefore we cannot go on with that character of business. I think, Mr. Speaker, that under this condition of things we can do no better than to consider these amendments of the Senate as far as we may desire to consider them; to debate them if necessary, and vote upon them. I believe this will do more to hurry the passage of the bill than anything else. I certainly hope and desire that the final action of Congress upon it will be expedited and not delayed, and therefore I suggest that we take up the amendments as they may be indicated by the members who desire separate votes upon them, and proceed to dispose of them in order.

I, like my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] desire to vote upon the proposition giving the power to the Secretary of the Navy to close up navy-yards at his will. I am for the Senate amendment and am for concurring. I desire to vote on the amendment of the Senate authorizing the appointment of a commission to examine all the navy-yards of the country, so that we may ascertain through men who probably understand the subject where a navy-yard should be maintained and what it should be used for before we give the power into the hands of the Secretary to close them just as he may see fit.

I hope upon these main propositions we may have a direct vote. And I hope this House will consider that four months is too long a time to put off commencement of the completion of the monitors. I do not agree with the views of my colleague upon the committee who has charge of this bill that we should concur in this Senate amendment. Were I he I should insist on the House provision, which authorizes the completion of them; and I would not yield, if I were conferee, to the amendment of the Senate which cuts down so largely the appropriation for the purpose. Let us, then, have separate and distinct votes upon some of these amendments.

Mr. WHITTHORNE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I simply desire to say one word. In the hasty examination I have made of the amendments of the Senate to the bill I think when the House comes to look upon them on one side and the other it will discover, as far as the personnel of the Navy is concerned, the amendments made by the Senate amount to very little. Except as regards the rank of commodore there is very little difference in that respect between the Houses.

Then, summing it up altogether, I think it will be found if the House could and would now accept the amendments of the Senate, on a balancing of the account the advantage on the score of economy would be with the Senate as against the House. And I do not think the House would make any serious mistake if it were at once to end all discussion on this matter and agree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. If you take out the concurrence which is proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey, does my colleague from Tennessee think the balance would then be on the side of the House on the score of economy?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I would not, answering by the arithmetic of the case, say ay. But when I look to what I conceive to be the amount of danger in the propositions as contained in the House bill and as remedied, in my judgment, by the Senate, and when I look to the harmony and efficiency of the service ultimately, I believe it would be found that on the score of economy the balance would be in favor of the Senate.

There are some amendments made by the Senate which individually I would not be inclined to accept. But taking them as a mass, looking to the future harmony and future efficiency of the service in its personnel and its material aspects, in my judgment the Senate has not committed any mistake. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. CANNON. I suppose if members would designate the amendments they desire to vote upon separately they have the power, as a matter of right, to force a vote. But in rising at this time I more particularly wanted to say something in answer to the argument that has been thrown in by both of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania in support of the proposition to have all these amendments considered one by one in so far as they referred to the legislative bill and the deficiency bill, which are now in conference.

The legislative bill had nearly four hundred amendments. The House did non-concur substantially in those amendments in bulk. But long ago the disagreement on every one of those amendments, except those in section 6, has been closed up and the report adopted; and as to that section, upon a vote of the House under circumstances where its opinion could be had, the House stood 98 to 4 in favor of a certain proceeding. That was a week ago; and the Senate in its wisdom did not see proper to grant our request for a further conference for one week. It only did so last night just before adjournment. So that the fact of non-concurring in bulk in the amendments upon that bill did not at all embarrass its passage. The conference committee on the part of the House has been substantially instructed on one section, and that alone keeps that bill from becoming a law; and upon that the House are ready to meet the Senate when the Senate will meet them.

On the deficiency bill it is also true, while we non-concurred in all the amendments, yet the whole bill is closed up by the report of the conference, except on one matter, that of mileage, upon which the House refused to recede by a majority of such a size that the conferees felt they must obey the will of the House. The criticism, therefore, of the gentleman, so far as it may reflect on non-concurring in the amendments as a whole, does not lie in regard to those two bills.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say that I did not reflect on anybody, but simply expressed my regret that those two bills were still in conference. I think my language will bear no other construction. I remarked that here we were in August with those two bills still pending.

Mr. ROBESON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. REAGAN. I only want a moment. I desire to state now, very briefly, the reasons which will induce me to support the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations in reference to this bill. It has been explained that the Committee on Appropriations are willing to concur, with the slight amendments which they propose, in so much of the bill as relates to the partial completion of the monitors. The features of the bill which remain unagreed to are those which relate to the attempt of the House to reduce the personnel of the Navy.

When we remember that we have about thirty-eight ships afloat, with over 1,000 officers in commission, and when we remember that the English navy, with ten times the number of ships afloat that we have, has only about 1,800 officers in commission, we must see that either the British Government has failed to furnish the necessary number of officers to take charge of their ships of war, or we have a very great superabundance of officers.

The House of Representatives desire to take some steps to reduce what has perhaps been aptly termed the top-heaviness of the Navy, not in any spirit looking to a crippling of the service, but with a desire to preserve its efficiency and at the same time not burden that branch of the service with a large number of supernumerary officers.

The provisions that go to this point are those which are chiefly in issue. The mere slight and verbal amendments of the Senate are of but little consequence, and we can safely trust the conferees on the part of the House with the adjustment of those. There may be some amendments of the Senate to which we would not object. I certainly should not object to the sixteenth amendment, which provides against the increase of salaries by the promotion of retired officers. I think that is entirely right and in the spirit and number of the action of the House. And there may be others to which there would be no objection.

But when we go into conference, if in the House here we disarm our conferees by agreeing to all of the amendments which are unobjectionable, then, to use an expression which is perhaps more significant than elegant, we give them no fighting ground. We yield everything we can and then go into conference upon that which is demanded of us without any ground to compromise upon. It is this fact which will induce me to sustain the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. My judgment is that we would have done better to have accepted the proposition of the chairman of the committee to concur in the amendments he mentions and non-concur in the remainder, and intrust the bill to the committee of conference for safe and speedy results.

My own strong desire is that the House shall sustain the reformatory provisions of this bill, reducing the number of supernumerary officers and preserving the efficiency of the service, without weighting it down with unnecessary officers and unnecessary service. With this view, I shall sustain, so far as my vote goes, the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to concur in the amendments of the Senate in regard to which they recommend concurrence, and non-concurrence in the remainder, so as to leave the whole subject open, and enable them to go as far as they can in the execution of the expressed views of the will of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBESON. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe that this bill as it was first formulated in the House was to some extent a disappointment to some portions of the country and perhaps to some portions of the House itself. The two great reforms initiated by this bill, perhaps I should say the three great reforms, were, first, the decrease of the personnel of the Navy; second, the initiating of a movement to build steel cruisers; and third, the provision looking to the closing of certain navy-yards, or at least to the discontinuance of work in certain navy-yards. I believe that those three points in the bill met the approval of a large majority of this House and met the approval of the country.

There was but one thing left in the bill for the most captious and the most critical to discuss and criticise. That was the very moderate provision looking to the completion of the monitors or the iron-clads. When the bill was reported to the House the Committee on Appropriations of the House guarded carefully those provisions in respect to the completion of the monitors. There was no member of the committee who had any other motive in reference to those provisions than the good of the Navy, the building up of the navy as was expected of Congress by the people.

When the bill left the House and went to the Senate they dissented from two of the reforms which had been initiated by the House, the reduction of the personnel of the Navy and the discontinuance of work to a certain extent in some of the navy-yards; those two features as to which there was great unanimity in the House. In reference to the third provision of the bill, which excited some criticism in the House, the completion of the monitors, the Senate have guarded somewhat the provisions of the House bill, and in reference to that feature the Committee on Appropriations have substantially accepted the action of the Senate.

It is the disposition of the Committee on Appropriations of the House to eliminate from the bill everything which is objectionable, everything which can be justly and properly criticised. After fully considering the monitor clause of the bill, we have concluded that some slight verbal changes should be made in the Senate provisions; but, as already suggested by members on the floor, it may be questionable whether those changes are necessary or not. I do not hear of any objections to them, except that the Senate provisions without the changes which we propose mean substantially what they would with those changes.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Allow me to say that I think they weaken the original provisions of the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] says that he thinks they weaken those provisions. I think they strengthen them. But that is a mere matter of detail.

So far as the substantial amendments of the Senate are concerned, which look to guarding the features of the bill with reference to the iron-clads, we accept them in all good faith. And I say that I am gratified that my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, a member on the sub-committee that had charge of this bill, [Mr. ATKINS,] whose good faith, and whose patriotism, and whose economy can never be questioned, indorses the proposition which has been made by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] and favors the motion which he proposes to submit. I am gratified also that the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] of whom I can likewise say that his motives in the direction of economy and good government can never be questioned, gives this proposition his approval, and accepts the action of the Committee on Appropriations in the spirit in which it was tendered—the object being to present to the country the best possible naval appropriation bill which can be produced.

I heartily hope, Mr. Speaker, that the action desired by the gentleman who has charge of this bill will be taken by the House; that all these amendments of the bill which, though to a certain extent as you glance at them, may appear non-essential, bear possibly upon the two great reforms which I have indicated upon which the House and the Senate differ may be non-concurred in. Upon those two great questions we have had a decided expression from the House; and it is desirable that the conferees on the part of the House may have full power to go into the conference and work out the wishes and judgment of the House.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, after this debate there remain, I think, only two questions substantially. One is the question of the general principles of reduction of the personnel of the service as inaugurated, voted upon, and sustained by the House. The other is the question of giving to the Secretary of the Navy, if he finds that the money can be expended more economically in fewer navy-yards, the power not to sell, but to close up and stop work at those navy-yards which are supernumerary. Both these questions were thoroughly discussed in the House; both were decided by the House by overwhelming majorities in accordance with the provisions of the House bill as recommended by the Appropriations Committee. We propose that there be inaugurated for the future a system which without interfering with any officer now in the service shall reduce our overgrown naval establishment from its inconvenient and expensive proportions to such a size as it is our interest to maintain. We propose also that where it has been demonstrated by the reports from the bureaus of the Navy Department themselves that it takes ninety-nine cents to spend a dollar, where for the last five years $10,500,000, exclusive of the pay of officers, has been consumed in merely expending $11,900,000 for labor and materials, there shall be a reduction so far as practicable consistent with the demands of economy.

The questions have been thoroughly discussed here in Committee of the Whole; they are fully understood. I have no power to prevent a separate vote on any amendment, but for the purpose of facilitating the action of the House I shall move before I sit down the previous question upon the report of the Committee on Appropriations, so that these amendments if voted upon seriatim shall be disposed of without consuming any more time in debate, to the end that we may, if possible, escape from this thralldom during the progress of the present week.

Before taking my seat I will say in reference to these proposed reforms in the Navy that we have here on duty in Washington one hundred and three naval officers who, with their families and friends, are influential and powerful; but I want it understood that they are not a third branch of the Legislature of this country.

I now move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOWMAN. I wish to ask whether the previous question will so apply that nothing can be said concerning individual amendments when they come up?

Mr. ROBESON. Yes, sir; it will cut off all debate.

The previous question was ordered.

First amendment:

After the words "two assistant surgeons not in the line of promotion" insert the following: "Who shall, after fifteen years' service, be entitled to receive as annual pay when at sea $2,100; when on shore duty, $1,800, and when on leave or waiting orders, $1,600."

Mr. ROBESON. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Strike out the following words: "Various staff corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps, but naval constructors and assistant naval constructors may be appointed from civil life;" and insert in lieu thereof: "Engineer Corps of the Navy and of the Marine Corps: And provided further."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a mere change of phraseology, and I move to concur.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a question of order. I think the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in the nature of debate.

Mr. RANDALL. What remark?

Mr. ATKINS. The remark just made by the gentleman. He said it was a mere verbal amendment, and I think that is in the nature of debate. It is not merely verbal.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 42.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The third, fourth, fifth, and sixth Senate amendments were non-concurred in, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Seventh amendment:

Strike out the words, in the paragraph in reference to naval honorably discharged cadets, the following words: "And one year's sea pay, under the provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 35.

Mr. RANDALL. A quorum has not voted.

The Speaker appointed as tellers Mr. ROBESON and Mr. RANDALL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 36.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The eighth, ninth, and tenth amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Eleventh amendment:

In the paragraph relating to the active list of the pay corps of the Navy, strike out "and thirty-five assistants and" and in lieu thereof insert "twenty;" so it will read "twenty passed assistant paymasters."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. KNOTT. I move concurrence.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 42.

Mr. KNOTT. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. ROBESON and Mr. KNOTT tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 28, noes 33.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, sixteenth, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, twenty-seventh, thirty-first, and thirty-fourth amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Fifteenth amendment:

Strike out the following:

"Provided, That hereafter all promotions to the grade of rear-admiral on the active list shall be made from the grades of commodore and captain, and no more promotions to the grade of commodore shall be made after July 1, 1883: Provided, however, That no commodore now in the service shall be reduced in rank or deprived of his commission by reason of this act: And provided further, That no officer shall be promoted under the provisions of this act unless his mental, moral, and professional fitness shall have been established according to the provisions of sections 1496 and 1497 of the Revised Statutes."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Seventeenth amendment:

Strike out in the following the words "at sea:"

"That whenever on an inquiry had pursuant to law, concerning the fitness of an officer of the Navy for promotion, it shall appear that such officer is unfit to perform at sea the duties of the place to which it is proposed to promote him, by reason of drunkenness, or from any cause arising from his own misconduct."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. THOMAS. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Twenty-sixth amendment:

In the paragraph in reference to "officers of the Navy traveling abroad under orders" insert the following words: "hereafter issued shall travel by the most direct route, the occasion and necessity for such order to be certified by the officer issuing the same."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-eighth amendment:

Strike out, under the head of "Bureau of Ordnance," "that purpose" and in lieu thereof insert "these purposes."

Mr. ROBESON. Let that amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

Strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,500" in the following paragraph:

"For miscellaneous items, namely: For freight to foreign and home stations, advertising and auctioneers' fees, cartage and express charges, repairs to fire-engines, gas and water pipes, gas and water tax at magazines, toll, ferrage, foreign postage, and telegrams, $5,000."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirtieth amendment:

Insert the following:

"The Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, furnish to the American Ordnance Company fourteen smooth-bore iron guns, of the Rodman, Dahlgren, and Parrott models, of not less than nine-inch bore, and four gun-carriages, and the use of instruments for testing the velocity of projectiles, for the purpose of making tests and experiments in the improvement of heavy ordnance: Provided, That the Government of the United States shall not incur or be liable in any event for any expense in the conduct of such tests or experiments; and after the same have been completed, and not later than the 1st day of March, 1883, said guns and gun-carriages and instruments shall be returned to the United States; and said American Ordnance Company shall not be liable for any damage said guns or gun-carriages may sustain in the conduct of such tests or experiments, or in consequence of any alterations made in the same."

Mr. HISCOCK. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Thirty-second amendment:

Strike out "$40,000" and insert "$35,000," relating to the transportation of enlisted men and boys at home and abroad.

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. I move concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-third amendment:

Strike out "$20,000" and insert "$15,000" in the following paragraph:

"For contingent expenses equipment and recruiting: For extra expenses of training-ships, freight and transportation of equipment stores, printing, advertising, telegraphing, books and models, postage, car tickets, ferriage, ice, apprehension of deserters and stragglers, assistance to vessels in distress, continuous-service certificates and good-conduct badges for enlisted men, school books for training-ships, extra medals for boys, and emergencies arising under cognizance of Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting unforeseen and impossible to classify, $20,000."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Thirty-fifth amendment:

Strike out the following:

"Provided, That if the Secretary of the Navy shall find that work at all the navy-yards now maintained cannot be carried on with advantage to the service and economy to the governments for the amounts in this act appropriated for the maintenance of and civil establishment at the navy-yards, he shall not make any deficiency for these purposes, but he shall suspend work at those yards where he finds it can best be dispensed with, and shall close such yards and transfer all perishable stores and property therefrom to other yards for use therein, and report the facts and reasons governing his action to the next session of Congress; and at the yards so closed only such officers and employes shall be retained as are necessary to preserve and take care of the property of the Government, and all other persons shall be transferred or discharged: Provided further, That the navy-yard at Washington, District of Columbia, may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be maintained as a manufacturing yard for the Bureaus of Equipment and Recruiting and Ordnance, and that work may be continued in the rope-walk in the Boston navy-yard: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be held to interfere with the permanent improvement of any navy-yard as now authorized by law, or the expenditure for such purpose of any money appropriated by Congress therefor."

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend non-concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. BOWMAN. I move to concur.

Mr. REED. Is not this a motion to strike out and insert. There are some sections added in place of what is proposed to be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is to strike out.

Mr. REED. I desire to call attention to the fact—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. REED. Was debate closed on all these amendments?

The SPEAKER. Absolutely.

Mr. REED. Was not this a motion to strike out and insert? Here is a substitution in this bill of the Senate for something put in by the House and stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. ATKINS. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BOWMAN. I move concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 35.

So the motion to concur was not agreed to.

Mr. REED. I submit to the Speaker as a parliamentary inquiry, what would be the effect of rejecting this motion to strike out, and then retain that which the Senate have inserted as an additional section?

The SPEAKER. It is not for the Chair to determine that point.

Mr. REED. It is a matter it seems that ought to be taken into consideration in connection with the other amendment. It would seem proper that they should be considered together.

The SPEAKER. They are regarded as separate amendments.

The thirty-sixth amendment was non-concurred in.

The thirty-seventh amendment was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint a commission, to consist of three persons, one of whom shall be appointed from the line officers and one from the staff officers of the Navy, and one from civil life, which commission shall consider and report to the next session of Congress upon the question whether it is advisable to sell any of the navy-yards, and, if so, which; and as to each of said yards said commission shall report as to its cost, its area, its present value, including in separate items the value of the land, structures, machinery, and other personal property; the depth of water at the yard, and whether it remains and will remain at such depth, or will require expense to keep open its water communication; its condition as to being in working order or otherwise; the condition and value of its "plant" in the different departments; its advantages and disadvantages as a naval station, and for the construction of vessels; its probable value for other purposes, in case the yard is discontinued; whether there is any demand for the yard for mercantile or other purposes; whether it can probably be sold, and at what price, in case of discontinuance; the annual cost during each of the past fifteen years of maintaining it; the value of what it has produced during each of said years, so far as it can be ascertained; its value or necessity for purposes of defense on that part of the coast where it is situated, or in general, and also as regards any city in its vicinity; and any other facts which such commission may deem useful or advisable to report in regard to this question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to concur in that amendment. I believe the motion is debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not; the Chair will submit the motion to the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

The thirty-eighth amendment was non-concurred in.

The thirty-ninth amendment was read, as follows:

In line 452 insert "rent of rooms for naval dispensary."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, No. 40, in line 454, was read, as follows:

Strike out "20" and insert "15."

Mr. RANDALL. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The forty-first amendment was non-concurred in.

The forty-second amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, Nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment, No. 43, was read, as follows:

Insert in line 501, after the word "authorized," "at a total cost, when fully completed, not to exceed the amount estimated by the late naval advisory board for such vessels."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The forty-fourth amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "having," in line 504, insert "as near as may be."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The forty-fifth and forty-sixth amendments were read, as follows:

Before the word "armed," in line 512, insert the words "adapted to be;" and also, before the word "armed," in line 520, insert the same words.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move concurrence in these amendments.

The amendments were concurred in.

Amendment No. 47 was read, as follows:

Strike out in line 527 the words "naval board of advice survey" and insert "naval advisory board."

Mr. ATKINS. I move to concur in that amendment. It is simply a change of a name which seems proper.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 48 was read, as follows:

Before the word "experts," in line 536, insert the word "as;" so that it will read "and two persons of established reputation and standing as experts," &c.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 49 was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 536 and 537 the words "science and in the arts of ship-building, steam-engineering, and naval ordnance" and insert "naval or marine construction."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 50, in line 541, was read, as follows:

Strike out "fifty" and insert "eleven;" so that it will read "$11,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 51 was read, as follows:

Insert in line 546, after the word "armament," the words "nor in any contract for the same."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 52 was read, as follows:

Strike out, after the word "contractor," in line 560, the words "but shall in all things be subject to the order and direction of said Secretary."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 53 was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 54 was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "cause," in line 586, the words "either of;" so that it will read "the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to cause either of the said cruising vessels," &c.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I move to concur in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 55 was read, as follows:

Insert in line 592, after the word "proper," the words "public advertisement and."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 56 was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 601, the word "exceeding," and insert "less than."

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 57 was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "Secretary of the Navy shall report the facts to Congress, with a statement of the amount which in his opinion should be paid to such person," and insert "contractor shall bind himself to discharge the Government from all liability on account of such adoption and use."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to concur in that amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 49.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No quorum has voted. I demand tellers.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, and Mr. HISCOCK were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 51.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 58 was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 617, the words "board of advice and survey" and insert "the naval advisory board."

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment ought to be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 59 was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 633, the words "two millions two hundred thousand dollars" and insert "one million six hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. ATKINS. I move concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 60 was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 639, "one million" and insert "four hundred thousand."

Mr. ATKINS. I move to concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 61 was read, as follows:

Insert in line 640, after the word "amount," the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 62 was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 643, the word "to" and insert "under the board of construction and repair."

Mr. ATKINS. I move to concur.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 63 was read, as follows:

Strike out, in line 645, the word "and."

The committee recommend concurrence, with an amendment as follows:

After the word "Terror," in page 647, insert the words "with such necessary attachments and appliances as will render redocking of ships unnecessary."

The amendment was concurred in with the amendment.

Amendment No. 64 was as follows:

Strike out the words beginning in line 647, as follows: "To the completion of the engines and machinery of said vessels as he may, on examination, think most expedient and best for the interest of the service;" and insert: "That no further steps shall be taken or contracts entered into or approved for the repairs or completion of any of the four iron-clads aforesaid until the further order of Congress; and the naval advisory board created by this act is directed to report in detail by the 1st day of December, 1882, as to the wisdom and expediency of undertaking and completing the engines, armor, and armaments of said iron-clads, and whether any changes in the original plan or plans should be made, together with the cost of the completion of each according to the plans recommended, if the completion of any of them is recommended."

The committee recommend concurrence, with an amendment as follows:

Add to the end of the paragraph the words "and the said secretary shall transmit such report to Congress at its next session with his recommendations thereon."

The amendment with an amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 65 was concurred in.

Amendment No. 66 was read, as follows:

Strike out, beginning with line 665, the words "Provided, That all plans for the completion of the armor and armament of the said iron-clad vessels provided for in this bill shall be submitted to the board of advice and survey created by this act for its approval or disapproval."

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move concurrence in that amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 67 was read, as follows:

For the purchase of one testing-machine for making tests of plating iron, &c., $8,000.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to concur.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 68 was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 69 was read, as follows:

On page 37, section 2, line 13, strike out the following: "All such stores and supplies as shall be found by boards of appraisers to be unserviceable for use in the Navy shall be condemned and sold in the manner hereinafter provided for the sale of old materials, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the cost of such appraisal, condemnation, and sale, shall be paid into the Treasury," and insert in lieu thereof, as follows: "The Secretary of the Navy shall report the same to Congress at its next session."

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to concur.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 40, noes 51.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 70, 71, and 72 were non-concurred in.

Amendment numbered 73 was read, as follows:

On page 41, section 3, line 10, add these words:

"And also the duration of such service, beyond which time it shall not continue."

Mr. RANDALL. I move to concur.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 23, noes 37.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments numbered 74, 75, and 76 were non-concurred in.

Mr. ROBESON moved to reconsider the several votes of concurrence and non-concurrence in amendments of the Senate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS AND BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 122) requiring the Public Printer to publish certain decisions of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 220) to furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each State and Territorial library;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 269) providing for additional copies of the Revised Statutes for the use of the Interior Department;

A bill (S. No. 979) regulating fees and the practice in extradition cases;

A bill (S. No. 1120) for the relief of Eugene B. Allen; and

A bill (S. No. 1845) to authorize the Postmaster-General to extend the mail service in certain cases, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) for the printing of additional copies of House Executive Document No. 47 and subsequent land laws; and A bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Washington Light Infantry Corps;

A bill (H. R. No. 5222) to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court and post-office and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2402) to quiet title to certain land in Washington, District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bill of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply tents to the annual muster of the State militia of Kansas; and

A bill (S. No. 2171) to remove the political disabilities of Frank C. Armstrong, of Maryland.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain lands adjacent to the town of Pendleton, in the State of Oregon, belonging to the Umatilla Indian reservation, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 101) for the relief of G. W. Thompson and others.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House concurring.) That the proceedings of the American forestry convention held at Cincinnati in April, 1877, be printed under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,600 copies for the use of the House, and 1,100 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

INTERVENTION BETWEEN CHILI AND PERU.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution of the House relative to certain missing papers from the files of the Department of State, and also directing inquiries to be made as to the connection of one or more ministers plenipotentiary of the United States with business transactions in which the intervention of the United States was requested between Chili and Peru, submitted a resolution; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I rise to make a privileged report. I present the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1052) entitled "An act in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

CHAS. G. WILLIAMS,

W. W. RICE,

P. V. DEUSTER,

Managers on the part of the House.

T. F. BAYARD,

W. WINDOM,

JOHN SHERMAN,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for another committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees Mr. WILLIAMS of Wisconsin, Mr. RICE of Massachusetts, and Mr. DEUSTER of Wisconsin.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] rises to present a privileged resolution.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ANDERSON. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve o'clock, noon, Friday, August 4, 1882.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move the adoption of that resolution.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on Mr. BROWNE's motion.

Mr. HISCOCK addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. HISCOCK. I was about to make the suggestion that I believe at this stage of the session that resolution should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 35, noes 47.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means was not agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 49, noes 45.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 32 members voting therefor.

Mr. RANDALL. If gentlemen will consent, it will save time to have the vote by yeas and nays taken on the passage of the resolution rather than on the motion to refer.

Mr. HISCOCK. This resolution fixes the date of adjournment on Thursday.

Mr. ANDERSON. No, sir; it fixes it on Friday at twelve o'clock. That gives ample time.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] allow the vote to be taken on the passage or rejection of the resolution.

Mr. HASKELL. I hope the motion to refer will not be withdrawn. It is the usual practice to refer such a resolution to a committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered. I think there is no use of consuming time with the yeas and nays unless we can have them on the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER put the question on the motion to reconsider, and declared it agreed to.

Mr. KNOTT. Can we have the yeas and nays upon that?

Mr. RANDALL. Is it the understanding that we will have the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution?

Mr. ROBESON. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will permit me. It is whether, when we have four bills in conference, the House wishes to tie itself so that it will adjourn whether the Senate agrees or not, or if it would not be better to have that question referred to the appropriate committee?

Mr. RANDALL. That is in the nature of an argument. We have been here so long and done so little, I think some such spur as this should be given to those who apparently want to stay longer.

Mr. HISCOCK. I say we have been here so long and done so much that I feel very well content.

Mr. RANDALL. That depends on the way you look at it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from New Jersey or the gentleman from New York, whether they do not both believe it is just as competent for Congress to determine to-day it will adjourn at noon on Friday, without doing any injustice to those four appropriation bills, as it is to fix Friday two weeks as the day of adjournment?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will answer that question. For myself I believe that it is entirely feasible for this House to adjourn on Friday next; but I do not propose to put it in the power of the Senate at this time to coerce the House into concessions in committees of conference.

And I desire to say another word, as the subject has been referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, that so far as the legislative appropriation bill is concerned but one provision of that bill remains now open. That provision remains open because the conferees on the part of the House have for a week past solicited a meeting with the conferees on the part of the Senate and have been denied.

This House also differs with the Senate upon only one proposition in the deficiency appropriation bill, and that is the proposition to pay mileage to the Senate for the extra session. I have in this House twice made the motion to recede from the position the House had taken and to concur in the Senate amendment, which would close up action on that bill; and twice the House has voted that down. Now so far as that proposition is concerned, I do not propose to put it in the power of the Senate to say that that bill may fail because Congress has determined to adjourn on a particular day.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As the chairman of the House conferees, is not the gentleman thoroughly satisfied that if this House shall determine and the Senate shall agree to adjourn this session on Friday next, the only question of difference between the two Houses upon the deficiency bill, which as he has stated is the question of mileage for the extra session, will be promptly yielded by the Senate?

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as that is concerned I will say that I understand from certain Senators that they are willing to recede, and from certain other Senators that they will never recede. Now, I believe that this House is as capable of settling this question of adjournment as the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman believe that there can be found in the other branch of Congress a single Senator who will assume the responsibility of allowing that bill to fail unless he gets mileage for the extra session?

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as Senators are concerned who are persistent in insisting upon the payment of mileage, the relations of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] with them are far more intimate and close than mine; because the objections to an agreement, as I understand it, come from his side of the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not so understand it, but on the contrary I understand that both sides of the Senate alike are demanding it.

Mr. KASSON. It is certainly customary, Mr. Speaker, to allow a little debate on an important question of this sort, and I ask permission to speak for a moment on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means.

I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] or any gentleman on the other side of the House who may feel authorized to answer the question, whether he thinks it is the duty of the House to adjourn before some final action has been taken by the Senate on the bill for the reduction of unnecessary taxation. [Laughter.] I do not wonder that gentlemen on the other side smile, and smile aloud, at the idea that anybody should doubt the fact that they have endeavored in this body and the other to thwart the passage at this session of any bill for the reduction of taxation.

Now, sir, let me say in regard to adjournment, expressing my opinion as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, that this House ought not to pass any resolution for adjournment until decided action has been taken in the Senate, so that no misconception can arise as to the purpose of the other body either to reject or adopt the bill for the reduction of taxation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the gentleman if he will permit me.

Mr. KASSON. I will be glad to have the gentleman do so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to tell him that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of this House, [Mr. KELLEY,] who has left the city not to return any more during this session, as I understand—

Mr. KASSON. That is an error.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Informed me that the taxation bill now before the Senate would not be acted on until the next December session.

Mr. KASSON. I must say that I have no such information from the chairman of my committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have his authority to say so.

Mr. KASSON. And I think he has not authorized any declaration in public of any such purpose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. KELLEY made that statement to me, and not in private.

Mr. KASSON. On the floor of the House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not through the RECORD.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say that whoever has made that statement, no action of the Committee on Ways and Means has been the foundation of that declaration.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I never suspected that it was.

Mr. KASSON. Then I will go back and say that the member who insists on drawing taxes from the people that the executive branch of the Government even declares officially it does not want, and refuses to reduce taxation when such reduction is positively urged by the Executive messages, will be shown by his going on record in favor of an adjournment of this session prior to any final action on the bill for the reducing of taxes. I will not so vote.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's voice should have been raised in the direction which he indicates in the Republican caucus which was held at an early period in the session.

Mr. KASSON. It was so raised, and raised early and promptly.

Mr. RANDALL. And I regret without success.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And the gentleman was voted down.

Mr. KASSON. And I was supported by the caucus.

Several members, amid great confusion, addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must insist on having order. No member can be recognized until the House is in order.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I wish to know whether the pending question is not upon the demand of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] for the yeas and nays, and whether that question is debatable?

Mr. ANDERSON. The vote ordering the yeas and nays was reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations. On that question the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] as the Chair understands, has demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I moved to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman from Illinois moved to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered and I demanded the yeas and nays on his motion. We might as well have a direct vote as go way around Robin Hood's barn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Kentucky to demand the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion has been put and carried.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that the gentleman from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Kentucky to demand the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider, but to make a second demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to refer, after the result of the motion to reconsider had been declared.

Mr. KNOTT. I demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to reconsider immediately upon that motion being made. The gentleman from Illinois, as I understand, now withdraws that motion.

The SPEAKER. Then the yeas and nays will be considered as ordered—

A MEMBER. On what?

The SPEAKER. On the motion of the gentleman from New York. This debate has proceeded because there seemed to be no objection to it. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the motion of the gentleman from New York to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CANNON. I have been standing here trying to catch the eye of the Speaker for ten or fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask unanimous consent to speak a minute upon this question.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WISE, of Virginia. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 90, nays 77, not voting 122; as follows:

So the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. During the roll-call the following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. JONES, of New Jersey, with Mr. HERBERT.
 Mr. HEILMAN with Mr. BLAND.
 Mr. MCCOY with Mr. CLARK.
 Mr. LINDSEY with Mr. LADD.
 Mr. HUMPHREY with Mr. BRAGG.
 Mr. HALL with Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania.
 Mr. HUBBS with Mr. SHACKELFORD.
 Mr. BARR with Mr. DAVIDSON.
 Mr. STONE with Mr. HEWITT of Alabama.
 Mr. YOUNG with Mr. CLARDY.
 Mr. ORTH with Mr. SPARKS.
 Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, with Mr. COOK.
 Mr. SCRANTON with Mr. BEACH.
 Mr. CORNELL with Mr. DOWD.
 Mr. HAMMOND, of New York, with Mr. PHISTER.
 Mr. GEDDES with Mr. NEAL.
 Mr. MASON with Mr. MONEY.
 Mr. GROUT with Mr. STOCKSLAGER.
 Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON of Illinois.
 Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa, with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. COBB.
 Mr. CASWELL with Mr. MOULTON.
 Mr. BELTZHOVER with Mr. MCCOOK.
 Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. SPEER.
 Mr. CHACE with Mr. SCOVILLE.
 Mr. MOORE with Mr. MATSON.
 Mr. SMITH, of Illinois, with Mr. MORSE.
 Mr. PETTIBONE with Mr. ATHERTON.
 Mr. MORRISON with Mr. KELLEY.
 Mr. GODSHALK with Mr. AIKEN.
 Mr. HOUK with Mr. COVINGTON.
 Mr. LACEY with Mr. BENJAMIN WOOD.
 Mr. FARWELL, of Illinois, with Mr. MULBROW.
 Mr. CUTTS with Mr. KENNA.
 Mr. NOLAN with Mr. DWIGHT.
 Mr. BREWER with Mr. HARDENBERGH.
 Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. JADWIN.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Iowa. I am announced as paired with Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I was paired some days ago on one vote, but that pair has long since expired.

Mr. CALKINS. I was paired with Mr. BARBOUR, but that pair is at an end, and I have voted.

On motion of Mr. CALKINS, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

EVENING SESSION VACATED.

Mr. ROBESON. I move, by unanimous consent, that the session for this evening be vacated.
 The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALKINS. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 22.

Mr. ATKINS. No quorum has voted.

The Speaker appointed as tellers Mr. CALKINS and Mr. ATKINS.

Mr. POUND. In the interest of good order and safe legislation I think the House should adjourn; and if the tellers will yield the floor I will make that motion.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 86, noes 22. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No quorum has voted, and I move the House do now adjourn.

The House further divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 56.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize privileged reports.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION APPROVED.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1048) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Brady;

An act (H. R. No. 2872) to increase the pension of James Hawthorne;

An act (H. R. No. 2104) granting a pension to Mrs. Electa L. Baldwin;

An act (H. R. No. 4082) granting a pension to Ellen Gillespie;

An act (H. R. No. 5809) for the relief of Jacob Humble;

An act (H. R. No. 1543) granting a pension to Albert O. Miller, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 6514) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 5388) to fix the times for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in the northern district of Ohio;

An act (H. R. No. 4174) for the erection of a public building at Marquette, Michigan;

An act (H. R. No. 4178) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pennsylvania;

An act (H. R. No. 1873) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan;

An act (H. R. No. 2374) granting to certain parties right of way over lands and waters of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 1858) to provide additional industrial training-schools for Indian youth, and authorizing the use of unoccupied military barracks for such purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 864) granting a pension to Amanda J. McFadden;

An act (H. R. No. 3599) granting a pension to David T. Stephenson;

An act (H. R. No. 6739) for the relief of Lucretia R. Garfield; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 271) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twenty-five wall-tents to the colony of Russian Hebrew refugees at Cimarron, Foote County, Kansas.

PUBLICATION OF THE TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire now, Mr. Speaker, to submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. REED. Is not the regular order the motion to go to the Speaker's table?

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a privileged report.

Mr. REED. It is not privileged to come in while we are dividing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertained the motion to go to the Speaker's table, as no objection was made to it, somewhat out of its regular order.

Mr. REED. But we are dividing on that question now.

The SPEAKER. Tellers were ordered upon the question and have withdrawn, no quorum having voted upon it. A motion to adjourn has intervened, and was voted down. The privileged matter is now in order as presented by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CALKINS. To simplify the question, I withdraw the motion to go to business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask now the consideration of the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the reports of the Tenth Census of the United States be printed, and that 10,000 additional copies be printed, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of the Interior.

That, in addition to the above, 20,000 copies of the report on population be printed, of which 6,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 12,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the use of the Department of the Interior. That 20,000 additional copies of the report on agriculture be printed, of which 6,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior.

That 10,000 additional copies of the report on manufactures and mechanics be printed, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior.

Also, that 15,000 additional copies of the report on the history of the national loan be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

Also, that 1,500 additional copies of the report on fish and fisheries be printed for the use of the Fish Commission.

And, also, that the compendium of the Tenth Census be printed, and that 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 30,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 60,000 copies for the use of the House, and 10,000 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior.

And in order to avoid duplication in the distribution of these documents, and to secure complete sets to libraries and other public institutions, the additional copies herein ordered, excepting those ordered for the Treasury Department and for the Fish Commission, be delivered to the document-rooms of the Department of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute those ordered for the use of Congress as follows: in sets to each of such fifteen libraries and other public institutions or individuals as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Senator, and to each of such ten libraries and other public institutions or individuals as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Representative and Delegate, and in volumes to Senators and Representatives or such other parties as shall be designated by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates until the quota of each shall be exhausted: Provided, That one copy of each volume shall, on its reception from the Public Printing Office, be transmitted to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress: And provided further, That duplicate copies shall not be sent to any library or individual on the request of any Senator or member of the House of Representatives until both Senator and Member shall be notified that they have named the same library or individual: And provided further, That the party receiving the work upon the order of a member of Congress shall be informed by the Secretary of the Interior upon whose request it is supplied. And the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress at its next session the names and locations of the libraries and other public institutions designated to receive these reports under the provisions of this bill.

And the sum of $678,624.61, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the cost of the above-named printing and binding, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask that the report of the Committee on Printing be printed in the RECORD. It is not necessary to read it now. There is a correction at the bottom of the first page, which I have entered in the report. The amount appropriated by the bill is $678,624.61 instead of what is printed in the report.

As stated by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, there was no appropriation made in the regular appropriation bills for carrying on the public printing that included in the estimates the printing of these census reports. Therefore it was necessary in providing for their printing to make an appropriation to cover the cost. The report, which I have asked to be printed in the RECORD, contains a detailed account of the various items of expenditure involved in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. That report ought to be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to have the report read. I ask therefore that it be read for the information of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to make an inquiry.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report be read first and that will answer many inquiries.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House committee adopt the following portions of the report of the Senate committee on this bill:

"The Tenth Census is doubtless the most extensive and complete that has been taken; more comprehensive in its scope, more minute in its details. Its reports constitute a wonderful exhibition of the population, the resources, the accumulated wealth, and the varied industries of the country. Its preparation has been laborious and costly. The results of the work can be made available only by general distribution among the public libraries, and, to a considerable extent, among individuals.

"Of course it has not been possible for the members of the committee to examine with any degree of minuteness the voluminous reports that have been sent to the Government Printing Office, which include only a portion of the work. The committee have been obliged to rely upon the reputation and the representations of the two intelligent and distinguished statisticians under whose direction the work has been performed.

"It has, however, been objected that some of the compilations, interesting in themselves, do not properly belong to the enumeration of the census, and that they swell the series of reports to unwieldy proportions. The committee, while feeling the force of this objection, and thinking that some of this work might have been omitted without great disadvantage to the value of the series of reports, do not feel authorized to recommend that their publication be withheld. The expense of their preparation has been incurred and the work executed under the superintendence of able and accomplished specialists. To refuse the comparatively small cost of printing a reasonable number of them would render useless all the cost of their preparation, and they add highly interesting and valuable information upon the subjects on which they treat. Nevertheless, upon consultation with Colonel Seaton, now the head of the Census Bureau, it has been decided that while no report or essay shall be omitted, the aggregate can be condensed from 18,000 pages to 15,000, securing a very considerable reduction in cost without loss of interest or value.

"The committee therefore recommend that the 'usual number' of the complete series of separate reports, reduced to 15,000 pages, be printed, with 10,000 additional copies of the entire series of reports, 20,000 additional copies of the report on population, 20,000 additional copies of the report on agriculture, 10,000 additional copies of the report on manufactures and mechanics, and the 'usual number' of the compendium, with 100,000 additional copies. This last-named volume will be of the most practical value for popular reference, and the committee would recommend a larger number, but the work being stereotyped new editions can be ordered if found desirable.

"The entire cost of the publication recommended in the bill which accompanies this report is $678,624.61.

"The bill provides a system of distribution which is intended to secure these valuable publications in complete sets to public libraries, as well as to individuals. The provision on this subject is as follows:

"That in order to avoid duplication in the distribution of these documents, and to secure complete sets to libraries and other public institutions, the additional copies herein ordered, excepting those ordered for the Treasury Department and for the Fish Commission, be delivered to the document-rooms of the Department of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute those ordered for the use of Congress as follows: in sets to each of such fifteen libraries and other public institutions or individuals as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Senator, and to each of such ten libraries and other public institutions or individuals as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Representative and Delegate, and in volumes to Senators and Representatives or such other parties as shall be designated by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, until the quota of each shall be exhausted: Provided, That one copy of each volume shall, on its reception from the Public Printing Office, be transmitted to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress: And provided further, That duplicate copies shall not be sent to any library or individual on the request of any Senator or member of the House of Representatives until both Senator and Member shall be notified that they have named the same library or individual: And provided further, That the party receiving the work upon the order of a member of Congress shall be informed by the Secretary of the Interior upon whose request it is supplied. And the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress at its next session the names and locations of the libraries and other public institutions designated to receive these reports under the provisions of this bill."

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to offer an amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before that is done I wish to offer an amendment to the text of the bill in order to perfect it. The estimates for printing, as embraced in that report, make a provision for 6,000 copies of the history of the national loan contained in the census report for the Treasury Department, and embrace an item of $4,289.80 to provide for the cost.

The bill itself, however, provides for printing 15,000 copies. I move to strike out the word "fifteen," in line 23 of the bill, and insert the word "six;" so that it will read "six thousand additional copies of the report on the history of the national loan," &c., that number being sufficient for the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to offer an additional section to the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have an amendment to offer to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the amendment to the text of the bill before the additional section proposed by the gentleman from New York is considered.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to move an amendment to strike out all that portion of the bill which changes the present system of the distribution of these documents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to strike out the words contained in the bill beginning with line 35, down to and including line 64.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And in order to avoid duplication in the distribution of these documents, and to secure complete sets to libraries and other public institutions, the additional copies herein ordered, excepting those ordered for the Treasury Department and for the Fish Commission, be delivered to the document-rooms of the Department of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute those ordered for the use of Congress as follows: in sets to each of such fifteen libraries and other public institutions or individuals as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Senator, and to each of such ten libraries and other public institutions or individuals as shall be named to him for this purpose by each Representative and Delegate, and in volumes to Senators and Representatives or such other parties as shall be designated by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates until the quota of each shall be exhausted: Provided, That one copy of each volume shall, on its reception from the Public Printing Office, be transmitted to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress: And provided further, That duplicate copies shall not be sent to any library or individual on the request of any Senator or member of the House of Representatives until both Senator and Member shall be notified that they have named the same library or individual: And provided further, That the party receiving the work upon the order of a Member of Congress shall be informed by the Secretary of the Interior upon whose request it is supplied. And the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress at its next session the names and locations of the libraries and other public institutions designated to receive these reports under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that this provision of the bill will change the present mode of distributing documents by members of Congress.

The reason for it is a good one in one sense, namely, a desire on the part of the committee, if I understand the question properly, that the census reports shall be placed by sets in public institutions; and in order to accomplish that it is provided that the Secretary of the Interior, when furnished by a Senator or member of Congress with a list of public libraries or individuals, shall then send a complete set of these documents to that one library or to that one individual.

Of course that would accomplish the purpose which the committee has in view. But then it is easy to see that that proceeds upon the theory that a member of Congress will not do the same thing. In other words, you propose to limit him by placing this work in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. And you do one thing more, you place it in the hands of the members of this Congress to designate the libraries or the individuals who shall receive all of the books published respecting this census. Now, that strikes me as being a little bit too grasping. It appears to me that the members of the next Congress have some rights as to the distribution of these books.

Furthermore, it strikes me that this is undertaking to limit a man's liberty as to how he shall make a distribution of the quota of the books assigned to him; and with the utmost deference to the committee and its plan, I do not feel like limiting myself in that respect for any such purpose. I hold I have just exactly as much competency to say how I will distribute these documents, whether I will send one set complete to one man or send some volumes of the set to one man and some volumes to another man, as the committee has to tell me how I shall do it.

For that reason I have offered this amendment. If it be adopted, and if this portion of the bill be stricken out, then the distribution of the census reports, if I correctly understand it, will be exactly as it now is with respect to all reports; and every Senator and every Member can then make the distribution just as he sees fit.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Kansas is mistaken in one respect. He says this provision limits the right of the members of Congress to make the distribution in their own way.

Mr. ANDERSON. It limits it as to the mode of distribution.

Mr. SPRINGER. It limits it in only one respect. It provides a different place for distributing the work. But the gentleman himself must indicate to whom the books go, every one of them. Nobody indicates it for him. He is the sole judge of the persons, libraries, and associations that are to receive these books.

If you do not adopt this provision what will be the result? On the 4th of March next a new Congress will come into power and by that time a portion of these complete sets will have been distributed by the members of this Congress. Another Congress comes in having in it thirty-two members more than there are in this Congress; and then if you recast the whole thing to make another distribution and the members of the next Congress distribute in another way, the consequence will be when you have printed the census reports they will be scattered hither and thither and there will be no complete sets in existence.

This proposition was moved by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] as an amendment to the bill as it came from the Committee on Printing of the Senate, and was adopted, I believe, with almost entire unanimity by the Senate after it had been explained by that gentleman. The object, as in the case of the official records of the rebellion, is to secure complete sets of this valuable work in the public libraries of the country as far as possible. But the bill does not limit gentlemen to sending these books to public libraries. They may select individuals and the individuals selected will get, if you so indicate, the complete sets of the reports. I think it is desirable that gentlemen should have the privilege of naming the institutions to which these valuable books should be sent, and that the complete sets should go where the order indicates.

Now, a word as to the other proposition, whether it is wrong for this Congress to take to itself the entire distribution of this work. I say it is not. It devolves on this Congress to order the work to be printed; and whenever Congress orders a book to be printed the same Congress should indicate the manner of the distribution which should be made of that book. That is all we propose to do. If those who come after us want more copies printed, they are all stereotyped and they can have them printed to their heart's content, and they are controlled by nothing in making those orders, because each Congress is supreme in such matters.

But we have deemed the number indicated in this bill a proper number to be distributed by this Congress, and the number has been limited much below the number which this House indicated as to some of these reports. When the Committee on Printing brought in a special bill to print the first volume on population, indicating 55,000 copies to be printed, that number was increased, I believe on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HUBBELL], to 90,000. This report limits the number of copies of the volume on population to 10,000 of the regular set and 20,000 additional copies, which is 30,000 in all upon the subject of population. We print only 10,000 of the complete sets of these reports, which will embrace fifteen volumes of a thousand pages each, and which ought to be placed in the public libraries of the country. We have provided 20,000 additional copies of the volume on agriculture and 20,000 additional of the volume on manufactures.

Then there is a provision to print 100,000 copies of the compendium of the census. This is intended for popular circulation and distribution among the people, so that gentlemen will be unlimited in the number of addresses, except within the limit of 100,000, that they may indicate for the compendium of the census. Therefore I think this House ought to indicate the manner in which the distribution we have ordered in this bill should be made; and I think the mode indicated is a reasonable one, considering the value of the work.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word on the subject of this bill. The bill before us provides for the publication of nearly 200,000 volumes of books; what the number will be annually I am not able to say. One point to which I desire to call the attention of the House is that we now have the necessary rooms and organization for the distribution of public documents. If the provisions of this bill shall be adopted, and we be required to go to the Interior Department to secure the distribution of these documents a large additional amount of room will be required there and also a considerable number of clerks; so that directly we will have a bureau added there to the present expensive system of the distribution of public documents. The whole bill proceeds upon the idea that the Senators and Representatives of the people will not have sufficient discretion to place the valuable portions of these documents in such libraries and public institutions as will render them most valuable to the several States and districts which they represent. Now, I do not think that there is any necessity for invoking the guardianship of the Interior Department, with the heavy expense of the additional machinery which will follow the adoption of the course here recommended.

Under this bill, if a member of the House or of the Senate receives a request from one of his constituents for a copy of the Agricultural Report, for instance, which we are receiving daily, instead of going where our documents are here, or sending a page to obtain a document, which we direct and send off, we would be required to address a formal communication to the Department of the Interior, and an answer from that Department would be sent stating to whom that volume of the Agricultural Report had been sent. Now, when you think of the hundreds of thousands of documents which are distributed you will see the necessity of a large clerical force in the Interior Department, and when these documents are taken from the depository here in the Capitol, where there is ample room for them, and transferred to the Interior Department, provision will have to be made there for double the room which that Department now has. I am opposed to the whole change. I think members of the House are as capable of sending these documents where they will be the most useful, without all this proposed machinery, as they will be with this machinery. The whole thing is very well calculated to give places and salaries to an additional number of persons, without, as it seems to me, any compensating benefit to the public at all, and with an amount of inconvenience to Senators and Representatives that it would be unwise and imprudent to bring upon ourselves.

Now, who is it, when he has received an application from a constituent for a particular document and can send it off from the Capitol without any trouble, wishes to write a letter to the Interior Department and have that Department notify that constituent by letter that such a member has directed such a document to be sent to him, and then notify the member that the document has been sent? How many clerks will it take to do all this? The Secretary of the Interior and the principal officers of the Department will not do it; it will have to be done by a corps of officers appointed to superintend and discharge this duty.

I think the whole proposed machinery is unnecessary, cumbersome, inconvenient, and undesirable, and I trust that the whole proposition will be defeated.

Mr. SPRINGER. One word in reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in regard to the inconvenience of this manner of distribution. The gentleman desires to retain the old machinery which we have had for some time. Let me give him an instance of how it operates. We have for many years been distributing what are called Hayden's Reports, a very valuable scientific work. Yet the gentleman cannot find in a single library in the country, except by accident, a complete set of those reports. The other day the Interior Department had to buy a complete set of those reports from a second-hand dealer in this city. The distribution of public documents has been a public scandal, an enormous waste, a useless extravagance that ought to be abated.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And the gentleman might say that in the public libraries of Europe there are six hundred complete sets of that work.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the Department now distribute under the law continuous volumes of each work to eight libraries in each Congressional district?

Mr. SPRINGER. To only one library in each district. I went to the Department the other day myself and made inquiry, and found that only one library in my district was supplied with these public documents.

Mr. REAGAN. The law authorizes the member from each district to designate some public library in his district to which these documents shall be distributed; that is already done by law.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Only one library in each district.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I was mistaken about that.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, one word to the gentleman from Texas as to this proposed method of distribution costing a great deal of money. There is no provision under our present system for distributing these documents. Under that system, if continued in force, these documents will be piled by the wagon-load into the basement of the Capitol, rendering it a perfect tinder-box to endanger all this public property.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. SPRINGER. One moment. The present force which we now have for folding the public documents is so much crowded that the other day we had to go outside of the Capitol and hire another building, in order to give them room for folding and distributing the documents which we now have.

The gentleman says that this method of distribution will cost a great deal of money. But, Mr. Speaker, we are not going to get this work done for nothing; and it will not cost any more to have it done in one place in this city than another, or by one administration than another. I believe that the most expensive of all systems of distribution is that conducted here in the House of Representatives through our own employés.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman says that these books, if stored in the Capitol, will form a tinder-box. I wish to say to him that they will be just as much a tinder-box in the Interior Department; and if there is to be expense in obtaining room for the purpose, that expense is likely to be increased rather than diminished by putting the matter in charge of the Interior Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. These books will remain in the Printing Office or in some other secure place until they are needed, and then they will be sent to such persons as members may designate and no others. Members will have the matter under their own control entirely.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this seems to me an extremely good measure, one which I think is to be commended and should be generally supported. It is a step in the right direction. Not many of us stay here a great many successive terms; and so long as publications of this kind issued by the Government are distributed through members of Congress, one member sending a portion of a set to one person or one institution and his successor sending the residue of the set to another person or another institution, the sets are all broken up and the benefit intended from the publication is not realized.

It is of the utmost importance that some such arrangement as this should be made with regard to this very valuable and to the Government expensive publication. It is no derogation from the privileges of members of this House to adopt some method of distribution by which they may be relieved from the labor of distributing public documents. For my part I should be very glad indeed if some plan should be adopted—and I hope it may be in the near future—by which the various publications of this Government may be fairly distributed throughout the country without passing through the hands of members of Congress. The distribution of these documents ought not to be made a matter of party preference or personal benefit. If we could rise to the level of having seeds and plants distributed in some general way so that as members of Congress we might be relieved from the work of supervising the distribution of such matters, and have our time left to us to attend to great matters of legislation, it would be vastly better for ourselves and certainly better for the country.

The Gazette, issued by the Patent Office, is, as we all know, circulated under a general plan which meets the public approval. It seems to me the method proposed in this bill will work well; and I certainly welcome the measure not only as suitable in the present instance but as a step in the right direction—the inauguration, as I hope, of what will be the general policy by and by. I hope that members of Congress may be relieved as soon as possible from the business of distributing books and seeds, and finding places for people of the country, and may be allowed opportunity to attend properly under the law to the duty of legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I shall be very glad to hear the gentleman, and to reply to him if necessary.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman is not discussing any matter before the House.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I understand that I am.

Mr. REAGAN. There is no bill here executing the purpose for which the gentleman indicates a preference. If this bill be passed, members of Congress will still designate where these documents shall go, but instead of sending them directly they must write a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, receive an answer, and have the answer transmitted.

There is no provision in the bill for the deposit of these documents in public libraries. It will still be the duty of members of Congress to indicate in their discretion public libraries and private persons who shall receive these documents. This being so, I do not see the advantage of incurring additional expense to execute the pleasure of the Senator or Representative in the distribution.

I fully agree with the gentleman that it would be desirable to relieve members of Congress from the distribution of seeds and plants, allowing us more time to attend to our legislative duties; but as to documents, the publication of which is deemed of public importance, I do not conceive that there can be a better agency for their proper distribution, with reference to the benefit of the public, than through Senators chosen by the States and Representatives chosen by the people.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Texas, it seems to me, misapprehends the purport of this matter.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ANDERSON. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to be through, and when the gentleman from Texas replied that I was recognized.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when you bring it down to the nut-shell there are two effects of this proposed change. The first is to substitute public libraries for individuals to a large extent. The design is to have the libraries taken care of. My recollection is that this proposition has been voted down three or four times already.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was unanimously agreed to in the sundry civil appropriation bill, in reference to the distribution of the annals of the rebellion.

Mr. ANDERSON. It ought to have been voted down. The question is whether, when the Government provide these publications, we shall go out of our way to prefer public libraries to the individual citizen? That is the first point I wish to make. It is exactly in keeping with this whole idea of ignoring the individual and building up libraries. That is my first objection to this plan.

The second is that this is exactly in keeping with that atmosphere of fungus growth of eternal, everlasting system of red tape. As it is now, you can send your list and have your documents sent out. By the new system you must send to the Secretary of the Interior and get a letter from him in regard to what the Senator has done, and finally, after a lot more of red tape, you may get the documents distributed. But the real milk in the cocoanut is an effort on the part of members of this House to regulate the distribution of these documents, and I am opposed to it for that reason.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think it is important this bill should be adopted as recommended by the Committee on Printing. It is an essential measure. It is a measure which will secure a just and fair distribution of these documents. I venture to make the prediction that if the old method be retained in distributing these documents, as the gentleman from Kansas would have it, there would not in all probability be in the whole Union one dozen or twenty sets of these documents anywhere.

Now, there are in each Congressional district four or five, or from eight to ten public libraries, and if the members of Congress now indicate these libraries shall have these census reports the census reports will be distributed until the very last one shall have been distributed to each one of these libraries, and then each one of these libraries in each one of these Congressional districts will have them preserved for reference. In this way the people can reach them, as suggested by the gentleman from Maine.

Moreover, such individuals as may be designated by the members of the present Congress to whom these documents are to be distributed will be gentlemen of public character, scientific men, who take an interest in public affairs, and who will be worthy recipients and custodians of these books. But if it be permitted to go the other way, a book of one description will go to one person, and yet another to another, and a certain number will go to certain libraries, and others, so that there will be broken sets of these books which should be uniform throughout the whole country, found everywhere and complete sets nowhere.

The remedy which may be required to meet the case of new members of Congress, those not members of this Congress, and for an additional number of Congressmen who will come into the next Congress, can be provided by a supplemental bill for an additional publication, and then these gentlemen can distribute to their districts and to the new Congressional districts.

Take the instance of Kansas, where there are now but three Representatives, where there are new Congressional districts, where partiality and favoritism necessarily will be shown, because gentlemen now here will not reach all the parts of that State, where lines have not been sufficiently indicated to know, some gentleman will come from one district and some from another, there you will find the whole number which will go to Kansas will now only go into the three present Congressional districts, while the other four new Congressional districts will scarcely get a book. I can understand, therefore, why the gentleman from Kansas is so energetic in his effort to secure for himself the distribution of these books, because there will be four new districts in that State which, by the old distribution, will not be reached at all, nor by any other member from Kansas, unless their sense of fairness will induce them to reach out further than the gentleman who is now so vigorously opposing this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will my friend allow me to make just this suggestion, that the present three Congressional districts of Kansas cover the entire State, and secondly, that I am in favor of making such a distribution of these documents as will allow my new colleagues to have a fair show in the matter. This measure is simply porcine. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. I have no doubt that the gentleman knows now what the next Congressional districts are to be as fixed by the apportionment bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. No, I do not; I wish I did.

Mr. BAYNE. And it is probable that he will make a distribution of the documents that will be entirely satisfactory to the people of his district, however unsatisfactory it might be to the people of the State generally. I hope the bill will pass. It is a step in the right direction, and I hope it will be adopted with reference to all these Congressional publications.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to say but a word, Mr. Speaker. I echo all that my friend from Pennsylvania has said simply for the reason that I do not want the reproach to rest upon Congressmen that they are selling out these documents to second-hand book stores in future as we have heard stated here in the past.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is right.

Mr. COX, of New York. And this is intended to prevent that sort of business in future. It is intended to prevent disgrace in that direction.

Mr. REED. I hope it is not intended for that purpose, for it does not seem to me that the practice to which the gentleman refers prevails to any considerable extent. The object of this, as I understand it, is that these complete sets of documents may go to the public libraries or to individuals deemed worthy to possess them under the circumstances; and it is a principle that is inapplicable to any other public documents except those which are published in sets or continuously from year to year. The same principle ought to be adopted as to sets of all other public documents, leaving the question entirely open as to whether any such system would be useful with reference to single documents. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire simply to make a correction, as there seems to be a misapprehension in what I have said with reference to the number of these copies which will go to members. They will be entitled to about twenty copies each; and the word "ten" was used simply as a decimal to indicate the ratio or proportion, but had no reference to the number of copies they would receive.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to strike out the words which have been read.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in case the Public Printer should find it impossible to complete the printing of the census reports within the current fiscal year, he may rent additional accommodations for not exceeding one year and at a cost of not exceeding $2,500, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SPRINGER. So far as I am individually concerned, I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the committee agreed to it?

Mr. SPRINGER. The committee has not agreed to it; it was not before them.

Mr. RANDALL. Then of course the gentleman has no power to accept the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I stated that as an individual I was willing to accept it.

The SPEAKER submitted the question to the House, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rose for the purpose of being heard upon that amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to explain the amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I addressed the Speaker before the question was put.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only be heard by unanimous consent, the question having been already decided by the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I addressed the Speaker in the gentlest manner that I could before the question was submitted. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as rising to debate the proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it go over until next session.

Mr. SPRINGER. Unless something of this kind is done the probability is that the printing will be delayed.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to ask unanimous consent for only a moment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman from New York will be heard briefly.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will do my best to make it short. These reports of the census, in which I take perhaps more interest than any other member of the House, were intended in the first place for apportionment. That is foregone. In the next place they were intended for social science—for legislation. In order to make them useful in the last regard we want prompt publication of them. If they go beyond the year, or if their publication is much delayed, they are almost as useless as a ticket after the election or a newspaper—

Mr. ANDERSON. At any time. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX, of New York. What I want to say to the House is this: I do not believe, in view of the facts which I wish to print, and which I cannot speak in the impatient temper of the House at this time, it is possible for the Public Printer to have the reports provided for in this bill published within one year unless we give him more room, unless we extend his facilities so that he may do considerably more press-work than he can do now.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the Public Printer asked for anything of this sort?

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from New York was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make this suggestion—

Mr. COX, of New York. I am not off the floor yet. The census bill requires 10,000 copies of the full report to be printed, 20,000 copies on population, 20,000 on agriculture, 10,000 on manufactures and mechanics, 15,000 on national loan, 1,500 on fish, and 100,000 of the compendium.

To print 10,000 copies of the full report will require 10,000,000 sheets of paper. This will take ten presses seven months to print this alone. The compendium contains 1,200 pages and 100,000 copies, and to print this will require 7,500,000 sheets of paper, and this will require ten presses one hundred and fifty days; or to print the census and compendium alone will require ten presses three hundred and fifty days; and to print all the reports of the census will require at least one and one-half years with the present facilities in the Government Printing Office.

The census report demands to be printed promptly, as I said. If delayed, all its advantages will be lost. My amendment only asks that we shall appropriate $2,500 in case the Superintendent of the Public Printing shall find he cannot do the work within one year.

Mr. ATKINS. What for?

Mr. COX, of New York. For lack of room and lack of sufficient facilities for press-work. Therefore I think we can give that discretion to the Public Printer, and it will forward the publication of this important document.

Mr. RANDALL. Has the Public Printer asked for this?

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not care whether he has asked for it or not. He is a new man here. I do not take my notions of the publication of the census or its necessities from the Public Printer.

Mr. RANDALL. I think he should know the capacity of his building and his presses.

Mr. COX, of New York. This places it entirely within his discretion. If he is a good man, very well; if not, otherwise.

Mr. RANDALL. We have in nearly every Department a printing establishment, and we have an enormous public printing establishment. I do not hear the Public Printer has asked for this at all. I understand perfectly well that the place to be reached and rented is the old Congressional Globe office on the Avenue. I understand about this better, perhaps, than the gentleman from New York supposes I do. I think, although we only take it for one year, this is but an entering-wedge to a new printing establishment. The Committee on Public Printing have not asked for this amendment. The gentleman from Illinois reporting the bill says it is all right. But his committee has not asked for it; the Public Printer has not asked for it, and in my judgment there is no occasion for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Public Printer is not presumed to dictate to Congress the time in which its publications shall be made. The Public Printer is ready at all times to discharge to the utmost of his ability, with the machinery he has, every order made by Congress. But he has indicated to the chairman of the House Committee on Printing that it will require the additional time the gentleman from New York has stated to print these reports. He has not asked Congress to do anything in the premises. He has simply stated the fact that it will require the time stated by the gentleman from New York to print these books. It is not for the Public Printer to say whether he wants this or not. It is for Congress to say whether they will have the work printed in one year or in two.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no doubt the Public Printer will put these documents in our hands at the earliest possible time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 62, noes 19.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois not amend the bill by providing for clerk hire and additional room?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not want to provide for any additional expenses. I do not think any will be required.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only five members voting therefor.

The bill was passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF ATLANTA COTTON EXPOSITION.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (S. R. No. 74) for printing 5,000 copies of the official report of the Atlanta cotton exposition.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the official report of the international cotton exposition of 1881 be printed, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed; 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate; 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 copies for the use of the Department of State, and 500 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture; and that the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Public Printer to purchase at a fair price the stereotyped plates of the official report of the said exposition now in the hands of H. I. Kimball, the director-general of said exposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire what the cost of that will be?

Mr. SPRINGER. The work will embrace about seven hundred pages, and $3,000 is the price for the stereotyped plates. The rest of the expense is simply for press-work and paper.

Mr. HISCOCK. I know it is; but how much will that be?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not an estimate of the exact amount, but it will not be very great. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] can answer that question better than I can.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I will answer the question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] I am informed by the Senator who reported this resolution to the Senate that the cost will not exceed $10,000. I have his letter here in which he makes that statement. He further states that the purchase of these stereotyped plates will enable us to get the book perhaps one year earlier than we would get it otherwise.

Mr. MILLS. It would be of no use, anyhow.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It will be of more use to the farmers of the country than many other documents sent to them.

Mr. MILLS. It will enable gentlemen to circulate the high-tariff speeches made in that convention.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not in this report.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. If there is any tariff speech in the report I do not know it.

Mr. MILLS. There was one made there.

Mr. BOWMAN. Is not this a new departure in the printing line? Was not this either a State or a private exposition? Did the United States have anything to do with it? In Massachusetts, for example, we have fairs of mercantile associations and other institutions which we deem of great importance. Now, is not this a new departure in the line of printing reports of expositions which are in no respect national expositions?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is just as national as the product which gave the name to the exposition is national. And it is just as usual to print this document as it was for the Government to print the reports of the Centennial Exposition, of the Paris Exposition, and of the Vienna Exposition; all of which were printed by the Government, and in all of which the Government was an exhibitor, as the people of the United States were exhibitors in this exposition.

Mr. BOWMAN. Those were great international expositions; this was in no sense a national exposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. Those were international, not national. I call the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. Was this exposition, the proceedings of which it is proposed shall be published by the Government, inaugurated by Congress or dependent in any way upon an act of Congress?

Mr. SPRINGER. No; neither was the Centennial Exhibition dependent upon an act of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the joint resolution to a third reading.

The question was taken, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the joint resolution to a third reading; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

VETO MESSAGE, RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

Having watched with much interest the progress of House bill No. 6242, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," and having since it was received carefully examined it, after mature consideration I am constrained to return it herewith to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, without my signature and with my objections to its passage.

Many of the appropriations in the bill are clearly for the general welfare and most beneficent in their character. Two of the objects for which provision is made were by me considered so important that I felt it my duty to direct to them the attention of Congress. In my annual message in December last I urged the vital importance of legislation for the reclamation of the marshes and for the establishment of the harbor lines along the Potomac front. In April last by special message I recommended an appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River. It is not necessary that I say that when my signature would make the bill appropriating for these and other valuable national objects a law, it is with great reluctance and only under a sense of duty that I withhold it.

My principal objection to the bill is that it contains appropriations for purposes not for the common defense or general welfare, and which do not promote commerce among the States. These provisions, on the contrary, are entirely for the benefit of the particular localities in which it is proposed to make the improvements. I regard such appropriation of the public money as beyond the powers given by the Constitution to Congress and the President.

I feel the more bound to withhold my signature from the bill because of the peculiar evils which manifestly result from this infraction of the Constitution. Appropriations of this nature, to be devoted purely to local objects, tend to an increase in number and in amount. As the citizens of one State find that money, to raise which they in common with the whole country are taxed, is to be expended for local improvements in another State, they demand similar benefits for themselves, and it is not unnatural that they should seek to indemnify themselves for such use of the public funds by securing appropriations for similar improvements in their own neighborhood. Thus as the bill becomes more objectionable it secures more support. This result is invariable and necessarily follows a neglect to observe the constitutional limitations imposed upon the law-making power.

The appropriations for river and harbor improvements have, under the influence to which I have alluded, increased year by year out of proportion to the progress of the country, great as that has been. In 1870 the aggregate appropriation was $3,975,000; in 1875, $6,648,517.50; in 1880, $8,976,500; and in 1881, $11,451,000, while by the present act there is appropriated $18,743,875.

While feeling every disposition to leave to the Legislature the responsibility of determining what amount should be appropriated for the purposes of the bill, so long as the appropriations are confined to objects indicated by the grant of power, I cannot escape the conclusion that, as a part of the law-making power of the Government, the duty devolves upon me to withhold my signature from a bill containing appropriations which in my opinion greatly exceed in amount the needs of the country for the present fiscal year. It being the usage to provide money for these purposes by annual appropriation bills, the President is in effect directed to expend so large an amount of money within so brief a period that the expenditure cannot be made economically and advantageously.

The extravagant expenditure of public money is an evil not to be measured by the value of that money to the people who are taxed for it. They sustain a greater injury in the demoralizing effect produced upon those who are intrusted with official duty through all the ramifications of Government.

Those objections could be removed and every constitutional purpose readily attained, should Congress enact that one-half only of the aggregate amount provided for in the bill be appropriated for expenditure during the fiscal year, and that the sum so appropriated be expended only for such objects named in the bill as the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, shall determine; provided that in no case shall the expenditure for any one purpose exceed the sum now designated by the bill for that purpose.

I feel authorized to make this suggestion because of the duty imposed upon the President by the Constitution "to recommend to the consideration of Congress such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient;" and because it is my earnest desire that the public works which are in progress shall suffer no injury. Congress will also convene again in four months, when this whole subject will be open for their consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 1, 1882.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest that the message be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. COX, of New York. Every message that is read is printed in the RECORD.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ROSECRANS, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the Committee on Claims papers in the case of Charles T. Martin.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN ARIZONA.

On motion of Mr. NORCROSS, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4664) to confirm title to certain private land grants in Arizona Territory, and the same was recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on House bill No. 6520, in relation to patents in the Virginia military district in Ohio. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether it is in order at this time to move to refer the river and harbor bill, with the veto message, to the Committee on Commerce?

The SPEAKER. That motion cannot take precedence of the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WASHBURN that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITION, ETC.

The following petition and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. S. S. COX: The petition of John Charles F. Beyland, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRESCOTT: Paper relating to bill to suppress newspaper license and forgery—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, papers relating to bill granting an increase of pension to Henry N. Halstead—to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 2, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, in answer to a resolution of July 22, information as to the issue of pension certificates for a double pension to General Ward B. Burnett, which will be referred to the Committee on Pensions. Does the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] desire to have the communication printed?

Mr. PLATT. I presume the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. VAN WYCK,] who is on the Committee on Pensions, would desire it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented a preamble and resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia Board of Trade, in favor of the plan of letter-delivery proposed by Oliver Evans Woods; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Hiram Powers, late of the Fourteenth Michigan Battery Light Artillery, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SALT IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the attention of the Senate for a moment to a matter which will not lead to debate. The Senate passed a few weeks ago a bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The House has passed another bill almost exactly like that, there being nothing but verbal alterations. That bill has come to the Senate and been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I am instructed by that committee to report the House bill, and to ask the Senate to pass it. It is almost exactly like the one which the Senate has already passed, there being nothing but verbal changes.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6687) for the manufacture of salt in the Indian Territory.

Mr. VEST. To whom is the grant? What is the nature of it?

Mr. DAWES. It is a bill to authorize the Cherokee Nation to make a lease (subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for a period of not more than twenty-five years, but revocable whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall desire to revoke it) of certain salt springs on that Territory, the royalty from which to be appropriated to the school fund of the Cherokees.

Mr. VEST. I was under the impression that that power existed already.

Mr. DAWES. It may exist; but this measure was considered by the committees of both Houses, and both Houses have passed bills on the subject, and the bills have crossed each other. The Secretary of the Interior has considered it. It was thought that some salt springs going to waste, and being of no use as they are, might be turned to an account for the educational fund of the Cherokees without harm to any one.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee on Pensions have instructed me to report an original bill, and to ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. No. 2172) to amend section 4702, title 57, Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the bill be read for information.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4702, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4702. If any person embraced within the provisions of sections 4692 and 4693 has died since the 4th day of March, 1861, or hereafter dies, by reason of any wound, injury, or disease which under the conditions and limitations of such sections would have entitled him to an invalid pension had he been disabled, his widow, or if there be no widow, or in case of her death without payment to her of any part of the pension hereinafter mentioned, his child or children under sixteen years of age shall be entitled to receive the same pension as the husband or father would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled, to commence from the death of the husband or father, to continue to the widow during her widowhood, and to his child or children until they severally attain the age of sixteen years, and no longer; and if the widow remarry, the child or children shall be entitled from the date of remarriage, except when such widow has continued to draw the pension-money after her remarriage, in contravention of law, and such child or children have resided with and been supported by her, their pension will commence at the date to which the widow was last paid."

SEC. 2. That marriages, except such as are mentioned in section 4705 of the Revised Statutes, shall be proven in pension cases to be legal marriages according to the law of the place where the parties resided at the time of marriage or at a time when the right to pension accrued, and the open and notorious adulterous cohabitation of a widow who is a pensioner shall operate to terminate her pension from the commencement of such cohabitation.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PLATT. If any explanation is desired, I can make it in a few words.

Mr. INGALLS. Is this a House bill?

Mr. PLATT. No; it is an original bill, reported by the Committee on Pensions. I will state the only change it makes from the present law.

Where a widow, in violation of law, after the death of her husband, has continued to draw the husband's pension, and has supported the children in the mean time, if there are any, the bill provides that the children shall take from the time when the widow ceased to draw the pension, which we think is right if she has supported the children.

The second change is a provision that notorious and adulterous cohabitation by a widow shall terminate the pension. The Secretary of the Interior has decided that under the present law it does not terminate the pension. The committee think it ought to terminate the pension. I hope there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to ask the Senator how much will be the additional expenditure?

Mr. PLATT. Nothing.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, yes; there must be an additional expenditure.

Mr. PLATT. On the other hand, it diminishes the expenditure.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In what way? I understand the second section, but the first section, which the Senator explained, certainly gives additional pension.

Mr. PLATT. It does not give any additional pension. If I had made myself clear the Senator would have understood it. There are cases now where the widow, when her husband dies, goes forward in violation of law, saying nothing about the death of her husband, and draws the pension. The only remedy now is to bring suit to recover that amount. The object of the bill is to make the children's pension date from the time when the widow ceased to draw the pension in violation of law; that is, from the time of discovery, when her pension is stopped, provided she has in the mean time supported the children.

Mr. INGALLS. Take the $72 rate, which lapses at the death of the person entitled to receive it, under the bill reported by the committee would the widow be entitled to that?

Mr. PLATT. She would only be entitled to the widow's pension of $8. The bill does not change the existing law in that respect. It re-enacts the statute just as it is except the provision made for exceptional cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution directing that committee to have compiled the laws, rules, &c., on the subject of public printing, has directed me to report the same without amendment and to recommend its passage, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. ANTHONY July 17, 1882:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing have compiled the acts, resolutions, and rules of the two Houses of Congress relating to the public printing, to engraving, and to the distribution of public documents, and that 500 copies of the same be printed, with 500 additional copies for the use of the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution for the printing and distribution of public documents, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL July 17, 1882:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate at the beginning of the next session of Congress a tabulated statement showing the number of public documents printed by order of the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses, and the number of public documents appertaining to said Congresses printed in compliance with provisions of previously existing statutes, and the distribution directed to be made of the same, together with a compilation of all laws permanent or continuous in their nature governing the printing and distribution of the publications of the Government.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to strike out the following words at the end of the resolution:

Together with a compilation of all laws permanent or continuous in their nature governing the printing and distribution of the publications of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Is the cost added as one of the items to be reported?

Mr. ANTHONY. It will add nothing to the expense to include that. If the Senator from Massachusetts wishes that amendment made I do not object to it.

Mr. HOAR. Let the words "and the cost thereof" be added to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have another report to present, but I will yield to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. GORMAN,] who has an important resolution that should be considered.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) to print 25,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, which was reported from the Committee on Printing July 14.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Printing with amendments.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, in line 4, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 10,000 copies each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, with the necessary illustrations and charts.

Mr. CHILCOTT. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted, and I desire to say a few words on the subject.

The joint resolution as it came from the House provided for the printing of 25,000 copies each of the second and third annual reports of the geological surveys of the United States. The Senate Committee on Printing have seen proper to reduce the number of said reports to 10,000 copies each, which will be inadequate to meet one-fourth of the calls which will be made on Senators and Representatives from the mining States and Territories of the West. There is scarcely a day passes that we do not receive letters from our constituents asking us to send them copies of the geological reports heretofore published, with which we are unable to supply them; and it now seems to me nothing more than a matter of justice that a sufficient number of copies be published to meet the demands of our people. There is no public document published of so much value to the people of the Western States and Territories as those treating of the mineral deposits, and from the fact that the Government of the United States has expended over $600,000 in making surveys and procuring this scientific knowledge (of such great value to the people of the whole country) some liberality should be exhibited in order that the people may be benefited thereby.

Not only has the Government expended a large amount of money for the purpose of obtaining this information but all the necessary expenses have been incurred in preparing the work for the press, including the necessary illustrations and charts, and I contend that the money used in publishing this valuable work will be well spent.

We ask this appropriation in behalf of the citizens of the mineral States and Territories of the West, who are directly interested in this work, which will materially aid them in the development of the mines.

I ask now that the two letters from the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the Committee on Printing be read. The Senator from Maryland will please send the letters to the desk. I ask that the letter of June 20 be read first.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 20, 1882.

SIR: Referring to joint resolution No. 92, providing for the printing of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, which has recently passed the House, I have the honor to respectfully recommend and request that provision be made by amendment to said bill in the Senate for the printing of 2,500 copies of these reports for the use of the Department of the Interior.

Of the several reports of the geological and geographical surveys, conducted under the supervision of this Department, hitherto issued, editions of from 1,500 to 3,000 copies each have been printed for distribution by this office, most of them to libraries and to scientific students, so that these libraries and individuals have become accustomed to look to this Department for their supply of these scientific publications, and they will undoubtedly in a large number of cases fail to secure these volumes, and others that may hereafter be issued, unless they are supplied, as the previous volumes have been, from this office.

It is very desirable that the sets of these documents, especially in our prominent public, university, college, and scientific libraries, should be made as complete as possible, and as this is not likely to be done except as they are supplied from this office it is hoped that the amendment suggested will meet the approval of the Committee on Printing, and that provision will be made accordingly in the resolution as it shall be reported to the Senate.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. H. B. ANTHONY,

Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

Mr. CHILCOTT. Now let the letter of the Secretary of the Interior of July 10 be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 10, 1882.

SIR: Referring to the resolution now before your committee, providing for the printing of the second and third annual reports of the United States Geological Survey, I beg to express the hope that no less number of these volumes than is specified in the resolution as it passed the House will be recommended by the Senate Committee. These reports are regarded not only by the Director of the Geological Survey but by me as among the most important that have been prepared in connection with the surveys conducted under the supervision of this Department.

The first annual report of the consolidated survey under Mr. Clarence King was merely preliminary and very brief, of which a small edition sufficed for all proper demands.

The second annual report therefore embodies a summary of the investigations of the survey for a period of nearly two years, made at an expense of four or five hundred thousand dollars, and contains information of great value, both in a scientific and economic point of view. The third report will be no less important and valuable.

For the second report, now ready to be printed, numerous requests have already been received, and as soon as its distribution begins it will be in large demand, both on the part of libraries and of individuals, to whom it will be of service, and whose requests may with entire propriety be complied with.

This Department will require for its use, if its distribution of these volumes is to correspond with that of its previous scientific publications, from 2,000 to 2,500 copies, while, as I am informed, the Smithsonian Institution can with advantage utilize an edition of 2,500 or 3,000 copies in conducting its exchanges.

Taking all these facts into consideration, I earnestly recommend the printing of a large edition of these reports, and trust that the Committee on Printing may feel justified in reporting the resolution referred to as it came from the House, so far as the number of copies provided for is concerned.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. H. B. ANTHONY,

Chairman Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, notwithstanding the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior to print a larger number of these reports, (25,000 copies,) the Committee on Printing find that every Department of this Government, and every officer who is directed to make a report, naturally wants the largest number possible printed. We find that the printing which has already been ordered at this session will in all probability cost over $4,000,000. The Public Printer in his last annual report has said truly that if the printing ordered increases in the same ratio in the next three years that it has in the last five, in addition to the actual cost of printing we shall be compelled to make provision for additional room at the Government Printing Office.

While Senators may desire these reports to be printed in large numbers, they must look the fact in the face that, if this course is continued, not only will your printing cost between four and five million dollars but in addition you must erect another building to accommodate the Public Printer.

Already at this session the Committee on Printing have been compelled because of the amount of work done at the Government Office to provide for night work, which will increase the cost of setting type during the hours between twelve o'clock at night and six in the morning one-third over what we now pay. If the printing of all such reports is ordered according to the numbers asked for by the Departments, and if that is continued at this session, your expenditures must extend to between five and six million dollars.

Upon these facts the committee have determined in this case and in quite a number of others to reduce the number, so as to reduce the cost. The amendments of the committee reduce the cost of this work nearly one-half.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have the greatest confidence in the Committee on Printing, because I think they try to do exactly what is right in the matters that come before them, but in this particular instance I must disagree with them. I think these reports are of more importance to the colleges and the people of the Western country, and in fact to the colleges all over the country, than any report made by the Government, especially in the development of our Territories, and to be transmitted to Europe for the purpose of giving information there. I think these reports have produced more benefit to this country than any other reports which have ever been published.

For that reason, although the number proposed by the House seems to be very large, I would not, if it were left to me, reduce the number. I would let the resolution pass as it came from the House for the reasons I have stated, and make this an exception. I do not in this desire to be understood as wanting to criticize the Committee on Printing, for I think in nearly every case they act with very great discretion and judgment; but in this case I do think that the rule ought to be relaxed somewhat so as to allow us to have as large a number as is necessary for the general distribution of this document.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the question in regard to the publication of these reports should not be regarded as one of ordinary economy. These reports present to the scientific and the practical world the most valuable and accurate body of information which has ever been presented in the history of the country of which we have any record.

From the beginning of mining operations in 1804, says the report, over a billion and a half of gold and nearly half a billion of silver have been produced. These scientific records trace the formation and indicate to the practical miner when and where and how with certainty the ore is to be found and produce profitable returns for labor bestowed. They also place within easy reach of the people the means of ascertaining the value of their mineral lands and protect them against the combination of money to buy their lands for nominal prices while the owners, often poor men and women, are ignorant of the fact of inexhaustible stores of valuable mineral below their soil. From want of this information the properties of poor men and women, to a great extent, have been sacrificed. This would have been prevented by the reports of the Geological Survey and their general diffusion. This economy in the diffusion of knowledge of the most useful and practical character, knowledge which is not only practical and useful to the people at large and all their industries, but at the same time reaches the heights of pure science, can find no support either in the general welfare or the interests of education. Much wiser would it have been for the committee to have taken some hundreds of thousands of dollars from the publication of messages and documents which no one reads and which are printed only to be sold illicitly and remanufactured into paper.

The value of this report of the Geological Survey on this vast, practical industry, treated as it has been in this work with most scientific and practical knowledge, is a question that ought not to be ignored in the consideration of the number of copies of this work to be printed. I hold in my hand a series of letters from the most eminent scientific men and engineers of Europe and America, more than twenty of them, expressing throughout the whole scientific and practical world a desire for the possession of these works and complimenting in the highest manner the Government of the United States and the conduct of the Geological Bureau. It is the one purely scientific department of our Government, and if we had to spend $5,000,000 to begin with to have published, created, and circulated this book, it would be a great economy to the country and to its productions at this day.

I therefore hope that there will be no hesitation in printing 25,000 copies, which will meet about one-half the demand which could be properly supplied in the interests of the practical, scientific industries of this country and Europe.

I will add to these remarks the following extracts from letters of scientific men in Europe and America showing the value of this work and the extent of the demand there will be for it under the system of exchanges which prevails between governments and institutions of learning in different countries:

Asa Gray, professor of natural history in Harvard University and America's most eminent botanist, says:

"I wish here not only to express emphatically my own opinion of their great value and of the importance of continuing them, but also to testify to the deep impression they are making upon the scientific world. In Europe the learned societies, the scientific journals, as also the working naturalists in correspondence, speak with one accord in terms of admiration, not unmixed with envy, of what our Government has done and is doing in this regard; and I observe that Dr. Hayden's survey and the resulting publications are put forward as the type and exemplar."

"I trust that the direct utility to the country of Dr. Hayden's undertakings will repay the cost. But it is gratifying to know that their scientific usefulness and importance is still wider, and is appreciated and valued over the world in such manner as to redound to the national credit."

From Professor William B. Rogers, of Boston, Massachusetts:

"No one who is acquainted with the scientific surveys and explorations conducted under the direction of our General Government for some years past can fail to recognize the great scientific as well as practical value, or to admire their efficiency of the organization by which, in spite of formidable obstacles, they have been successfully carried forward."

From Professor W. D. Whitney, of Yale College, New Haven, Connecticut:

"It is satisfying, and more, all the reasonable expectations of the lovers of scientific progress (both for science' sake and for the furtherance of practical ends) in this country and throughout the world."

From Baron Von Richtofen, president of the Berlin Geographical Society:

"I hope to be able some day or other to go with the necessary care through the wonderful amount of discovery, information, and knowledge which is stored up in your volumes; for notwithstanding the grand publications of the Pacific Railway expeditions, the backbone of the continent and the regions adjoining it, which appeared to claim, geologically and geographically, a paramount interest, were then little more than a terra incognita. But you had already commenced to lift the veil from the easternmost part of that region."

"I recollect with pleasure the interest with which I learned, first from Professor Whitney, and then by some publications, your progress and your results. Yet I did little expect that within a decade you would have unraveled the leading topographical and geological features of so many thousands of square miles, from the northern limits of the United States down to New Mexico."

Hon. George P. Marsh, United States minister at Rome, says:

"Until within a few years American science was seldom spoken of abroad except in a disparaging tone, but now the full equality of American astronomers, geologists, physicists, chemists, and metallurgists is recognized by all the numerous European periodicals devoted to these and other branches of natural knowledge, to the promotion of all of which these surveys have directly or indirectly contributed."

Edward Hull, director of the geological survey of Ireland, speaks of the survey as follows:

"I trust, without presumption, that these publications serve a purpose which, in your mind, as a man of science, will not occupy the lowest place; they serve to raise the Government and people of the States in the estimation of men of science in this country, and they form a bond of union between investigators on both sides of the Atlantic."

From Professor A. Geikie, professor of mineralogy in the University of Edinburgh and director of the geological survey of Scotland:

"If we are to test the value of the grant by its immediate results, surely never was a government subsidy more abundantly fruitful. You have made known the geography and geology of vast tracts of unexplored lands, opened it up for the mining prospector, the agriculturist, the railway engineer, and a host of settlers who will follow. You have produced a series of reports which are read and valued in every large public library in Europe, and which cannot but be of the utmost service in the United States. You have stocked your public museums with specimens of natural history which, I suspect, are in themselves quite equal in value to the whole cost of your surveys. To break up your branch of the public service in the midst of so brilliant and useful a career would, it seems to me, be truly a national misfortune."

Andrew Murray, esq., of England, an eminent naturalist, speaks of the high standing of the survey in England as follows:

"It is not only the ability and zeal with which the surveys have been conducted, the learning and intellect shown in the important works that have flowed from them, and the unexampled rapidity with which the results have been given to the public that have commanded our respect, but it has redounded to the credit of your whole nation that your statesmen have had the enlightened appreciation of their value which has enabled you to carry out these important works. I speak advisedly when I say that these works have had a perceptible influence in this country in raising the general estimate of the American character by our people."

From Professor W. Boyd Dawkins, professor of geology in Owen's College, Manchester, England, late of geological survey of Great Britain:

"I have heard with extreme regret that there is a chance of the publications of the geological surveys of the Territories being stopped on the grounds of economy. If this projected step be carried out it will be a serious injury in many ways. In the first place, it is of the greatest importance to the United States that the resources of the Territories should be ascertained for the guidance and benefit of the settlers. This cannot be done unless the geology and natural history be treated as they are treated in your publications. In the second place, the memoirs themselves are unique of the kind and unlike anything published in Europe in their completeness. They have placed the scientific men of the United States in the first rank among their compeers in Europe.

"From my own private point of view the discoveries which have been made light up some of the darkest and most interesting portions of the history of life on the earth, and the knowledge that there is such a vast field of inquiry opened in America for the study of the eocene and miocene mammalia has made me resolve to forbear studying the scraps which we have in Europe, except in relation to the more perfect faunas of America.

"The discoveries themselves, the mode of their treatment, and the liberality with which they are distributed among scientific workers in Europe are worthy of the United States and a credit to the race to which we belong. To put a stop to them would be false economy so far as relates to the States, as well as bad policy in relation to the rest of the world."

Mr. ANTHONY. The only object of the Committee on Printing in making this reduction is economy. I yield to no one in my admiration of this work and of the very accomplished officer under whose direction the survey has been carried on. I think it has rendered very great service to the country, especially to the development of the mineral resources; but the cost of the printing as provided by the resolution as it came from the House is over $40,000, and the Committee on Printing thought, especially as they have been subjected to great criticism for their extravagant recommendations, that it was better the number should be reduced to 10,000 copies.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think the Committee on Printing ought to be criticised, for I am sure the committee is very economical.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee reducing the number of copies from 25,000 to 10,000.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 24.

Mr. CHILCOTT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the question be stated.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 4 it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 10,000 copies each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—32.

| | | | |
|------------------|------------------|------------|------------|
| Aldrich, | Davis of W. Va., | Jackson, | Saulsbury, |

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the next amendment of the Committee on Printing, in line 6, to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, after the word "Representatives," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "twenty-five hundred;" and in line 9 to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "twenty-five hundred;" so as to read:

Two thousand five hundred for the use of the Senate and two thousand five hundred for the use of the United States Geological Survey; the illustrations and charts to be made by the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, to meet the desire of those who wish a more extensive circulation of this book, as the great test of the value of a publication is the money test, I move to add:

One thousand for sale at the cost of publication and 10 per cent. added thereto.

I do this not from the committee, but on my own responsibility.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Now, it will be necessary to alter the total amount which has been adopted by making it 11,000 instead of 10,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that change will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to print 11,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4594) authorizing full pay to Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, while on leave to serve in command of the Franklin search expedition in the Arctic, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, insisted upon by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. GEORGE M. ROBESON of New Jersey, Mr. J. H. KETCHAM of New York, and Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee the conferees on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain lands adjacent to the town of Pendleton, in the State of Oregon, belonging to the Umatilla Indian reservation, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 101) for the relief of G. W. Thompson and others;

A bill (S. No. 70) granting a pension to Sarah Hayne;

A bill (S. No. 340) granting a pension to Erastus Crippen;

A bill (S. No. 547) granting a pension to E. G. Hoffman, late a captain in the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers;

A bill (S. No. 703) granting a pension to Sarah Shea;

A bill (S. No. 1170) granting a pension to Jane S. Taplin;

A bill (S. No. 1264) to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey;

A bill (S. No. 1437) granting a pension to Amos Chapman;

A bill (S. No. 1680) granting a pension to Ann Leddy;

A bill (S. No. 1796) for the relief of Elizabeth H. Spotts;

A bill (S. No. 1925) granting a pension to Ann Elizabeth Rodgers;

A bill (S. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mary E. Matthews;

A bill (S. No. 2089) granting a pension to Caroline French;

A bill (S. No. 997) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long;

A bill (S. No. 138) for the relief of James Burke;

A bill (S. No. 346) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation;

A bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Mott, administratrix of the estate of Danford Mott;

A bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of the widow of George W. Flood;

A bill (S. No. 412) for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead;

A bill (S. No. 1959) granting the right of way to the Arizona Southern Railroad Company through the Papago Indian reservation, in Arizona;

A bill (H. R. No. 2402) to quiet title to certain lands in Washington, District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court, post-office, and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 5222) to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) making an appropriation to defray the expense of printing the memorial cards to accompany the additional numbers heretofore ordered of the memorial address on the late President Garfield; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Washington Light Infantry Corps.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe, to report it with certain amendments, and ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I want to know how this bill appears here and what is the object. Does it require unanimous consent to consider it now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Senator from New York asked for its present consideration. It is now read for information.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think we ought to examine this bill a little. I find it covers unimportant things very carefully, but other matters seem not to have any protection. Therefore I should like to examine the bill. I do not want to interfere with the Senator from New York, but I want to examine the bill.

Mr. LAPHAM. If the Senator from Nebraska will hear the amendments proposed by the committee, I think all objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read.

Mr. LAPHAM. I may state here that we have carefully considered the question of providing by general law for the organization of companies for this purpose, but we came to the conclusion that there was not time at the present session of Congress to accomplish a general law. We have therefore amended this bill so as to provide for the contingency of a general enactment guarding the interest of the Government in all respects, as will be seen when the amendments are read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read.

Mr. INGALLS. The right to object still continues.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

The ACTING SECRETARY. In line 13 the Committee on Foreign Relations report to strike out the words "agreement as to rate" and insert "combination to establish rates;" so as to read:

That no amalgamation, combination to establish rates, union, or sale of cable interests established under this act shall be made to any existing European or other cable companies.

Mr. INGALLS. This bill deals with a very important subject, and I ask that it may be printed with the amendments of the committee, so that it may be understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed and go over.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move that the amendments be printed and re-committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock has arrived.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a report to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate by unanimous consent receive morning business until it is over?

Mr. HARRISON. So much time has been consumed by calling up cases for action that I have not had an opportunity to present my report heretofore.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object. The only point I desire is to go on with the sundry civil bill, inasmuch as we have agreed to finish it to-day, but I will yield for ordinary morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree that the morning hour may be extended until the conclusion of the ordinary morning business which leads to no debate? The Chair hears no objection. Reports of committees will be received.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3920) to amend section 4766, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2119) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1871) to regulate the method of purchasing tobacco for the use of the Army, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2103) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint William F. Pratt, late a second assistant engineer in the United States Navy, upon the retired list of the Navy, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was ordered to be printed; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LEAVENWORTH.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 2153) for the erection of a public building at Leavenworth, Kansas, to report it favorably and without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that a bill which is on the table from the House, (H. R. No. 4757,) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands, be referred to the committee on mineral lands.

The motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2162) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate to the J. F. Sawyer Post No. 7 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Omro, Wisconsin, one condemned twenty-four-pounder cast-iron cannon, to report it favorably, and without amendment.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill. It will take but a moment.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2173) for the relief of Nancy Johnson Lonsdale, Bettie Erwin Brockett, and Laura G. Johnson, heirs-at-law of E. P. Johnson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAULSBURY (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 101) for the relief of Oliver Evans Woods; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. KELLOGG asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 103) to provide for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of the public works; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GEORGE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2174) to preserve and improve the harbor at Vicksburg, in the State of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say that this bill is of very great importance to the people of the city of Vicksburg, as it contemplates the preservation of the harbor, which is being largely destroyed by the receding of the Mississippi River from the city westward, and I ask that the Committee on Commerce may consider the bill and report it either favorably or unfavorably by to-morrow, so that the Senate may act.

RETURN OF REGIMENTAL FLAG.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to it by citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania; which was read by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the consideration and passage of the joint resolution at this time.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was read three times, and passed.

HEAVY ORDNANCE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call up the resolution I offered for the appointment of a special committee on the subject of ordnance from the two Committees on Military and Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be taken up.

Mr. ALLISON. If it will not take time I shall not object.

Mr. MORGAN. I have consulted the chairmen of both the Committees on Naval and Military Affairs, and they agree to the resolution and think it should be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama calls up a resolution heretofore submitted by him, which will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MORGAN July 13:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators, to consist of the chairmen of the Committees of Military Affairs and of Naval Affairs and three other Senators to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate from said committees, be raised, with instructions to take into consideration the subject of heavy ordnance and projectiles for the armament of the Navy and the sea-coast defenses, and said select committee shall have leave to sit during the recess of the Senate and to send for persons and papers, and shall report the results of their investigations to the Senate at its next session with any recommendations said committee may deem it proper to make on the subjects committed to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

NICHOLAS J. BIGLEY.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senate to indulge me by taking up the bill (S. No. 1280) for the relief of Captain Nicholas J. Bigley, which is reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims.

The bill was read.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the bill will take too much time. I hope the Senator will not press it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will not press it if it leads to any debate.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will see.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 3, after the word "of," to insert "twenty-one thousand two hundred and eleven;" and in line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert "and forty cents;" so as to read:

That the sum of $21,211.40 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Captain Nicholas J. Bigley.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to have the report read.

Mr. ALLISON. I must object, then, to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I object simply because it takes time.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM TINDER.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the consent of the Senate to consider at this time Senate bill No. 2169, and I promise if it takes exceeding five minutes I will withdraw it. I think an explanation of two minutes will cause its passage through the Senate unanimously.

Mr. SHERMAN and others. What is the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information?

The Acting Secretary read the bill (S. No. 2169) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and pay to H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased, $5,000, in full satisfaction of the claim of the estate of Tinder for money paid by the estate upon a judgment of forfeiture upon a bond for the appearance of one Evans, who was charged with crime by indictment in the circuit court of the United States for the district of West Tennessee, and who was afterward captured by the administrator and returned to the custody of the court, and convicted and punished for the crime with which he was charged.

Mr. HARRIS. This bill was reported by the Committee on Claims, I believe unanimously, and the facts are in brief these: a man named Evans was charged with the crime of passing counterfeit money. Tinder became security for his appearance. He absconded, and a forfeiture was taken against Evans and Tinder as security. Soon thereafter Tinder died. Wilson, the administrator of Tinder, pursued the absconding criminal to another State, captured him, brought him back, returned him to the court, and he was tried at a subsequent term and convicted, and is now in the penitentiary suffering for his crime. But in the mean time the court had entered judgment upon the forfeiture and had adjourned, and the forfeiture could not be set aside. The administrator has paid all the costs and the forfeiture of $5,000. It has reduced the estate to absolute insolvency, turned the widow and children out of doors, and deprived the estate of the power of paying the little neighborhood debts that it owes. I ask simply for the passage of the bill, which will refund the $5,000.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator state whether any security was given by this person charged with the crime, to his surety, from which he received anything?

Mr. HARRIS. None whatever, and it is a dead loss to Tinder unless the money is returned.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, by unanimous consent, reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CREEK ORPHAN FUND.

Mr. SLATER. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate and House respecting the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 126) to reimburse the Creek orphan fund, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the said bill, and agree to the same with the following amendments, namely: Strike out in line 1 of said amendment the words "fifty-one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "forty-seven thousand five hundred;" strike out in line 11 of said amendment the words "Creek orphans" and insert in lieu thereof "Creeks who were orphans on the 24th day of March, 1832;" insert after the word "act" in line 21 of said amendment the following: "unless in the judgment of the President it shall be for the best interest of the said orphans or their heirs that the same, in whole or in part, be deposited in the Treasury to their credit, as now provided by law for Indian trust funds, and the interest thereon only to be paid to the actual beneficiaries under this act;" and add at the end of said House amendment the following: "but nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent the United States from asserting its right to be reimbursed by the Creek Nation, in any future settlements therewith, the further sum of $106,799.68 expended by the United States out of the Creek orphan fund for the support of loyal Creek refugees;" and the House agree to the same.

JAMES H. SLATER,

H. L. DAWES,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

N. C. DEERING,

D. C. HASKELL,

OLIN WELLSBORN,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. If this is going to take time I shall object to its consideration now.

Mr. COKE. I simply desire to state that, as one of the Senate conferees, I do not concur in the most important point in this report.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I appeal to the Senator from Oregon to let this pass over until we finish the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SLATER. I think it will take but a short time.

Mr. COKE. I am entirely willing that the report shall be taken up now, or if it will aid the convenience of the Senator from Iowa it be taken up later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate agreed to dispose of the sundry civil bill to-day. Of course the question can be put to the Senate whether they will proceed with the consideration of this conference report now.

Mr. INGALLS. Under Rule 49 the report is in order without the consent of any person. It can be submitted, and when submitted it must be considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the Secretary read Rule 49. I am not insisting on its consideration now, but I do not want the report ruled out on a question of order.

Mr. HOAR. Let the rule be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

49. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except while the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report shall immediately be put, and shall be determined without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this report?

Mr. INGALLS. Now, I suggest that as there may be debate, the Senator from Oregon consent that the consideration of this report be postponed until the pending appropriation bill is disposed of. It will then be the first thing in order.

Mr. SLATER. Then I ask that the bill may be printed with the amendments as reported by the conference committee, so that it may be on the tables of Senators by to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed with the amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag which belonged to said regiment, and which is now in the custody of the Secretary of War; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up the sundry civil bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to postpone prior orders and take up the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, after the word "continue," in line 1834, to insert "as heretofore;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue as heretofore to reproduce worn and defaced official plats of surveys now on file, and other plats, constituting a part of the records of said office, and also to furnish local land offices with same, $20,000.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair expressed his opinion, as will be seen by the RECORD, that that amendment was out of order.

Mr. BAYARD. There is a message from the House of Representatives on the table informing us of the appointment of a committee of conference on the Japanese indemnity bill. I have consulted various members of the Senate interested in that measure, the Committee on Foreign Relations having it in charge. I propose to move for a committee of conference on the part of the Senate, but I am aware that it will lead to some debate; therefore I delay the application for that committee until this appropriation bill shall be through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words "as heretofore" are ruled out. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 43, line 1034. The Senate amended that clause by striking out "two" and inserting "one." I ask unanimous consent that that amendment may be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment on that line will be regarded as disagreed to if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. It is for the purchase and repair of tools and instruments for the public grounds. Now, let us go on with the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I understood that the chairman of the committee would go back to the clause in relation to artificial limbs.

Mr. ALLISON. I agreed with the Senator from Connecticut to go back to page 59, line 1429, for a moment. He has an amendment to propose there which I think ought to be adopted.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator has the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, I have it. There is a small amount of money heretofore appropriated for artificial limbs not used during the fiscal year, and I ask that it be reappropriated. I move to insert:

Together with the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for said purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now let the reading proceed.

The Acting Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriation "for the Ute commission," after the word "dollars," in line 1855, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the work of said commission shall be completed and final report made prior to July 1, 1883.

Mr. DAWES. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to that amendment and the two following amendments. I think they ought not to pass. I have had information to satisfy me of that since the bill was reported. I can give the Senate thereasons in each case if it desires.

Mr. ALLISON. I will allow those amendments to be disagreed to if the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs desires.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand the amendments on pages 76 and 77 are to be disagreed to, leaving the bill as it came from the House to line 1869.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. DAWES. It is impossible for the Ute commission to finish up their work before the middle of September.

Mr. BECK. Why is it not right to close up the commission?

Mr. DAWES. This commission has not been able to do anything yet, because there has been no appropriation. The Secretary of the Interior has been waiting for the appropriation to pay this commission, and now it is the 2d of August. By the middle of September nothing can be done in the mountains of Colorado. Therefore the work must be finished up before that time if this provision is adopted, which is an impossibility. That is all there is to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amendment?

Mr. DAWES. The proviso limiting the continuance of the Ute commission.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not have it limited?

Mr. DAWES. Because it makes it necessary for the work to be completed this summer, and this summer is all comprised now between the first of August and the middle of September in those mountains.

Mr. INGALLS. July, 1883, is next summer.

Mr. DAWES. I know that July, 1883, is next summer, but this must be completed before that time because we cannot do anything after the middle of September till next June.

Mr. COCKRELL. They have to July 1, 1883, to complete it in.

Mr. DAWES. You can work till the middle of September and you get the thing about quarter done, the moving of Indians in the mountains. Then you suspend that work and begin about the 1st of June of next year and continue it until the 1st day of July. That is what is left by this limitation. The Secretary of the Interior thinks it is impossible to make this applicable and to make it practical. There can be no desire on the part of anybody to keep this commission in existence an hour after the work is completed, and a Secretary of the Interior who would not complete it as soon as possible had better be somewhere else than where he is.

Mr. BECK. We have paid them $17,000 already, and the committee feared this might run on indefinitely.

Mr. DAWES. That is another commission. This is a commission authorized at the present session of Congress to do what the other commission found under the treaty and agreement with the Utes it was an impossibility to do. They were required to be located on certain lands, and when the commission came to visit the country they found that the lands were not there. Therefore, without a dissenting voice, the Congress of the United States authorized a new commission to transfer these Utes to the Uintah reservation in Utah, but provided no appropriation to pay the commission, and the commission, although appointed and prepared and ready to go to work, await the passage of this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Massachusetts says that no person has any object or interest in continuing the existence of this commission one hour beyond the time necessary for the discharge of their duty. I am not quite sure of that. I do not share the Senator's confidence.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will allow me to say that I of course spoke of any official having any control over it. There may be individuals who would desire its continuance; I would not say that in this depraved world; but I am speaking of officials who deserve our confidence.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator by a codicil has amended the original statement, and in that I concur. But I would suggest to him as it is very important that this commission should some time end its labors, and as he states they can get through by the middle of September, in order to have some assurance that the end may sometime come, that the amendment should not be stricken out, but that the date should be postponed.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to any date that will secure the completion of the work as soon as possible.

Mr. INGALLS. Say "the 1st of September, 1883." Would that be satisfactory to the Senator?

Mr. DAWES. I should think the middle of September, 1883, and if not completed this year they would have next year to do it.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest, then, a modification of the amendment by striking out "July 1st," and inserting "the 15th of September."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I do not speak with that familiarity which I ought perhaps to have with this subject. I voice the Secretary of the Interior, who lives in Colorado, and the Senator from Colorado. If the Senator from Colorado differs with this conclusion I should be glad to have him so state. It strikes me as a proper limitation.

Mr. BECK. I did not rise to make any objection, but we had paid $17,000 during the current year and got nothing, and I wanted it brought to an end sometime. If we do not put a limitation, it will run indefinitely.

Mr. CHILCOTT. I will just state that if this amendment should prevail it will entirely defeat the object of this commission. It is now the first of August, and it will be the first of September before the commission can get together and organize, and the snows will be falling in the mountains by the middle of this month. The time is limited by the amendment until the 1st of July, 1883. It will be at least the first part of June before they can do anything next year. That will only give one month's time for all this work. I take it that it will be well enough to leave this matter with the Secretary of the Interior; he will take care of it. If there is no work for the commission to do he will recall them. I hope the amendment of the committee will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1858, to strike out the following clause:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ an agent for the eastern band of Cherokee Indians, in accordance with section 3 of the act approved July 27, 1868, $800.

Mr. DAWES. The chairman of the committee consents that this amendment may be rejected.

Mr. VANCE. I move to non-concur.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from North Carolina will understand that if the amendment is rejected the text remains.

Mr. VANCE. Certainly. I move to non-concur in this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations do not disagree with the Senator. They agree that the clause may remain in the bill.

Mr. DAWES. The committee consents that it may remain in the bill.

Mr. VANCE. Very well; but what is to be done with the next clause?

Mr. DAWES. The same with the next.

Mr. VANCE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1864, to strike out:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause the census to be taken and a new roll to be made of all Cherokee Indians residing east of the Mississippi River, $800.

Mr. DAWES. This is to be disagreed to also.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, after line 1869, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior shall investigate and report to Congress what in his opinion would be an equitable settlement of all matters of dispute between the eastern band of Cherokee Indians (including all the Cherokees residing east of the Mississippi River) and the Cherokee tribe or nation west; also all matters of dispute between other bands or parts of the Cherokee Nation; also all matters between any of said bands, or parts thereof, and the United States, arising from or growing out of treaty stipulations, or the laws of Congress relating thereto; and what sum or sums of money, if any, should, in his opinion, be paid under such settlement; and the sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated for such purpose.

Mr. HOAR. What is that "purpose?" Is it the purpose of the payment of claims, or payment of the cost of the investigation?

Mr. ALLISON. It is intended to apply to the investigation, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be well to put in "for the purpose of said investigation?"

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1883, to insert:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay expenses of the delegates representing the eastern band of Cherokee Indians while in the city of Washington, during the months of May, June, and July, 1882, including traveling expenses in coming to and returning home from said city, $600, to be paid out of any fund belonging to said tribe.

Mr. DAWES. I desire after that is passed upon to offer an amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that after the word "dollars," in line 1890, the words "to be paid out of any funds belonging to said tribe" should be stricken out.

Mr. DAWES. I was not going to interfere with the amendment the Senator from Indiana proposes to offer, which he has shown me.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the words "to be paid out of any funds belonging to said tribe."

I had explained to me yesterday by a prominent friend of Indian interests and Indian education, who is very familiar with this subject, that these expenses ought not to be paid out of the single fund of the Indians. They have no other funds now except those invested, and the interest on which is applied at 5 per cent. for the support of schools.

Mr. VANCE. It is their school fund.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes; and it ought not to be touched. The expenses of their visit to the capital ought to be paid by the Government itself. They ought not to be taxed against the invested funds that are supporting the schools of the Indian children. I believe that is the explanation, is it not? I ask the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I think for the reason stated these words had better be stricken out, and let the Secretary of the Interior pay out of the Government funds for the visit of these Indians here rather than to tax it against their school fund.

Mr. ALLISON. These Indians had no business here, in my judgment, and it is the only way to keep them out of this city. We have been paying their expenses for two or three years at every session of Congress. I do not know what they are doing here, and I do not think they have any relations here that require their presence. I think the best way to keep them at home is to let them pay their own bills out of their own funds.

Mr. VOORHEES. The trouble is, as I have had it explained to me, that that will not keep them away, and they will come and they will use up the school fund set aside for the education of their children. The better way to keep them away would be to let them understand that unless they are needed here the Government will not pay the expenses of their coming. If it is left to them to come when they please and tax the cost against their school fund the injury will fall on the next generation; whereas if they were informed that their expenses would only be paid by the Government when their presence was necessary they would stay away.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to. It is in the interest of the Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 12; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again. There is a quorum present.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senate will indulge me a single moment, I will state the reason why I vote for this. The Secretary of the Interior sent for these people this time. Another reason is that they have been in a quarrel, divided up into two or three factions, and each faction sent a representative here claiming to be the sole representative of the tribe. We have provided in this bill for an agent to represent them, so that hereafter we shall have no such trouble.

Mr. BECK. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question to guide my vote. We were not advised that they were sent for to come here. Is it the fact that they were sent for by the Secretary?

Mr. DAWES. I was so informed by the Senator from Indiana. The Senator from Indiana informs me that they were sent for. That led me to change my vote.

Mr. VOORHEES. I so understand.

Mr. BECK. The reason I ask the question is that we were not advised as to that.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Appropriations were not advised of that fact.

Mr. BECK. We were willing to pay their expenses if they were sent for, but not otherwise.

Mr. DAWES. I assume that I have not been misinformed on that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to know whether it is a fact that these Indians were sent for. That will control my vote.

Mr. DAWES. I stated to the Senate that I was informed by the Senator from Indiana that these Indians were sent for and did not come of their own accord. I also stated that there had been before the Committee on Indian Affairs three representatives of three different bands, each claiming to be the sole representative of the whole tribe, and the Committee on Indian Affairs could not tell which was the lawful representative. We have provided in consequence of that for the Secretary of the Interior appointing a man to represent them hereafter, and to try himself to settle up their difficulties. But if these men came here on invitation, formal or otherwise, to try to settle these difficulties, it would seem proper that their expenses should be paid for. I am further informed that they have been paid up to the 1st of May by the Government, and that there is no money to pay them further.

This I state as information which has come to me. I do not vouch for it except that it comes from the honorable Senator from Indiana, and I have no doubt the fact is as he states it.

Mr. PENDLETON. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if it is not the rule that Indians shall not visit the capital except by permission previously obtained of the Secretary of the Interior or some other officer of the Government?

Mr. DAWES. So I understand. I understand that if they are here the presumption is that they are here by invitation.

Mr. VOORHEES. I so understand it. I have no official information, but I have information that satisfies me, from a high source, that such is the fact.

Mr. BECK. The ignorance of the sub-committee on this subject perhaps needs explanation. We found two or three different sets of people all pretending to be Cherokees, and we turned the whole matter over to the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is chairman. Having the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs a member of our sub-committee, we turned the whole subject of Indian Affairs over to him to ascertain the facts. If we sent for these Indians to come here we ought to pay the expenses of their coming. If they came voluntarily we do not intend to pay their expenses.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Indiana states that he has no official information on this subject; but if the Indians were sent for I should be in favor of having this bill out of the Treasury. Now, the Secretary of the Interior can be communicated with by telegraph in fifteen minutes, and I suggest that this amendment be informally passed over temporarily, for the purpose of ascertaining what the facts are. If the Secretary authorized them to come here I shall vote to pay their expenses, and if he did not I shall not.

Mr. VOORHEES. That suggestion is satisfactory, and I withdraw my amendment, and will renew it at the proper time, after we hear from the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend by adding, after the word "tribe," in line 1891, the following amendment:

That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying certain debts now owing by the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians; also, the necessary expenses and services of the delegation for the year 1882, and also such attorneys' fees as the said Indians have in good faith stipulated to pay: Provided, That no debts now owing shall be paid except those recognized by the principal chief, or the council, or both: And provided further, That no portion of said appropriation shall be paid until said debts of the band, expenses, and services of the delegates and attorneys' fees have been approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. That any sum appropriated and used under the first section of this act shall be replaced out of the proceeds of the lands to be sold outside of the Qualla boundary.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will state the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. It is legislative, to begin with.

Mr. DAWES. Is the point of order sustained?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will state the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. The first point of order is that it is legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. General legislation?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DAWES. I am unfortunate in moving an amendment just at this moment that is subject to a point of order for the same reason, but I should like to state to the Senate the need of it, and then the Senate may judge for themselves whether they will waive the point of order. The Senate will remember the large provision which was made in the Indian appropriation bill for the education of Indian children in different schools. That bill has become a law, and there has been put half a million dollars to the credit of the Secretary of the Interior, to be expended in educating Indians in different parts of the country. There turns up this statute, which I will read, which embarrasses the Secretary of the Interior in executing that law:

No moneys which may be appropriated for the purpose of education among the Indian tribes shall be expended for any such object elsewhere than in Indian country.—Revised Statutes, section 2099.

It may be considered, and is by some lawyers, that this subsequent legislation modifies the Revised Statutes to that extent, but it is hardly well to stake an expenditure of that large amount upon a mere construction of the statute. Therefore, I offer—

Mr. ALLISON. That is already in the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I beg pardon. The chairman of the committee calls my attention to the fact that it is already in the bill. I hope when that amendment is reached that the point of order will be waived by the Senate on the ground I have stated.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1897, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Sioux Indians for such modification of existing treaties and agreements with said Indians as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000; but any such agreement shall not take effect until ratified by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask to go back to the matter passed over a few moments ago, in line 1890. I have had a conversation with the Secretary of the Interior on the floor of the Senate since that time, and he informs me that my impression was correct, and that the Indians only visit the capital upon the invitation of the Government. That being the case, I renew my motion to amend, and I ask that it be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will entertain it.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. After the word "dollars," in line 1890, it is proposed to strike out:

To be paid out of any funds belonging to said tribe.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will not be necessary hereafter to keep Indians here three or four months at the expense of the United States Government. With that statement I will let the matter pass.

Mr. VOORHEES. Only $600 is provided for here, which is not a very large sum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1912, to insert:

That the sum of $300,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid into the treasury of the Cherokee Nation, out of the funds due under appraisal for Cherokee lands west of the Arkansas River, which sum shall be expended as the acts of the Cherokee legislature direct, to relieve the destitution on account of drought, this amount to be immediately available: Provided, That the Cherokee Nation, through its proper authorities, shall execute conveyances satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior for the tracts occupied by the Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes and Missourias, and Osages, so that these lands can be secured to said tribes in accordance with treaty stipulations and agreements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1925, to insert:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase of additional beef for Indians, to be distributed by the Secretary of the Interior, at such Indian agencies as the necessities of the Indians shall require, $200,000; and the Secretary shall cause a report to be made to Congress at its next session thereafter of his action under this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1932, to insert:

For the support of the Indians of the Mesacalero agency and the Jicarilla agency, in addition to amounts heretofore appropriated, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1935, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the amount found due R. H. Taylor, June 9, 1869, for herding cattle, the sum of $331.97, appropriated by the act of July 15, 1870, is hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the following clause, from line 1948 to line 1958:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase one hundred and sixty acres of land, in addition to that now owned by the Government, on the old Pawnee reservation, in the State of Nebraska, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That this amount shall be available only in the event that an Indian industrial school shall be established upon said reserve in pursuance of an act of Congress approved May 17, 1882.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope that the amendment will not prevail, and that the paragraph will not be stricken from the bill. It will be remembered that a few weeks ago when the Indian appropriation bill was before the Senate there was a provision adopted that $2,500 should be appropriated for the purpose of starting a school on the Sioux reservation. To that an amendment was made which allowed at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior the use of a school-house belonging to the Government on the old Pawnee reservation. There is a building there belonging to the Government, and there are one hundred and sixty acres of land belonging to the Government there with the building. If the school could be started there they would not have to spend the whole $2,500, because they would not have to build a house to be occupied for a school.

After it was ascertained that there was a quarter-section of land there the Secretary of the Interior thought it was not sufficient to allow him to start a school as a manual-labor school. His proposition is that there shall be a manual-labor school, so as to try to make the Indians support themselves as far as raising vegetables, &c., is concerned. He wanted to find out whether for a fair price he could purchase another quarter section, so that he could have three hundred and twenty acres. A school is to be provided for probably one hundred and fifty students. He recommended to the House committee that they should appropriate $2,500 for that purpose, which the House did. He has not committed himself to start the school, but in case he does do it then he wants that amount of money so that he could make this purchase.

This land is first-class land, worth the money paid for it if it is seen fit to buy it; and it will only be bought in case the school is to be started there. I think it is certainly not a mistake to allow them at this reasonable price to buy that land if they can put the school there.

That is the condition of the matter, and unless there is some reason given for striking out this paragraph that I do not know of, it seems to me everything is in favor of allowing the appropriation of $2,500 in the bill on condition that the Department wants to use it.

It is a very rich part of the country. This land is as fine as there is in any country I know of. It is as good land as there is in the State of Nebraska, and I believe we have as good land there as there is in any State of the Union. It is first-class land. It is within a mile and a half of Loup River, having good water within it, and every foot of it is susceptible of cultivation. I tried to procure the letter which was written to the House; but not being able to do so, by the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I should like to have read the letter that was written to that committee. I send up to be first read the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs directing the attention of the Secretary of the Interior to the subject, and then the letter of the Secretary of the Interior.

The letters were read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, July 6, 1882.

SIR: I desire to call your attention to the fact that if it is decided to open a school for Indian youth in the Pawnee school building in Nebraska, it will be necessary to purchase a quarter section of land adjoining that on which the building stands, in order that instruction in farming may form an important part of the school curriculum.

For the purchase of this land a sum not exceeding $2,500 will be required, and I respectfully suggest that Congress be requested to appropriate that amount for that purpose.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

H. PRICE, Commissioner.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 6, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the 6th instant, showing the need of an appropriation of $2,500 for the purchase of a quarter section of land adjoining that on which is located the Pawnee school building in Nebraska, provided it is decided to locate a school for Indian youths at that point.

The law providing for the school will be found on page 20 of the Indian appropriation act, approved May 17, 1882, wherein the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause a suitable building to be erected on a suitable section of land for industrial and other school purposes on the Sioux reservation; or, in his discretion, to establish said school in the school building now standing on the Pawnee reservation in Nebraska. An appropriation of $25,000 is made for said school, $15,000 of which is to be used in erecting and furnishing the building, providing the school is not located in the building on the Pawnee reservation.

The quantity of land on which the school building on the Pawnee reservation stands reserved from sale is one quarter section, which is not sufficient for the purpose of industrial training of one hundred and fifty scholars, the number named in the law.

At least a quarter of a section more of land will be required if the school is located at that point, and I therefore concur in the recommendation of the Commissioner for the appropriation of $2,500 to be used in the purchase of an additional quarter section of land, provided the school is located in the building on the Pawnee reservation in Nebraska.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. The school is not yet located on the Pawnee reservation, or anywhere. It will take some little time to gather up one hundred and fifty Indian students, and it will take some further time to establish a proper curriculum. The committee thought that as land was plenty in Nebraska, if this particular quarter section should not be purchased probably some other quarter section could be purchased hereafter, and we thought we would postpone this question until we should find a greater necessity existing than seems to exist now. I should like to accommodate my friend from Nebraska very much by buying out this farmer at the rate of $16 an acre for his land.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The price is a good deal less than that of Iowa land.

Mr. ALLISON. It is, no doubt. I say I should like to accommodate him, but I think he can wait until next year, and if the school is established and we find the necessity exists we shall then endeavor to purchase this farm.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the necessity at all exists, it exists before the establishment of the school, because, as my colleague stated, both Houses of Congress have already, by law, provided for the establishment of an Indian school either in Dakota, where there are no buildings, and it will cost the Government a great deal to put up the buildings, or on this reservation in the State of Nebraska, where there are already fine buildings which cannot be used for any other purpose. I think the Senator will admit that if those buildings are not used for an Indian school they will substantially be of no sort of use to the Government, and if sold at all scarcely anything will be realized.

A bill was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to exercise his discretion in the matter. It was all left with him. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior have now asked for this little appropriation to buy at a very small price one hundred and sixty acres of fine land, provided the school shall be established there. It becomes important for him to take into consideration the establishment of the school, because it depends upon where he will probably establish it, and this proposition leaves it just where the bill originally left it, leaving it all with the Secretary of the Interior for him to use $2,500 to buy an additional quarter section of land in connection with this building there and establish a school upon it. That is all there is in this question. The amount is small, and it certainly would be a safe place, in my judgment, to establish such a school.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to make one remark in reply to the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] He says it would be a difficult thing and would require a good deal of time to collect one hundred and fifty Indian students. Our railroad connections are such that they can be brought there any day in day-light. That is to say, the railroads connect now so near to the Spotted-Tail agency, so near the Santee agency, and actually connecting with the Omaha and Winnebago agencies and with the Otoes, so that that number could be brought there in five or six hours at any time.

One of the arguments in favor of this school there is because the buildings are already provided. The place would not have been thought of if it had not been that a building was there belonging to the Government, and the land is there belonging to the Government. But it turns out to be one of the best places that could have been selected. It is at a distance of one hundred to two hundred miles from the Indian camps; and thereby the Indian children would be removed so far from the Indians that they could not annoy them by frequent visits. It certainly should not be the policy of the Government to bring all of the students away to the Eastern States when it will cost as much to bring them here and take them back as it would to keep them a year at a school out there. It seems to me that no better place could possibly have been selected.

This land is cheap at the price, because some parties out there have said that it was worth $3,000, the same piece of land; and I have no doubt it is well worth at any rate the amount we should have to pay for it. I understand it could probably be had at $2,200, but certainly at not over $2,500; and the provision merely calls for $2,500, or so much as would be necessary for that purpose.

I say, taking it in any view, as you want a school there somewhere and you do not want it in the camps or near the camps of the Indians, and these lands and the buildings are already there, belonging to the Government, this is the best place. All that is needed is one hundred and sixty acres more of land, which will bring the money back at any time to the Government.

Mr. INGALLS. How much does the Government own there now?

Mr. SAUNDERS. One quarter section. I will state now in relation to this matter—and I think I am not violating any rule of etiquette when I say it—that the Secretary of the Interior says he would not think of starting a manual-labor school with less than three hundred and twenty acres of land, if he does start it. He will not say that he will start it at all, but if he does he wants an opportunity to buy this land where he needs it.

Mr. BECK. I favored striking out this paragraph because, according to my recollection, when the Indian appropriation bill was before the Senate for consideration, influenced by the experiments that had been made in the education of the young Indians both at Hampton and Carlisle, as well as elsewhere, a disposition was exhibited, and a liberal one, as I thought, on the part of the committee and of the Senate, to make a test of Indian schools somewhere on the reservation where the Indians were, especially among those Indians which had given us so much trouble heretofore. We made an arrangement, which seemed to be satisfactory to the chairman of the committee, to the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] and those who had been paying attention to those things, to have the school put on an Indian reservation, where the Indians could go and see their children, and see that they were well treated, and see them from time to time at little expense and without trouble.

Then the Senator from Nebraska came and told us what a magnificent arrangement there was on this Pawnee reservation, a place where the children naturally would go, and I supposed from what he said that all the land and the buildings and everything necessary were there. Now, after six weeks, after giving the Secretary of the Interior a chance to look over the Pawnee reservation to see whether everything was there, the proposition was brought in here to buy one hundred and sixty acres of land at $16 an acre in the neighborhood of the school. It seemed to me not a very good thing to do, and therefore I was in favor of striking out the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out the paragraph.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 19. Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.] I desire to make this announcement for the day, so that I need not weary the Senate by making it every time a vote is taken.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—20.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1952, as the Senate refuses to strike out the paragraph, I move to strike out "five," after "thousand," and to insert "two;" so as to read: "two thousand two hundred dollars." The Senator from Nebraska says that an arrangement has been made already by which this farm can be purchased for $2,200, and it is not necessary to appropriate any more than the amount required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is unanimous consent, that can be done, but it is out of order, the Senate having agreed to the matter by refusing to strike out the paragraph. If there is no objection that modification will be made. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "Treasury," in line 1966, to insert:

And out of this sum the Secretary is authorized to reimburse the superintendent for amount paid for damages done private property in making excavations for foundation of a new bath-house in 1881, not to exceed the sum of $345.40.

So as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of Hot Springs Creek: For the erection of a wall along its left bank, and other improvements upon the Hot Springs Mountain reservation, in Arkansas, $33,744.78, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, said amount having been collected by the receiver appointed by the Court of Claims and covered into the United States Treasury; and out of this sum the Secretary is authorized to reimburse the superintendent for amount paid for damages done private property in making excavations for foundation of a new bath-house in 1881, not to exceed the sum of $345.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "map," in line 1995, to strike out "of the national domain;" so as to read:

For the United States Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey, and the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $222,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. Is an amendment to the text of the bill in order now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The text cannot be amended at this stage according to the arrangement.

Mr. VANCE. All right.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "miscellaneous objects," in the appropriations for the "Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb," in line 2080, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-seven" and insert "fifty-five;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That no more than $22,000 of said sum shall be expended for salaries and wages.

So as to make the clause read:

For current expenses of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb: For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, and for books and illustrative apparatus, for general repairs, and improvements, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2101, to increase the appropriation "for maintenance of the Howard University, to be used in payment of part of the salaries of the officers, professors, and teachers, a portion of which will be paid from donations and other sources," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2104, after the word "dormitories," to insert the word "and;" and in line 2112, before the word

"thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

For repairs of buildings of the Howard University: To be used in repairing the main university building, Miner hall and wings, and Clarke hall, (dormitories, and professors' dwellings and rooms,) including outbuildings, to wit: the wood-work, doors, windows, porches, steps, and outbuildings, fences, basement-floors, heating-apparatus, plumbing, and drainage; to paint all the wood-work, including wings, and to build new fence; and for water-supply, to be used in the construction of a wind-mill, with reservoir, laying pipes, putting in pump, and all necessary attachments, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum," in line 2116, after the word "subsistence," to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "twenty-four;" in line 2121, after the word "expenses," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" in line 2125, after the word "furniture," to strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand;" and in line 2126, after the word "all," to strike out "forty-six thousand eight hundred," and insert "fifty thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For subsistence, $24,000; for salaries and compensation of the surgeon-in-chief, two assistant surgeons, engineer, matron, nurses, and cooks, $9,500; for fuel and light, $3,000; for clothing, bedding, forage, transportation, and miscellaneous expenses, $6,000; for rent of hospital buildings and grounds, $4,000; for medicines and medical supplies, $1,500; for repairs and furniture, $2,000; in all, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for the propagation of food-fishes "under the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries," in line 2148, after the word "dollars," to strike out "which shall be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2155, to increase the appropriation "for the maintenance of the United States carp-ponds in Washington and elsewhere, and the distribution of the young fish, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employes," from $25,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2184, to increase the appropriation "for North American ethnology, Smithsonian Institution: For the purpose of continuing ethnological researches among the North American Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, including salaries and compensation of all necessary employes," from $30,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the National Museum, in line 2206, to increase the appropriation "for the preservation of collections of the National Museum: For the preservation and exhibition of the collections received from the surveying and exploring expeditions of the Government, and other sources, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employes," from $65,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2225, to increase the appropriation "for the transfer and preparation of the Philadelphia collections: For expense of transferring to Washington the collections presented to the United States at the close of the permanent international exhibition in Philadelphia, including necessary expenses already incurred for the purpose," from $7,500 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 2228.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that in line 2227 "Professor Townsend Glover" should read "Professor Townsend Glover."

Mr. ALLISON. The name is correct as printed in the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Post-Office Department," in line 2254, to reduce the appropriation "for a passenger elevator for the Post-Office Department building," from $8,000 to $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2255, to strike out the following clause:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to purchase out of the appropriation of $15,000 for marking and rating stamps for the fiscal year 1883, in the act of May 4, 1882, five letter-canceling and post-marking machines, at a price not exceeding $350 each.

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment. It authorizes the Postmaster-General to use a canceling machine, one of the most recent inventions and a very useful article, in the five leading cities of the country. The machine has been tested and has proved to be useful, and the Postmaster-General now has no authority to use it. This clause that the House has inserted in the bill authorizes the Postmaster-General to use that machine, which cancels stamps at the rate of 11,000 an hour. If this is stricken out the Postmaster-General will be deprived of the use of the machine, so that letters mailed at night will not go out until the next day. It seems to me it is so patent upon its face that there cannot be any question upon non-concurring in the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. What the committee thought was patent on its face seemed to be the purchase of a patent. We had no knowledge about it. I should like to have some letter read from the Post-Office Department requesting this authority.

Mr. FERRY. It was embodied in the report of the House committee, as I understand. A report was made to the committee of the House, and it was reported upon by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The machine has been in use by the Department, and the test has been very satisfactory to the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations were not able to find any suggestion from anybody.

Mr. FERRY. I will state to the Senator that I am advised by the Department that the machine is not only useful but it is desirable to facilitate the business of the Department in canceling stamps and post-marking letters.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator if he has any information as to the value of these canceling machines?

Mr. FERRY. I understand that they are furnished to the Government at cost.

Mr. INGALLS. Who is the inventor?

Mr. FERRY. I do not know. The parties who have invented the machine would make nothing by this proviso. The Government is testing the machine, and finds that it is very useful and is a great economy of time.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator does not know the inventor?

Mr. FERRY. I do not.

Mr. INGALLS. Nor where he resides?

Mr. FERRY. I do not.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to have a suggestion from some administrative officer of the Government that this is a proper thing to do. Here was a proposition in the bill as it came from the House to purchase five canceling machines at a fixed price. There ought to be some information communicated by somebody.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will allow me, the amount is stated here, at a price not exceeding $350.

Mr. COCKRELL. Three hundred and fifty dollars for each one of the five machines; for a little bit of a stamp, used by hand.

Mr. FERRY. Its use is confined to five cities of the country, and it will cancel and post-mark 11,000 letters in an hour. If you can find any other machine that has been used heretofore that will come anything near canceling that number, then you have more information than I have. I think a machine with such economy of time as it gives is worth that much, and I understand it is simply its cost.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee had no information whatever, but saw a proposition here to purchase a patent, and they struck it out. Having no information, no letter, no report, and no statement, we are asked here to purchase five of these machines. I suppose the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] knows about the matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I cannot give the chairman any official information or recommendation, and I suggest that the amendment go over until we can obtain it, for I am very sure that recommendations in favor of this machine were before the House Appropriations Committee last year when I served on it. I saw the machine, saw it exhibited, and saw its wonderful facilities. You turn a little crank and the postal cards or letters rattle out of the machine as fast as any man can count them, and they come out stamped.

Mr. FERRY. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that the machine is used in the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington. Its use is confined to those cities.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is no question about the usefulness of the machine.

Mr. FERRY. There are but five proposed by this bill; they have been used and have shown their utility, and certainly there cannot be any objection to authorizing the Department to use them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know who owns the patent.

Mr. FERRY. Nor I.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think there is no question that the machine is certainly an economy of time. I suggest that the amendment lie over.

Mr. INGALLS. By whose authority were the machines placed in the post-offices?

Mr. FERRY. They were placed there by the postmasters or the Postmaster-General, for the purpose of testing them as other machines are frequently tested, and when they prove useful then the Postmaster-General asks for authority to purchase them. This is the authority which he has asked and which is provided for by the House, appropriating $1,750 for five of these machines which economize so much time.

Mr. COCKRELL. How large are the machines? What would it cost to manufacture them?

Mr. FERRY. I have stated that the price here is the cost price.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator say that the cost of the material and the manufacture of these little stamping machines is $350 each? I should like to have some information in regard to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that if he will allow this amendment to be made, by the time the conference shall meet I will look into the matter, and if it is all right I am willing that it shall be appropriated for.

Mr. FERRY. As I understand the recommendation for the appropriation from the Department, I have no objection to the course suggested. I know nothing about the matter in itself only as it comes from the Department. I am seeking the best interests of the Post-Office Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the amendment to be passed over informally?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; it is to be agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Michigan agrees that the amendment may be made.

Mr. FERRY. The chairman has stated that in the conference committee if he finds that what I have stated is verified by the Department, which I doubt not will be the case, the matter will be considered by the committee. That is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. No. 6242) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with his objections thereto, the House of Representatives proceeded, in conformity with the Constitution, to reconsider the same and had resolved that the bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill just received from the House of Representatives, with the message of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was an order of the Senate to finish the sundry civil bill to-day.

Mr. McMILLAN. This will take no time. It will lead to no discussion, I suppose.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the motion in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can move to set aside the appropriation bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield for that purpose. I move to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLISON. If it leads to no debate whatever, and we are to have a vote without any debate, I shall not personally object.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the matter will lead to no debate. We are ready to take the vote on the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The President's message will have to be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will have to be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move to postpone the consideration of the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Until when?

Mr. McMILLAN. I understood the Senator from Iowa to agree to lay it aside informally for the purpose of taking a vote on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday we agreed that the sundry civil bill should be completed to-day. We are going on very well with it. It is now only two o'clock, and I think in two hours if we go on we can complete the bill, and then the Senate can take up the President's message.

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not think the river and harbor bill will lead to any debate, and the matter can be disposed of in a very short time. I think time will be economized by taking that course.

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How long does the Senator from Minnesota move that the sundry civil appropriation bill shall be postponed?

Mr. McMILLAN. Until we consider the message of the President and the bill returned to the Senate with his message.

Mr. INGALLS. That motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill must be postponed to a day certain.

Mr. McMILLAN. The motion is to postpone with a view to vote on the bill, unless the Senator from Iowa will agree to lay the appropriation bill aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill must be postponed until to-morrow in order that another bill may be taken up.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We had better go on and finish the appropriation bill to-day, and let the other matter come up to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. We can take up the message of the President and dispose of it in ten minutes, and a majority of the Senate can then resume the consideration of the sundry civil bill. It is entirely within the control of a majority.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Cannot the appropriation bill be postponed until four o'clock?

Mr. McMILLAN. Say three o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it will have to be postponed to a day certain.

Mr. FERRY and others. That is a time certain.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think if the Chair will look at the rule he will come to the conclusion that it does not mean that a motion to postpone must be to some day other than this day.

Mr. HARRIS. Some time certain.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Some time certain is all that the rule requires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To postpone to a day certain is beyond this day.

Mr. HARRIS. A day certain means a time certain. An hour of to-day falls within the rule, as it seems to me.

Mr. FERRY. This is a day, and to postpone to an hour of this day is a postponement to a day certain. It is a certain hour and a certain day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the motion to postpone until four o'clock.

Mr. McMILLAN. Until three o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to postpone the sundry civil appropriation bill until three o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Now I move to take up the river and harbor bill, which has been returned, with the message of the President.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, and the message of the President will be read.

The message was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

Having watched with much interest the progress of House bill No. 6242, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," and having since it was received carefully examined it, after mature consideration I am constrained to return it herewith to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, without my signature and with my objections to its passage.

Many of the appropriations in the bill are clearly for the general welfare and most beneficial in their character. Two of the objects for which provision is made were by me considered so important that I felt it my duty to direct to them the attention of Congress. In my annual message in December last I urged the vital importance of legislation for the reclamation of the marshes and for the establishment of the harbor lines along the Potomac front. In April last by special message I recommended an appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River. It is not necessary that I say that when my signature would make the bill appropriating for these and other valuable national objects a law, it is with great reluctance and only under a sense of duty that I withhold it.

My principal objection to the bill is that it contains appropriations for purposes not for the common defense or general welfare, and which do not promote commerce among the States. These provisions, on the contrary, are entirely for the benefit of the particular localities in which it is proposed to make the improvements. I regard such appropriation of the public money as beyond the powers given by the Constitution to Congress and the President.

I feel the more bound to withhold my signature from the bill because of the peculiar evils which manifestly result from this infraction of the Constitution. Appropriations of this nature, to be devoted purely to local objects, tend to an increase in number and in amount. As the citizens of one State find that money, to raise which they in common with the whole country are taxed, is to be expended for local improvements in another State, they demand similar benefits for themselves, and it is not unnatural that they should seek to indemnify themselves for such use of the public funds by securing appropriations for similar improvements in their own neighborhood. Thus as the bill becomes more objectionable it secures more support. This result is invariable and necessarily follows a neglect to observe the constitutional limitations imposed upon the law-making power.

The appropriations for river and harbor improvements have, under the influence to which I have alluded, increased year by year out of proportion to the progress of the country, great as that has been. In 1870 the aggregate appropriation was $3,975,900; in 1875, $6,648,517.50; in 1880, $8,976,500; and in 1881, $11,451,000, while by the present act there is appropriated $18,743,875.

While feeling every disposition to leave to the Legislature the responsibility of determining what amount should be appropriated for the purposes of the bill, so long as the appropriations are confined to objects indicated by the grant of power, I cannot escape the conclusion that, as a part of the law-making power of the Government, the duty devolves upon me to withhold my signature from a bill containing appropriations which in my opinion greatly exceed in amount the needs of the country for the present fiscal year. It being the usage to provide money for these purposes by annual appropriation bills, the President is in effect directed to expend so large an amount of money within so brief a period that the expenditure cannot be made economically and advantageously.

The extravagant expenditure of public money is an evil not to be measured by the value of that money to the people who are taxed for it. They sustain a greater injury in the demoralizing effect produced upon those who are intrusted with official duty through all the ramifications of Government.

These objections could be removed and every constitutional purpose readily attained, should Congress enact that one-half only of the aggregate amount provided for in the bill be appropriated for expenditure during the fiscal year, and that the sum so appropriated be expended only for such objects named in the bill as the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, shall determine; provided that in no case shall the expenditure for any one purpose exceed the sum now designated by the bill for that purpose.

I feel authorized to make this suggestion because of the duty imposed upon the President by the Constitution "to recommend to the consideration of Congress such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient;" and because it is my earnest desire that the public works which are in progress shall suffer no injury. Congress will also convene again in four months, when this whole subject will be open for their consideration.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, August 1, 1882.

Mr. HALE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Necessarily the question will have to be by yeas and nays. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? Each Senator as his name is called, if he is in favor of the passage of the bill notwithstanding the objection of the President, will vote "yea."

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILCOTT, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. GROOME.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALKER, (when Mr. GARLAND's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] If he were present, I should vote "nay." I am informed that he would vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. FAIR.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. MCPHERSON.]

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. LAPHAM, (after having voted in the negative.) On this subject I find I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BECK. I have authorized myself to be paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] who is absent. I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 41, nays 16; as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question whether the bill shall pass, the President's objections to the contrary notwithstanding, the question is determined in the affirmative; forty-one Senators voting in the affirmative and sixteen in the negative. So the bill is passed.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely desire to call attention to one fact. In the passage of this bill—as a matter of course it makes no difference, but still it is well enough always that the record should be correct—I noticed that in the pairs as they were announced one Senator was paired with another Senator. Now, in a vote where it requires two-thirds to pass a bill, a pair should be of two Senators for the bill with one against it. This bill has been passed by pairing one Senator with one Senator.

Mr. McMILLAN. It does not affect the result.

Mr. LOGAN. It does affect the vote. I merely call attention to it.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman if he thinks on any question whatever one Senator should be considered equal to two other Senators, and under what rule that can be?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not want to get into any discussion about this, but it is always the rule where a two-thirds vote is required that the party voting in the majority should pair two against one, so as to make it equal. It has been done over and over again here on this floor. It has always been the rule, and nobody ever questioned it before.

Mr. WINDOM. I suppose there is no objection to one Senator pairing with another Senator if he chooses.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not questioning that.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the pairs as gentlemen announce them.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 1st instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 1582) to amend the statutes in relation to copyright; and on the 2d instant the act (S. No. 60) to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes; and the act (S. No. 972) creating the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company a corporation in the Territories of Utah, Idaho, and Wyoming, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 2713) to extend the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of certain pensioners," approved March 3, 1879, to certain other pensioners;

A bill (H. R. No. 2911) for the relief of the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. No. 4996) repealing the limitation of redemption of two-cent documentary internal-revenue stamps by the Government; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives to public and law libraries.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following joint resolutions:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing Lieutenant-Commander Charles Dwight Sigsbee, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the Emperor of Germany; and also authorizing Joseph R. Hawley to accept decorations from the Governments of the Netherlands, of Spain, and Japan; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to it by citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) to print 25,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate of the 6th of July, for the printing and binding for the use of the Signal Office of the Department of War, 2,500 copies of the annual report of the Chief Signal-Officer for 1881, with an amendment, in which it is requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 604) for the relief of William W. Thomas;

A bill (H. R. No. 1328) for the relief of Peter March, Frederick Kimberley, David Vaughn, Barney Schooley, Eliza Scott, widow of Joseph Scott, Phebe C. Clement, widow of Isaac M. Clement, Frederick Smith, Owen McNabb, and Thomas Miller; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1472) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6687) for the manufacture of salt in the Indian Territory.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed with the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6716) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The Committee on Appropriations proposed, in the appropriations "under the Department of Justice," to amend in line 2268, after the word "elevator," by inserting "to run from the ground floor;" so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of an elevator, to run from the ground floor, repairs, and furnishing and fitting up of rooms in the building now owned by the Government and known as the Freedman's Bank building, as per estimate of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the Attorney-General and under his direction, who shall have control of said building, which shall hereafter be occupied by the Department of Justice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "public printing and binding," after the word "million," in line 2289, to strike out "four hundred thousand" and insert "three hundred and seventy-seven thousand six hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employes, for labor, (by the day, piece, or contract,) and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $2,377,650; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding may be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 2285 I move to strike out "the commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2301, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve;" in line 2310, after the word "United States," to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "twenty-five;" in line 2312, after the word "dollars," to strike out "for the government of the District of Columbia, $11,350;" and in line 2314, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $1,504,600.50; for the State Department, $15,000; for the Treasury Department, $250,000; for the War Department, $166,000, (of which sum $12,000 shall be for the catalogue of the library of the Surgeon-General's Office); for the Navy Department, $50,000; for the Interior Department, $364,000, (of which sum $10,000 is appropriated for rebinding tract books for the General Land Office); for the Department of Justice, $10,000; for the Post-Office Department, $150,000; for the Agricultural Department, $15,000; for the Supreme Court of the United States, $25,000; for the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $1,000; for the Court of Claims, $8,000; and for the Library of Congress, $19,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that one amendment may be treated as not adopted about purchasing five letter-cancelling and post-marking machines. I have a telegram just received from a gentleman of very high respectability, who says that there is a very strong letter from the postmaster of Boston setting forth the great saving of expense by these machines. I know nothing about the matter myself.

Mr. ALLISON. That clause was struck out with the understanding that the conferees should look into it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know about it myself, but I have a telegram in relation to it. If the matter is considered open for conference, I shall not make any motion.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us go on.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2324, after the word "either," to insert "other than public documents;" so as to read:

Provided, That printing and binding, or either, other than public documents, shall not be done at the Government Printing Office for Senators and Representatives or Delegates in Congress except upon the payment by them of the estimated cost thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to call attention to the amendment just adopted, in line 2324, inserting the words "other than public documents." It seems to me that members of Congress ought not to be allowed to have other documents bound there. I do not think it is right. Is that the object of the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment of the committee on line 2324 would authorize members of Congress to get bound at the Public Printing Office private documents upon paying the cost. It does seem to me that the printing establishment is large enough now without authorizing members of Congress to have private books bound there. The words "other than public documents" ought to be stricken out.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; those words ought not to be stricken out because sometimes Senators and Representatives desire to have public documents bound, one copy; for instance, the Senate allows them to have one copy of a public document bound, and it is very convenient.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that there was not the slightest idea in the mind of the committee of allowing what he suggests may be done; but if he will put any phraseology into this clause that will carry out his idea I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. SHERMAN. The language of the bill as it now stands with the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations would allow Senators and Members to get private books, the History of England, or any other book, bound by paying the cost. That is not right.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Ohio can accomplish his object by striking out the words, in lines 2326 and 2327, "except upon the payment by them of the estimated cost thereof."

Mr. ALLISON. That ought to be struck out.

Mr. ANTHONY. That will accomplish the object.

Mr. SHERMAN. That will accomplish it.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose there is no objection in anybody's mind to the printing of a portion of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for any member, containing remarks made by him on any public question.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a public document.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think that is a public document.

Mr. ALLISON. There is not any objection to that if he pays for it. We do not intend that the Public Printer shall print records without cost to the person who orders them.

Mr. HOAR. Why not strike out the words "other than public documents," and that leaves Senators and Representatives to pay the estimated cost of printing public documents, which I suppose they are expected to do?

Mr. SHERMAN. As the clause now stands Senators and Members could have their private libraries rebound.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator, instead of repeating that which we all agree to, will suggest some amendment that will make it stand otherwise.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let it read "except public documents and portions of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD."

Mr. ALLISON. I will leave the two Senators to prepare such an amendment as will carry out their views.

Mr. HOAR. That would enable you to print and bind public documents for Senators and Representatives.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think any man will want to do that.

Mr. BECK. I suggest that we pass over this clause informally until the Senators can consult and see what should be the exact language.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand it, there is a special limitation now in the law which permits the binding of one copy of a public document for any Senator or Representative and limits it to that, and requires the Senator or Representative who has anything else printed to pay the expense. For instance, you have your speech printed and pay for it in advance—

Mr. SHERMAN. That is provided for.

Mr. HOAR. That is provided for already. Now, if you strike out the words "other than public documents," leaving the clause as it came from the House, you have then got the exact law that you want.

Mr. ALLISON. The House provision cuts off the binding of a public document for a Senator or Member that has always been done without cost.

Mr. HOAR. How does this change the present law? Why not strike it out?

Mr. ALLISON. The whole thing might be struck out. Let me suggest to the Senator from Ohio to strike out the whole proviso. That will leave the law just as it is and cover the case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that, except that I do not want to allow the binding of private books at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. ANTHONY. That cannot be done now. The law forbids it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move then to strike out the whole proviso from line 2323 to line 2327, as follows:

Provided, That printing and binding, or either, other than public documents, shall not be done at the Government Printing Office for Senators and Representatives or Delegates in Congress except upon the payment by them of the estimated cost thereof.

That will leave the matter to stand upon the present law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Does that take away the existing privilege to have parts of the RECORD printed? ["No." "No."]

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "thereof," in line 2327, to insert:

Provided further, That the Public Printer shall keep an account of the actual cost of all printing and binding done for the Patent Office, and shall make a statement of such cost in his annual report.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILCOTT. I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that the amendment will be in order as soon as the bill is read through. We are acting now on the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriation for "United States courts," after line 2411, to insert:

For salaries of United States district judge, attorney, and marshal for the northern district of Iowa, namely: for the judge, $3,500; for the attorney, $200; and for the marshal, $200; in all, $3,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out from line 2424 to line 2446, in the following words:

To supply district judges, district attorneys, and clerks of the United States courts, who have not already received the same, with the Revised Statutes of the United States, a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated; and the Attorney-General is hereby authorized, should it be necessary, to cause the reports of the Supreme Court of the United States upon which the copyright has expired to be republished, and cause the same to be annotated under the act of March 3, 1881: Provided, That all reports so republished shall be printed at the Government Printing Office, and be sold at 10 per cent. above the cost of publication and printing; but any contracts now existing shall not be affected by this provision: Provided further, That all reports and statutes heretofore or hereafter furnished by the United States to district judges, district attorneys, and clerks of the United States courts, under this or any other law, shall not become the property of these officers, but on the expiration of their official term shall be by them turned over and delivered to their respective successors in office; but the reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court shall only be furnished to the district judges under this provision and said act.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And no reports of the Supreme Court or Statutes at Large of the United States shall be furnished to district judges or district attorneys under the provisions of the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1881, until specific appropriation shall be made therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "miscellaneous," after line 2452, to strike out:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for services rendered in connection with the duties of the late chairman of the committee on experiments and chairman of the Light-House Board in conducting scientific researches for the Light-House establishment, as recommended by the Light-House Board, $2,925.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the lines proposed to be stricken out. I think I can show him that these lines ought not to be stricken out.

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator proceeds, I desire to suggest that the committee have received and put in my hands letters which have induced them not to insist upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the committee does not insist on the amendment—

Mr. ALLISON. This proposition has been here now for four or five years, and is so persisted in and so many Senators seem to understand it that for one I have despaired of postponing it, and I think we had better let the item stand.

Mr. MAXEY. On the 20th of June, 1878, the Congress of the United States made an appropriation of $11,000 to the heirs of Professor Joseph Henry for services as president of the Light-House Board, not as double pay, but because the pay he had received came not from the United States but from the Smithsonian Institution. The two gentlemen provided for by this clause were selected by Professor Henry to aid him in that work, and did aid him in that work, and had not their pay from the Treasury of the United States but from the Smithsonian fund. Therefore I say that if the Government received the benefit of their services it ought to pay for them, and I have the report of the board, of Admiral Rodgers, of Mr. Patterson, of—

Mr. ALLISON. We have seen those reports over and over again. I presume these people have written dozens of letters about it, and I say to the Senator from Texas that we shall not insist on the amendment further.

Mr. MAXEY. I did not understand that. I thought it was proposed that the amendment should be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment striking out lines 2453 to 2459.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2475, after the word "documents," to insert "and condemned furniture;" so as to make the clause read:

And it shall be the duty of the Clerk and Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives and the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate to cause to be sold all waste paper and useless documents and condemned furniture that have accumulated during the fiscal year 1882, or that may hereafter accumulate, in their respective departments or offices, under the direction of the Committee on Accounts of their respective Houses, and cover the proceeds thereof into the Treasury; and they shall, at the beginning of each regular session of Congress, report to their respective Houses the amount of said sales.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2483, to insert:

That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and the Architect of the Capitol Extension, constituting the Capitol police board, shall furnish uniforms for the Capitol policemen and watchmen, and for that purpose the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2490, to insert:

To pay salary of Humphrey H. Lemon, an additional Capitol policeman, authorized by joint resolution approved July 7, 1882, $1,100, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2495, to insert:

To pay the Church Orphanage Association of Saint John's church of Washington, District of Columbia, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2498, to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to pay Dr. John L. Hayes, for preparing pamphlet on the husbandry of the Angora goat, in conformity with the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 1, 1882, $500.

Mr. MORRILL. I move an amendment to take the place of that clause, and I think the Senator in charge of the bill will not object to it:

To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to pay Dr. John L. Hayes for preparing the pamphlet on the husbandry of the Angora goat, the payment for the plates therefor, and the cost of printing the same, in conformity to the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 1, 1882, $2,500.

I will say that this is an amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance, I believe unanimously, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. If the amendment as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations should prevail, it would prevent the publication of this work. The whole cost of printing and the purchasing of the plates and the compensation to Mr. Hayes has been estimated to amount to $2,500. The cost of printing is $1,400 or $1,500.

The plates have already been purchased, the gentleman owning the plates in Massachusetts giving the use of them, and it only costs the paper and printing, three and a half cents for each volume. Those have already been purchased, and the Commissioner of Agriculture must be authorized to obtain this printing at the Public Printing Office to the amount that will be involved or we may lose the publication. Therefore the entire amendment of the Committee on Finance should be inserted. I have seen several members of the Committee on Appropriations, and they do not object to it, and I think the chairman will not.

Mr. ALLISON. We examined the joint resolution which was passed authorizing the publication of this paper, and we found that that resolution authorized the printing. Now, we have made an appropriation for the printing of everything connected with the office of the Commissioner of Agriculture, which will of course include this Angora goat pamphlet. When the committee agreed on this amendment they did not know of these steel plates, or whatever they are, and there ought to be added to the appropriation a sufficient sum to buy or rent or lease the steel plates.

Mr. MORRILL. I beg the Senator's pardon. This will not be printed by the Commissioner of Agriculture unless there is an appropriation made for it.

Mr. ALLISON. But we have made an appropriation in this very bill for printing for the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. MORRILL. You have made a general appropriation, but not including this. This was not contemplated.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no particular interest in this matter. I am perfectly willing to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, but it will turn out that Mr. Hayes will get most of this $2,500.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator is very much mistaken. He only gets what I have stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I make no objection to the substitution suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2503, to insert:

To pay Eugene P. Corvaizer for services rendered as messenger to the President from November 6, 1881, to January 23, 1882, inclusive, at $4 per day, $312.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend by adding after the word "dollars," in line 2508, the following amendment, and ask that the Secretary will please read a letter from the Treasury Department in relation to the justice of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is an amendment which will come in after the bill is read through. It is not an amendment to any amendment of the committee.

Mr. VANCE. I suppose it is in order as an amendment to the committee's amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not germane to the amendment just acted on, and under the rule the amendment will be in order hereafter.

Mr. VANCE. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2508, to insert:

SENATE.

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to Miss Ellen Burnside, surviving sister of Hon. Ambrose E. Burnside, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, the sum of $3,681.50, and to his legal representatives the sum of $3,681.50, being in all $7,363, the amount of compensation of a Senator from September 14, 1881, to March 4, 1883, the termination of the present Congress.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to correct the name of the sister of General Burnside, in line 2511. It should be "Ellen W. Burnside" instead of "Ellen Burnside."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2520, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay William Lucas and Thomas S. Hickman, laborers in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $438 each, which is the amount of the 20 per cent. reduction from their salaries from June 30, 1879, to June 30, 1882.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2527, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to advance to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate such sum as may be necessary, not exceeding $1,000, to meet any extraordinary expenses arising during the recess of the Senate; and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall, as soon as practicable, furnish vouchers in detail covering such expenditures, to be audited and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to the Secretary of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2537, to insert:

For reconstructing and improving the Senate elevator, and for constructing a freight-elevator for the use of the Senate, and for repairs to coils and steam-machinery in the basement of the Senate wing, $10,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2542, to insert:

To enable the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase works of art, $10,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library to report as an amendment to this amendment several small matters. The first is to add:

To enable the Librarian of Congress, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, to purchase the set of records and briefs in cases in the Supreme Court of the United States belonging to the estate of the late Matthew H. Carpenter, the sum of $8,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. What is the amendment just acted on about?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a full report here which will give all the information desired.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We had better hear it.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is recommended strongly by the Supreme Court itself. The collection is very valuable. I will send the report of the Library Committee to the desk to be read, as it explains the matter.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The Joint Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the matter of the purchase of the records and briefs of cases in the Supreme Court of the United States belonging to the estate of the late Matthew H. Carpenter, having considered the matter, submit the following report:

The set of records and briefs in cases in the Supreme Court of the United States belonging to the estate of the late Senator Carpenter, comprises—

1. The records from January term, 1832, when they were first printed, to the end of October term, 1877.

2. The briefs of counsel in cases before the court from December term, 1861, to the end of October term, 1877.

These make in all four hundred and six volumes, but, as they are mostly bound in very large volumes, they contain the matter of about one thousand ordinary volumes of law-books. It is understood that there are only three sets of these documents in existence, and that they would be of great and constant value in the law department of the Library, for the use and reference of the courts, the bar, and the public. The Library, it may be added, already has the continuation of these records and briefs from the end of the set here referred to in 1877 to the present time, which will be continued by an existing order of the Supreme Court without cost to the Library.

The committee recommend that an appropriation of $8,000 (which has been certified to the committee by experts as a fair commercial valuation for these documents) be inserted in the bill providing for sundry civil expenses of the Government, to be paid to the legal representatives of the late M. H. Carpenter, for the purchase of his full set of Supreme Court records and briefs, the same to be deposited in the Library of Congress, and report the following amendment for that purpose:

"To enable the Librarian of Congress, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, to purchase the set of records and briefs in cases in the Supreme Court of the United States belonging to the estate of the late Matthew H. Carpenter, the sum of $8,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri wish a reconsideration of the vote on the amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; he does not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment of the Senator from Ohio stands agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. By direction of the Committee on the Library I move to further amend the amendment by adding "for compensation to John A. Graham, late disbursing agent of the Library of Congress, for two years' service as such agent, $800."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. From the same committee I also offer the following:

To enable the Librarian of Congress to arrange, select, edit, and prepare for publication the historical manuscripts in the Library of Congress collected by the late Peter Force for the publication known as the fourth and fifth series of the American Archives, not heretofore published; and to incorporate such additional manuscript or rare unpublished materials relating to the period embraced as may be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library; the same to be printed in folio form, at the Government Printing Office, under the supervision of the Librarian of Congress, $4,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Does that include the cost of printing?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; it does not. It is not presumed that there will be any cost of printing for a year or two. It will take probably a year to arrange the documents in connection with the other manuscripts on file. This proposition passed the Senate unanimously some time ago, and the amendment simply authorizes the employment of sufficient force to edit the matter. Further legislation will be required doubtless when we come to the printing.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are two other amendments from the Committee on the Library, one in charge of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the other in charge of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] that had better be offered now.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations:

To enable the Secretary of State to purchase the manuscript papers of Benjamin Franklin, and the collection of books, &c., known as the Franklin collection, belonging to Henry Stevens, of London, $35,000; the printed books, pamphlets, and newspapers, and one set of the type-writer copies of the manuscripts to be deposited in the Library of Congress, and the residue to be preserved in the Department of State.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to hear some explanation of that.

Mr. HOAR. I will make a brief explanation of this amendment. This has been recommended by three Secretaries of State in succession, Mr. Evarts, Mr. Blaine, and Mr. Frelinghuysen. Mr. Blaine sent the librarian of the Department of State to England to examine this collection, and he returned reporting in regard to its character by a report which I hold in my hand—rather too long a document to read just now.

These are the papers and manuscripts left by Dr. Franklin. They passed into the possession of his grandson, William Temple Franklin, who undertook to arrange for a publication of twelve volumes. He published in fact only six volumes in the year 1817 or 1818. Two volumes of the six were Dr. Franklin's autobiography. He selected from the other manuscripts such as he thought would please the taste of the British public at that time; only four volumes of those were published; so that of the 2,938 manuscripts 2,310 have never been printed. These manuscripts are the archives of the American legation in Paris during the entire revolutionary war, and which was substantially our only foreign legation of any importance. They contain all Dr. Franklin's communications to Congress, many of which were intercepted, so that there are spaces of more than twelve months in which no communication was received on this side. They were captured by the British cruisers.

They contain entirely the archives of this legation, so that they are the whole diplomatic history of the Revolution so far as it is found in communication with the French embassy, but they contain nearly all the known information in regard to our naval operations during the war, which were much more extensive than is generally known.

Rev. Edward Everett Hale, one of the most accomplished historical scholars in this country, was summoned before the committee, and he said that investigating the history of John Paul Jones, the famous commodore, you come to a place where there is no material whatever about Jones's operations after about a year from the beginning of the revolutionary war. All that material is there unpublished, never has seen the light. Mr. Bancroft never saw it; no historian has ever seen it.

When this matter was made known there were four gentlemen in Boston who immediately raised, three of them $10,000, and one $5,000, to purchase the collection for the Boston city library, and that offer is open now, but they all agreed in Boston that these being the actual archives of our Government ought to be in the possession of the Department of State.

In addition to this vast number of manuscripts there is a very large quantity of old Pennsylvania newspapers, the newspapers published by Dr. Franklin himself, and other newspapers which came into his office of the period from 1730 down to 1770 and 1775.

In addition to that there is the only remaining one of that great State paper, the petition to the King, signed by the representatives of the colonies. This is one of the papers which won from Lord Chatham the famous declaration about the wisdom of the papers issued from the American Congress, in which he said, as Senators will recollect, that he had read Thucydides and the masterpieces of the great states of antiquity, but that for wisdom and dignity he found nothing which equaled those of the American Congress assembled at Philadelphia.

The signatures of the Declaration of Independence, as Senators know, are substantially gone and become illegible by time. These signatures on the petition to the King are fresh and undimmed. If I were a collector like Bromley or Browne, I would give $100,000 for this collection.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator knows that we have in this country pictures of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. These papers are in London, it seems. The signatures he speaks of may have been put on more recently than the others, which he says have faded.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no; this is the petition to the King sent to Dr. Franklin, then the agent of the State of Pennsylvania, to be presented in 1774. The King refused to receive it. Dr. Franklin retained it there in his own possession. It is signed by every one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. It passed into the possession of William Temple Franklin, and was found some years ago in the lodgings of William Temple Franklin, left by him after his death with this great mass of his grandfather's papers.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Do I understand the Senator to say that none of these valuable papers have ever been printed?

Mr. HOAR. I stated the fact about that. Out of 2,938 manuscripts, 2,310 have never been printed and never seen the light.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand the Senator to say that the historian Bancroft had never even had access to them.

Mr. HOAR. He never had access to them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Has the Senator any satisfactory evidence that they are authentic?

Mr. HOAR. There is no more question about it than there is of the authenticity of this Capitol.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the great historian of America has never seen these papers or known that they were in existence, how strange it is that so many valuable papers should have been concealed from the gaze of those who were interested and who desired all authentic facts!

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator had listened to my remarks he would not have made that statement. These papers belonged to Mr. William Temple Franklin. He undertook in 1817 or 1818 to publish a collection of his grandfather's papers in twelve volumes; and he selected, not with any reference to absolute historical value but to what he thought would please the British public, and he published six of his twelve volumes and then stopped. Of those six volumes two are made up of the doctor's autobiography and other documents which had been previously in print, so that there are only four volumes of these twelve volumes of letters, and those were only a small portion of the whole number.

William Temple Franklin lived in London for many years after that time in considerable poverty. Then he died, and Mr. Henry Stevens, who is a very distinguished historical scholar and book collector, purchased these volumes, and they were so valuable that some little time ago, being in difficulty, he raised money on a pledge of them, I believe $20,000. They have never seen the light. Mr. Stevens has kept them carefully, intending to make some use of them himself perhaps, until Mr. Dwight, the librarian of the State Department, himself an accomplished scholar, was sent by Mr. Blaine last year to Europe for the purpose of examining these papers. He made a careful and thorough examination of them, and his report is here. As I have said, three Secretaries of State in succession have urgently recommended the purchase.

John R. Bartlett, of Providence, Rhode Island, perhaps as high an authority as there is in the country, the librarian of the Rhode Island Historical Society; Rev. Edward Everett Hale, in my judgment unequalled—the Senate, of course, knows his great reputation—came on here and came before our committee this winter. There is no question of the value of the collection.

Mr. VANCE. I had the honor some time ago to suggest that this amendment was out of order. I did not care to interrupt the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, but I have been myself twice sat down on when I offered an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. This is reported by a standing committee of the Senate. It is not general legislation. It is for the purchase of a particular collection. It is clearly in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina mean that it should be offered after the bill is through?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true by the agreement of the Senate. It may be offered after the bill is read through.

Mr. HOAR. This was offered by the consent of the committee at this time, and I hope the Senator will not require us to do it all over again. This is very clearly in order except for the understanding of the Senate that they would take up the committee amendments first. When the committee amendment as to the Library was reached, consent of the Senate was asked and obtained that the Library Committee amendments might be offered now, rescinding to that extent the old understanding of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library offered two or three amendments which were adopted. I have offered mine and argued it, and it is too late to say now that it is out of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course it was out of order while the Senate was proceeding under the other rule. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said he had no objection, but the Senator from North Carolina had two or three amendments of a similar kind which were ruled out, and now the Chair thinks it is not fair to him to consider this and not the other. It can be passed over until the reading of the bill is through.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us go on.

Mr. HOAR. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this was moved as an amendment to a pending amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which has been considered and amended, and the Chair has not put the question on that "to enable the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase works of art." The Senator from Ohio made one amendment to that, and then another, and then another. The Chair had not put the question on that amendment, and these are all amendments to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is perfectly aware of the condition. The Senator from North Carolina simply says that under the understanding these amendments have no preference over his.

Mr. HOAR. These are amendments to one of the committee's amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are amendments of a similar character to the committee's amendment. If the Senate agrees to it the Chair has no objection.

Mr. HOAR. It is absolutely in order according to my claim. The Committee on Appropriations moved the amendment contained in lines 2543 and 2544.

Mr. VANCE. Now I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn. The Chair now will say that the amendment was not in order. It is a totally distinct thing from what the Committee on Appropriations' provision was, but still the Chair will entertain it, as the objection is waived. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am authorized by the Committee on the Library to offer the following amendment, to follow the amendment just adopted on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts:

To enable the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase from the Marquis de Rochambeau the military papers, maps, and letter-books of the Count de Rochambeau, general in the French army in America, $20,000.

I wish to say a single word. This is perhaps the most precious and valuable unpublished collection of papers now in existence. It consists of military papers, letters, letter-books, and maps that belonged to the Count de Rochambeau, marshal of France, commander of the forces sent by his Government to aid the American struggle for independence. They consist of:

First. The original letter-books of the Count de Rochambeau, in nine volumes, covering the period from 1780 to 1784, and containing copies of multitudes of letters to and from that general, relating principally to the conduct of the war in America.

Second. About 1,400 original letters and documents, covering the years 1780 to 1794, and embracing letters and military papers by French and American officers, besides numerous letters of instruction, &c., from the French Government to the Count de Rochambeau, concerning the details of outfit, payment of troops, rank, and military operations generally. Among these interesting documents are one hundred and fifty-two letters from General Washington to the Count de Rochambeau, all upon military affairs or topics of public interest. Out of the mass of more than 1,400 manuscript documents it has been found that less than sixty have been printed.

Third. A manuscript "Mémoire pour l'Histoire de la Guerre en Amérique," with corrections in the hand of the Count de Rochambeau.

Fourth. A "Mémoire du Roi pour servir à l'instruction particulière à M. le Chevalier de Ternay, chef d'escadre des armées navales."

Fifth. A "Journal des opérations du corps Français."

Fifth. A series of sixty-nine military and topographical maps, all of the period covered by the operations of the French land and naval forces in America. Of these, thirty-eight are original charts or maps, carefully drawn to scale by engineers of the French army, and colored, with accompanying legends. This precious and unique series of original maps, delineating as it does the entire series of campaigns in which the French forces were engaged, from Rhode Island to Virginia, presents authentic contemporaneous memorials of battle-fields, camps, marches, and sieges, of the highest interest and value to the historian, of the war of the Revolution. They serve to fill many gaps in the cartography of that war, and, in the judgment of some of those who are well qualified to pronounce upon their worth, they are even more valuable than the original manuscripts themselves.

I could detain the Senate with an interesting account of these very valuable papers; but from the fact that I see my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is looking over this way, as much as to say that I have talked long enough, I shall submit the matter to the Senate.

Mr. VEST. May I ask how much the amount is?

Mr. VOORHEES. Twenty thousand dollars, and very cheap at that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 2571.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa whether some arrangement cannot be made about the item for Mrs. Conway, in lines 2561 to 2563.

Mr. ALLISON. We can go back to that afterward.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 2571:

To pay Jere Haralson the sum of $5,000 to compensate him for expenses incurred in his contest with Hon. C. M. Shelley from the fourth Congressional district of Alabama in the Forty-fifth Congress, and to be in full for all claim for salary and mileage and everything else that he would have been entitled to had he been admitted to his seat in that Congress.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to make some inquiry about that.

Mr. ALLISON. This is one of two amendments that have come from the House.

Mr. BECK. I understood we were to make only such amendments as would leave the matter relative to House affairs open, so that they could arrange it themselves. I do not know whether this is one of them or not.

Mr. ALLISON. This will be one of them. The Senator from Kentucky is on the committee with me.

Mr. BECK. It is perhaps well enough to put this in so that the House can attach any other amendment they like.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator objects to it I shall not press it. I offer it at the request of the House Committees on Elections and Appropriations. If anybody objects to it I shall withdraw it.

Mr. BECK. There is no objection to it. The question was only asked why we put in the amendment. It is simply to let the House do as they like in their own affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "House of Representatives," in line 2581, after the word "the," to strike out the word "widow" and insert the word "estate;" so as to read:

To the estate of James Gillette, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "thousand," in line 2588, to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

B. H. Lanier, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2621, to change the name "William T. Duff" to "William T. Dove."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 2625:

To pay John A. Travis, a disabled soldier, who was on the disabled soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, and discharged on the 3d of November, 1875, a sum equal to one month's pay, at $3.60 per day, being the same amount paid to other disabled soldiers discharged subsequent to that date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2632, to insert:

To pay J. J. G. Ball, a disabled soldier, who was on the disabled soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, and discharged on the 6th of December, 1875, a sum equal to one month's pay, at $3.60 per day, being the same amount paid to other disabled soldiers discharged subsequent to that date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2639, to insert:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay J. W. Pettit, a messenger appointed under resolution of the House of April 12, 1882, the pay of a messenger from the date of his appointment to the termination of the Forty-seventh Congress, and a sum sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2649, after the word "from," to strike out "December" and insert "March;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay George Q. Cannon salary, mileage, and allowance for newspapers and stationery for the Forty-seventh Congress, from March 4, 1881, up to and including April 19, 1882, the date of the decision of his contest for a seat in the House of Representatives, deducting any sums he may have already received on account from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House or the Clerk of the House, a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2659, after the word "promote," to insert "the efficiency of the;" and in line 2660, after the word "civil service," to strike out "reform;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to carry out the provisions of section 1753 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to promote the efficiency of the civil service and official accountability, $15,000.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to offer an amendment to that provision, which I think takes precedence of the amendment of the committee. There is an amendment to strike out and insert, and I propose to perfect the paragraph before the question is submitted on striking out. I ask to insert immediately after the word "accountability," in the provision as it came from the House, the following words—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing to strike out.

Mr. DAWES. The committee propose to strike out "reform" and insert in place of it "the efficiency of the." I ask for the reading of my amendment.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by Mr. DAWES is to insert after "accountability," in line 2660, the following:

And to introduce, as far as practicable, competitive examination as a means of ascertaining qualification for admission into and promotion in the civil service.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question in that connection. I see that one word has been stricken out.

Mr. DAWES. No; that is a question to be submitted hereafter; it is not before the Senate now.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I wanted to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—

Mr. DAWES. Is not the Senator willing to let the Senate pass on my amendment now, and then on the other?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear the amendment read and see the text.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After the word "accountability," in line 2660, it is proposed to insert:

And to introduce, as far as practicable, competitive examination as a means of ascertaining qualification for admission into and promotion in the civil service.

So as to read:

To enable the President to carry out the provisions of section 1753 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to promote the efficiency of the civil service and official accountability, and to introduce, as far as practicable, competitive examination as a means of ascertaining qualification for admission into and promotion in the civil service, $15,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I dislike to make a point of order upon my associate on the committee, but we cannot go into that question now. Of course if this can be disposed of without debate, I have no objection to any suggestion which may be made; but if it is proposed to have a debate here on what is called "civil-service reform," I think we have not time for that.

Mr. DAWES. This does not introduce any new legislation. It only gives the President $15,000 to do what the law now authorizes him to do.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment so as to make it read: "from competitive examination and proper location."

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to that. I do not want any improper location.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not wish to have it understood that competitive examinations are themselves the only test of admission into the service.

Mr. DAWES. I am perfectly willing to have it understood that the location is a test of qualification.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest the words "and proper distribution" instead.

Mr. DAWES. That is right. I accept that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That will equalize it. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether there is a commission now existing to whom this matter can be deputed?

Mr. DAWES. There is a commission under appointment from the President which has not been able to do anything for some time for want of an appropriation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I see that the word "reform" is stricken out by the Committee on Appropriations. That committee of this body has stricken out the word "reform," and I want to ask my friend if there is any danger of this money finally getting into the hands of the Congressional committee, as all the "reform" lies there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee to strike out the word "reform" and insert "the efficiency of the;" so as to read "to promote the efficiency of the civil service."

Mr. VAN WYCK. I should like the chairman to explain what necessity there is to strike out the word "reform," because that seems to be the only point in it, unless it was to go, as I was suggesting to my friend from Massachusetts, where there was danger of its going.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Nebraska will take one of these bills he will observe that there is a little change of phraseology made by the Committee on Appropriations. Instead of using the words "to promote civil-service reform" we have stricken out "reform" and inserted words so as to make it read, "to promote the efficiency of the civil service," which I believe is substantially the language of the statute authorizing the appointment of the commission. I can assure the Senator that there is no disposition on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to interfere with him in his work of reform in any way. The statute provides, section 1753:

The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations for the admission of persons into the civil service of the United States as may best promote the efficiency thereof.

We merely change the phraseology of this bill in order to comply more nearly with the statute. I trust that will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2661, to strike out:

To pay D. B. Johnson, of Minnesota, for one month's service as a clerk in the Pension Office, the sum of $118.

Mr. ALLISON. That was struck out by the committee because they had no information on the subject. I understand now from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] that this person performed the service and there is no way of paying him. If that is true, the paragraph should be retained in the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Commissioner of Pensions conveyed that information to one of my colleagues in the House. He said it was necessary for him to have legislation, the money which was appropriated having been covered into the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why was it covered into the Treasury? Why was he not paid the money when he was entitled to it?

Mr. McMILLAN. He did not apply for it. Mr. Johnson resigned shortly after being appointed and did not make application for the money before the appropriation lapsed. He has now applied for it.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Commissioner of Pensions recommends this payment?

Mr. McMILLAN. The Commissioner of Pensions addressed a letter to one of my colleagues in the House in which he said this service had been performed and Mr. Johnson was entitled to the pay. He did not know why he had not got it, but it would be necessary now to have Congressional action in order to obtain it. Mr. Johnson is a very respectable citizen of our State. That is all I know.

Mr. ALLISON. All right.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out the paragraph.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to insert as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. That the Assistant Secretaries authorized to be appointed in the War and Navy Departments shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the respective Secretaries or may be required by law; and if such Assistant Secretaries shall be first appointed during the recess of the Senate their salaries may be paid them until the end of the next session of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That section 2099 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that no moneys appropriated for the purposes of education among the Indian tribes shall be expended elsewhere than in Indian country, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill is concluded.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON. I have one or two amendments from the Committee on Appropriations which I ask to have put in the bill. After line 2646 I move to insert the following; it comes from the House of Representatives:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the execution of the resolutions of the House of March 6, 1882, and June 14, 1882, relating to the employment of an assistant to the Journal clerk of the House of Representatives, to pay Frank Galt for services rendered from the 5th of December, 1881, to the 13th of June, 1882, at a per diem of $6, and in the execution of the resolution of the 16th of February, 1882, relating to the employment of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims, to pay James R. Davies for services rendered from the 6th day of January, 1882, to the 15th day of February, 1882, and in the execution of the resolution of the 20th day of June, 1882, relating to the employment of a clerk to the Committee on Mines and Mining, to pay Arthur Van Voorhis for services rendered from the 10th day of January, 1882, to the 19th day of June, 1882, each at the same rate of compensation as is paid to session clerks, the sum of $2,364; and in the execution of the resolution of the 31st day of July, 1882, relating to the payment of Robert Richardson for services as messenger in the Clerk's office, to pay Robert Richardson the difference between the pay of a laborer received by him and that of messenger from the 23d day of January, 1876, to the 13th day of October, 1877, $826.29.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 2667 I move to add:

New court-house building, District of Columbia: For furniture, carpets, shelving, and file-cases for the new portion of the court-house building in the District of Columbia, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I now offer an amendment, in regard to which I will say that I have not had time to consult the committee, and I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to offer it. After line 2255 I move to insert:

To enable the Postmaster-General to carry into effect the provisions of the act approved August 2, 1882, entitled "An act to amend sections 3 and 4 of the act of February 21, 1879, to fix the pay of letter-carriers, and for other purposes," $200,000, in addition to the amount appropriated for the payment of letter-carriers and the incidental expenses of the free-delivery system by "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," approved May 4, 1882.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like a little explanation of that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I have here a copy of the correspondence of the Post-Office Department. A bill passed the Senate a day or two ago reorganizing the letter-carrier system of the United States. I ask that those letters may be put into the RECORD.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear them read. They are not very long.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1882.

SIR: In compliance with your request as to the additional amount that will be required to pay the letter-carriers during the next fiscal year, under bill H. R. No. 4443, I submit the following statement: eight hundred and eleven carriers, now receiving $800 per annum, would be promoted to $1,000, making an increase of $162,200; three hundred and twenty-five auxiliary carriers, now receiving $400 per annum, would be promoted to $500, making an increase of $130,000; eighty-four auxiliaries, now receiving $400 per annum, would be promoted to $550, making an increase of $57,800; total, $350,000.

This estimate is based upon the full number of $800 and $400 men, for the reason that nearly all of them were in service at the beginning of this fiscal year, and consequently will have been in one year on the 1st of July next.

In the estimate of $3,000,000 for this service during the next fiscal year provision was made for the promotion of two hundred and forty auxiliaries to $800, and the appointment of two hundred and forty auxiliaries in their places at $400 each, involving an expenditure of $192,000; but as the bill herein referred to promotes all the auxiliaries to $800 or $850 per annum, the appointment of two hundred and forty auxiliaries at $600 would cost but $144,000, making a difference of $48,000, which should be deducted from the $330,000, reducing the amount to $282,000.

This calculation is based on the best data at hand, but insufficient for a close estimate. As the inspectors on this service are now engaged in ascertaining the number of carriers that should be promoted, and the number of additional carriers that will be required, I advise that the sum of $300,000 be appropriated to carry the bill into effect should it become a law.

In order to avoid any claim hereafter by the carriers for back pay, I suggest that the bill fix the date when it should take effect should it become a law. Otherwise the carriers will no doubt claim the increase from the date of the approval of the bill, (as they did under the act of February 21, 1879,) rendering necessary an additional appropriation to cover the time between the date of the approval of the bill and July 1, 1882, when it is presumed it is intended the act shall take effect.

Very respectfully, &c.,

FRANK HATTON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. H. H. BINGHAM,
House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., July 29, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith copy of a letter of March last to Hon. H. H. BINGHAM, chairman of the Post-Office Committee of the House of Representatives, showing the additional amount that will be required to carry into effect bill H. R. 4443, readjusting and increasing the pay of letter-carriers in the several free-delivery cities.

The additional amount that will be required to carry out this bill should it become a law will be $300,000.

Very respectfully,

FRANK HATTON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations United States Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know when the bill referred to was passed. The amendment is subject to a point of order, and unless it is explained, I shall make it.

Mr. BECK. Here it is. The RECORD of the 29th day of July, Saturday last, page 32, contains the report of it. The bill was brought up by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] on a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. He said he was requested by several Senators to ask for the passage of the bill at that time, and by unanimous consent it was taken up and passed. I confess I was a good deal surprised when I ascertained that it would cost $300,000. It had an innocent look and on reading it did not look like a measure that amounted to anything particularly; but that is what they say to us. When we received those letters this morning, I thought the thing was impossible, but after reading the law as passed I find that it has got to be done.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that the committee only propose $200,000. From the reading of the letters it is quite evident there will be a deficiency.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why not appropriate the $300,000 at once?

Mr. ALLISON. I think $200,000 is enough to begin with.

Mr. FERRY. I suppose the bill having become a law with the approval of the President, the pay of these letter-carriers ought to be provided for. The Department says $200,000 will be sufficient at present. I take no exception to that, but certainly a suitable amount should be appropriated in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. BECK. The First Assistant Postmaster-General thinks it will only take two hundred and eighty-odd thousand dollars. I would endeavor to keep it down as low as I could and see how it may be adjusted, for he is adjusting it now, guessing at part of it. As it is a very recent thing, which only occurred the other day, and as a part of the year has run, a month at least, we thought $200,000 would be about the proper amount to appropriate.

Mr. FERRY. The bill received the consideration of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House and passed that body some time ago. It came to the Senate and was before the Senate committee for some time. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate considered it and reported it. On the day I reported it I asked the Senate to consider it, as stated by the Senator from Kentucky, and the Senate did so, and after debate passed it, so that it was understood by the Senate. There was nothing slipped in without the knowledge of the Senate.

Mr. BECK. The case was fairly stated by the Senator from Michigan, except that there was very little idea given as to the cost of the change. I judge from reading over the debate that most Senators supposed $25,000 or $30,000 would cover it all. Every fact was stated in the debate, I think.

Mr. FERRY. I think I stated clearly in the debate that the only change was an increase of the pay of auxiliaries from $400 to $600, and that it did not change the pay of the first and second classes; that it did not touch the third class in cities under 75,000 inhabitants; that in the third class, cities with a population of 75,000 and over, it paid them $800 and $1,000 a year, making two classes. The point of the bill was to provide for the promotion of the letter-carriers on a year's service, which was a good principle.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. At the end of line 174 I move to add:

For the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury of a suitable site for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States courts, internal-revenue and post-office at Leavenworth, Kansas, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the entire cost of building and site not to exceed $100,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Was a bill passed to that effect?

Mr. ALLISON. It passed the Senate, I believe, this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senate to make a verbal correction in line 80. The clause there, inserted by the committee and agreed to by the Senate, reads:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, &c.

And it appropriates $50,000. The provision in the bill for the construction of a public building at Marquette was that it might cost $100,000, and this language would confine it to $50,000. I ask that the amendment be changed so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for, and cause to be commenced thereon, the erection of a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that.

Mr. CONGER. That is to make it correspond with all the other amendments of the same kind.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the correction will be made. The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 1010, I move to insert:

For additional compensation to the master armorer of the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts, while performing the duties of master machinist at said armory, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I have an amendment here that I am told by my colleagues on the committee they agree to, although it was not agreed to in committee. After line 463, I move to insert:

For the construction of a light-house at or near Secconnet Point, Rhode Island, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer now the final amendment which I shall propose. It is an amendment in the nature of legislation, and therefore, of course, it must be put in by unanimous consent. I move the amendment at the request of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It relates to the new public-school buildings in this District. Under the law they are required to commence work on these public-school buildings on the 1st of September. It is impossible for them to get ready for work by that time. The amendment is a mere extension of the time to the 1st of October, in order to make the money available. I move to add, as section 4, the following:

SEC. 4. That the limitation of time for contracting for new school buildings, as provided by "an act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1882, be, and the same is hereby, extended to October 1, 1882.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I yield the floor to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I do not know that the Senator from Iowa has it to yield. He has been standing up on it of course, but he was not recognized by the Chair more than I was.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to say in all kindness to the Senator from North Carolina that the Committee on Appropriations have no further amendments to submit to the bill.

Mr. VANCE. I hope it is in order, if the Senator from Iowa is through, for somebody else to offer an amendment. If so, with permission, I will proceed to offer one. After line 2520, I move to add:

To enable the Acting Secretary of the Senate to pay the employés of the Senate (including the Capitol police) receiving an annual compensation, who were employed on the 4th day of March, 1881, or on the 29th day of October, 1881, a sum equal to one month's pay, at the rate per annum they were receiving at the dates herein specified; and that a sum equal to one month's pay shall be allowed and paid to the session employés of the Senate who shall be so employed at the adjournment of the present session.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order on that amendment. There is no law for it. In addition to that it does not purport to come from any committee of this body.

Mr. VANCE. I was expecting that as a matter of course. The Senator having just passed through, by the indulgence of the Senate, an amendment which was rankly out of order, I expected him of course to get up and raise a point of order upon others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the facts as stated by the Senator from Iowa, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Chair to sustain the point of order against this amendment of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. VANCE. I desire to make a statement which I did not make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The fact that the amendment was reported by that committee was not stated to the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly, that is the fact.

Mr. VANCE. It was reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and it is so stated on the printed amendment sent to the desk.

Mr. BUTLER. The rule is entirely complied with.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I make no point of order upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. After the word "dollars," in line 50, I move to add:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for, and cause the commencement of the construction thereon of a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the use of the post-office, United States courts, and other Government offices in the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, $50,000.

Mr. BECK. Has there been any law passed authorizing that to be done?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir; the bill has passed both Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Immediately after the amendment just agreed to I move to add:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase a site for, and cause the commencement of the construction thereon of a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the use of the post-office and other Government offices in the city of Scranton, Pennsylvania, $37,500.

Mr. BECK. I rise only to ask the same question, because we have made appropriations as far as we knew for all buildings, bills in relation to which had passed both Houses and become laws.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Both of these bills passed the House first and then came to the Senate, but they did not contain any appropriation. The Senate bill which was passed a few days since did contain an appropriation.

Mr. BECK. Wherever bills have been passed for buildings there is no objection to appropriating for them; but there are so many cases where bills have not passed that are sought to be put in that I felt it to be my duty to make the inquiry.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The bill was passed, or I should not have offered the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. Before the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] left for his home, he was instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to offer what I hold in my hand as an amendment to this bill, and upon his going away, because of my greater familiarity with the subject perhaps, he requested me to present the amendment in his place and stead, as with the authority of the committee delegated to him. At the end of line 2355 I move to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to John J. Key the sum of $10,000, and to W. G. M. Davis the sum of $10,000, for their services, respectively, as attorneys at law, employed by the United States Attorney-General to aid in the case of John Young, assignee of Alexander Collier, against the United States, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which said sum shall be the balance in full of the compensation of the said John J. Key and W. G. M. Davis, respectively, for their services in said cause under said employment; and that said amount shall be charged to the fund now in the Treasury of the United States known as proceeds of captured and abandoned property, under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prosecution of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," approved March 12, 1883, (Statutes at Large, volume 12, page 1820.)

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to offer an amendment which requires the unanimous consent of the Senate, and I should like to have read a letter signed by all the justices of the Territory of Utah, which shows the necessity for it. I move to insert, after line 756:

The governor of the Territory of Utah is hereby authorized to appoint officers in the said Territory to fill vacancies which may be caused by a failure to elect on the first Monday in August, 1882, in consequence of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, to hold their offices until their successors are elected and are qualified under the provisions of said act.

Now I ask that the letter to which I referred be read.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

The undersigned judges of the supreme court of the Territory of Utah, respectfully represent:

That the Edmunds bill, so called, vacates all registration and election officers in Utah; that by reason of this no registration of voters has been made in this Territory this year, which the local law requires to be done in May and revised the first week in June, and none but registered voters can vote; that by reason of such failure of registration and lack of election officers the election fixed for the first Monday in August, 1882, cannot be held; that at such election there would have been chosen successors to all the present county officers, and also to the Territorial auditor and treasurer, as directed by Territorial statute; that those successors cannot now be chosen for the reasons given; that this failure to elect is liable to cause general disturbance and trouble, especially in view of the well-known fact that many of the present incumbents are understood to be polygamists, and so disqualified under the law above referred to to hold office. We therefore ask that Congress shall take such measures as will provide for legal successors to all the present incumbents of office whose successors would have been chosen at the August election, and thereby secure the continuance of good order, and the regular and undisputed support of organized government, which otherwise would be seriously jeopardized.

We have delayed this representation as long as possible, hoping for the advent of the election commissioners, but they have not yet come.

Dated July 20, 1882.

JOHN A. HUNTER, Chief Justice,
PHILIP H. EMERSON, Associate Justice,
STEPHEN P. TWISS, Associate Justice,
Supreme Court of Utah.

Mr. HOAR. This amendment was prepared by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM,] and myself, and we are authorized by the Judiciary Committee unanimously to recommend it. The point is a very simple one. There was to be an election for local officers, registers of deeds, auditors, and county officers, on the first Monday in August. That election can only be made by duly registered voters, and the duly registered voters can only be registered at a registration made in May, but the Edmunds bill vacated from the time of its passage the offices of all the election officers in Utah. Consequently there was no registration; so that after the first Monday in August there will be none of the local officers in existence until an election is held, under the provision of the Edmunds bill, and the Territorial Legislature, elected under the provision of the Edmunds bill, provides for the filling of these offices by a new election. The amendment provides that the governor may appoint officers for the interregnum simply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. VOORHEES in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I have an amendment, which it was understood in the Committee on Appropriations would be agreed to by that committee. The chairman was requested by the committee to send to the Secretary of State to ascertain about the amount. He has not received word from the Department as yet, but he was authorized to put the amendment on the bill, and I now offer it. After line 2661 I move to insert:

For defraying the expenses of transporting the remains of ministers and consuls of the United States to their homes for interment, where such ministers or consuls have died or may die abroad while in the discharge of their duties, $10,000; Provided also, That where the remains of any such persons have been brought home by their friends within two years last past such expenses shall be paid to the persons who have paid such expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. After line 2508 I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to the legal representatives of Hon. George S. Houston, late a Senator from the State of Alabama, $5,860.66, the amount of compensation of a Senator from January 1, 1880, to March 4, 1881.

Senator Houston came to the Senate after the 4th of March, 1879, and died on the 31st of December of the same year, which according to the computation of Mr. Nixon entitles his estate, on the same principle that has been applied in the case of the late General Burnside, to $5,860.66. The cases are identical, and therefore I ask the Senate to adopt the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. After line 495 I move to insert:

For the erection of a light-house at or near Point Patterson, on the northern shore of Lake Michigan, in the State of Michigan, $15,000.

This was recommended by the Light-House Board, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and reported by that committee, and it passed the Senate May 4.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment if I can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. That it is not estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Michigan to state that it had been estimated for and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FERRY. And recommended by that committee and reported by them, and has passed the Senate, and has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I know; but it is not estimated for in the regular Book of Estimates. Of course the Senator has a letter, as a great many people have, from the Light-House Board, recommending this light-house, and it is probably a good place for a light-house; but we have put light-houses enough into this bill, it seems to me, and the State of Michigan has fared very well in that regard.

Mr. FERRY. As far as the point of order is concerned, there cannot be any point of order, because this has been recommended by the Committee on Commerce, and has been reported from the Treasury Department, and has passed the Senate. It was reported from the Committee on Commerce. It is an important place on the north shore of Lake Michigan. There is a distance of one hundred miles there where there is no light-house, and the importance of it has not been questioned by the Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan a question in regard to this proposed light-house. Was a bill for the establishment of a light-house there reported and passed by the Senate?

Mr. FERRY. It was, on May 4.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has gone to the House?

Mr. FERRY. It has gone to the House. The RECORD here shows also a letter recommending it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to know if that was the only action the Committee on Commerce took upon the bill.

Mr. FERRY. The committee reported the bill, and it passed the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I raise the point of order upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has already raised the point of order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point of order taken by the Senator from Iowa is correct. The fact that the bill was reported favorably from a committee of the Senate, and that the Senate passed the bill and sent it to the House, does not entitle it to go upon an appropriation bill, and does not relieve it from the point of order.

Mr. FERRY. Under what rule does the Senator make his point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order, but will be very glad to submit the question to the Senate, if the Senator from Michigan desires.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to read the rule, if the Chair will bear with me. I am not tenacious about antagonizing the ruling of the Chair, but let me read the rule. With great deference to the Chair, I think he is laboring under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not desire to rule in haste on the question, but rather desired to facilitate the disposition of the matter. He felt constrained to rule on the point of order, but announced his willingness to submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. The Chair has ruled, and there is nothing in order but an appeal from his decision.

Mr. FERRY. I will read the rule. Rule 27 provides that—

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation—

And that is this case—

unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

That is not this case—

or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

The bill was passed by the Senate, but I do not rest it upon that.

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

After the passage of the bill by the Senate I say it is clearly in order to put it on this bill by way of amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Clearly not. If the Committee on Commerce had instructed the amendment to be offered and it had been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, it would have been clearly in order. It is certainly not in order as it now stands.

Mr. FERRY. Then, if the Senator makes that point, I rest it upon this language:

Act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

This has been passed by the Senate after having been reported by the Committee on Commerce. I offered the amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations some days since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan desire to have the question submitted to the Senate?

Mr. FERRY. I will submit to the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. FERRY. Then I have another amendment. After line 2055, or immediately after what has already been inserted at that point by the Senate, I move to add:

That the appropriation made in section 1 of the act approved May 4, 1882, "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," for the manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, is hereby made available, so far as necessary, for the purchase of letter-sheet envelopes on which postage-stamps of the denominations now in use on ordinary envelopes shall be placed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the amendment come from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

Mr. FERRY. It was agreed to by the committee and recommended by the committee. It simply leaves the discretion to the Postmaster-General and only makes the fund available.

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order upon the amendment. It changes the law by making certain appropriation applicable to a purpose that without this amendment it could not be applied to. That is a thing that a committee has no jurisdiction over. It cannot change the law.

Mr. FERRY. It does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. HALE. I do not make the point of an increase of appropriation, but the amendment provides a new end and purpose for the appropriation not provided by present law. The wording of the amendment shows it.

Mr. FERRY. The amendment shows that it is simply in the interest of the Post-Office Department and the service of the Government.

Mr. HALE. That is not the question.

Mr. FERRY. It is a sheet envelope, leaving it to the discretion of the Postmaster-General to use it or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will overrule the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HALE. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let the question be again stated.

Mr. HALE. It is to get a new patent into the use of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. VEST. Let me say a word on this subject. The Senator from Maine does not understand it at all. Permit me to say to him that in 1879 a clause was inserted in the sundry civil bill which simply authorized the Postmaster-General to introduce a letter envelope, provided that he paid nothing for royalty on the patent. So far from the amendment providing for any patent, the law expressly excludes it. The only thing done by the amendment is to make the appropriations already made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, available for this purpose by the Postmaster-General if he sees proper to do so.

Mr. HALE. Is it not a new purpose?

Mr. VEST. It is not at all a new purpose. It is an existing law.

Mr. HALE. But does not the Senator know, will he not admit here, that the sole, underlying purpose of the amendment is that it may apply to a certain new patent which has been shown about here to Senators for a new form of folding, a device of letter envelopes?

Mr. VEST. There are twenty of those; there are fifty of them.

Mr. HALE. But who has seen more than one?

Mr. VEST. I have seen a dozen of them.

Mr. HALE. I have seen but one.

Mr. VEST. I have seen fifty of them.

Mr. HALE. I do not want this bill lumbered up by anything of that kind. Anybody who chooses to vote for the amendment of course can vote for it, but I want the yeas and nays on agreeing to it so that we can have the record. It will be heard from afterward, I tell the Senate.

Mr. VEST. The objection as to lumbering the bill comes very strangely from the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FERRY. What we ask is that the Postmaster-General may be given the discretion to use a different form of envelope in the line of saving to the Government. As was well stated by the Senator from Missouri, the Postmaster-General is prohibited from paying any royalty. The amendment does not interfere with that. There is no patent about it; it is simply allowing him to use his discretion if need be, if it can be done. If the Senator from Maine desires to restrict the Postmaster-General to a certain form, then perhaps the point may be good, but I would give the utmost latitude to the Postmaster-General and invite new inventions, for that is the genius of the institutions of the country. Whenever such an invention appears to be to the interest of the Government, it is the duty of Congress to accept it and give the heads of our Departments a discretion to use it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have seen this letter-sheet to which the Senator from Maine refers, and I should like very much to have it adopted by the Postmaster-General. I see no earthly reason why it should not be adopted, unless it may conflict with some envelope people who have a contract with the Post-Office Department. That is the only ground upon earth I can see. It certainly would be a matter of very great convenience to the general public, and I see no reason why this letter-sheet should not be adopted. On the contrary, I see every reason why, under the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, it ought to be adopted for the benefit and convenience of the public.

The Postmaster-General, as I understand, has recommended this device. I have seen the letter-sheet, and I am very frank to say that I should like very much to use it; indeed, I do use it, and I do not see why the public should not be allowed to have the same privilege. It may conflict with some envelope people who are making a contract with the Post-Office Department, and I have no doubt it would. For my part, I should like to give my constituents the benefit of using it. It costs the Government nothing.

Mr. HALE. Did the Chair overrule the point of order I made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He did. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment, and the roll will be called.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 34, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—34.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to suggest an amendment to the amendment which has just been adopted, and I think the Senator from Michigan will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Tennessee. Does he yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Missouri deems it material for his suggestion to come in just at this moment, I will yield to him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa, who has the bill in charge, to lines 430 to 447, inclusive, which the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out. That amendment was not acted upon, but was passed over, in order that I might obtain some information on the subject. I now offer as a substitute for the lines proposed to be stricken out the following:

That the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board be, and hereby is, extended over the Tennessee River, and for the establishment of such lights, day-beacons, and buoys as may be necessary for the use of vessels navigating that river; and the Light-House Board is hereby authorized to lease the necessary ground for all such lights as are established to point out changeable channels, and which in consequence cannot be made permanent. For the Tennessee River, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

I desire to also state to the Senator from Iowa that the bill as it came from the House contains an appropriation of $15,000 for this river. The estimates of the Light-House Board were $25,000. I am informed by Rear-Admiral Rodgers, the Superintendent of the Light-House Board, that $25,000 is absolutely necessary. I ask to have read a report from the Superintendent of the Light-House Board in respect to that matter.

Mr. CONGER. I inquire how late the information which the Senator says he has received came to him?

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot hear a word the Senator says.

Mr. CONGER. I was inquiring how late the information the Senator refers to from Admiral Rodgers came to him?

Mr. HARRIS. It was about ten and a half o'clock yesterday morning; but the estimates were made in due time and through the regular channel, regularly and properly.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to inquire through what medium that information came?

Mr. HARRIS. Through the report of Admiral Rodgers, as I understand from him. I have not the report before me, but he simply gave me the information yesterday which was contained in his regular report, according to his own statement. But let the paper be read which I send to the desk.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, March 22, 1882.

SIR: Respectfully referring to Department letter of March 15, transmitting for the views of the Light-House Board thereon bill H. R. 4934, providing for the protection of the navigation of the Ohio, the Great Kanawha, and the Tennessee Rivers by increasing the number of lights on the Ohio River and extending the system of beacon-lights to the Great Kanawha and Tennessee Rivers, the Light-House Board has the honor to state that it has carefully considered this matter, and has reached the conclusion that the interests of commerce and navigation would be greatly benefited by the passage of this bill, sections 2 and 3, relating to the Kanawha and Tennessee Rivers, being first amended by adding thereto a proviso as follows: "Provided, That the Light-House Board is hereby authorized to lease the necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are used to point out changeable channels, and which in consequence cannot be made permanent."

The bill (H. R. 4934) is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

JOHN RODGERS,

Rear-Admiral, United States Navy, Chairman.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I think we had better wait until next winter at least before we enlarge the business of lighting these rivers, although I admit that the Tennessee is perhaps the largest river now unlighted of the Western rivers. I am afraid that the Great Kanawha will come in very soon, and the Little Kanawha, and then the Big Sandy and the Little Sandy, and some of the Florida rivers, and so on. I am afraid we cannot stop if we give this. That is my objection to the whole matter.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there are hundreds of miles of navigation that it is proposed to provide for by this amendment. How important it may or may not be to have beacon-lights on the Tennessee River, I do not profess to know. My individual opinions would be utterly worthless. In the opinion of the Light-House Board, whose duty it is to carefully investigate these matters and report the necessities of navigable waters, it is important and it ought not to be delayed. For that reason, and that reason only, I offer this amendment, and believing, as I do, that it is absolutely necessary to the safety of navigation, I hope the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. CALL. If it is in order I should like to move an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. This is an amendment to an amendment, and therefore not amendable.

Mr. JONAS. I wish to offer an amendment to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair is correctly advised, it would not be in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Not until my amendment has been acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. BECK. I suppose the Tennessee, as the chairman of the committee says, is one of the most important rivers not yet put under the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board. The Red River in Louisiana is also an important one, and we established a light at the mouth of that river last year. I know the Saint Croix is important, because I have been up that river several times, and the Chippewa has a great many rafts floating down it.

There is one difficulty about these amendments, and the Senate may as well understand it, that while there are two or three important rivers, the Great Kanawha, the Big Sandy, the Kentucky, and others, if you begin now picking out first one river and then another, until you have had a clear and distinct statement from the Light-House Board of what rivers are necessary to be lighted, there will be no end to the amendments that will be inserted.

I do not like to say anything against the recommendation of Admiral Rodgers. He may have seen the Tennessee River or he may not. I dare not quite, perhaps, tell what the Light-House Board said to the Appropriations Committee, but I am perfectly satisfied from the information we had that the Light-House Board, who know most about it, do not desire this jurisdiction extended as the House extended it until they have time to make a thorough investigation.

They came before us—not Admiral Rodgers, but others of the board who know, perhaps, quite as much as he does—and so informed us. If you are going to light these rivers, do it intelligently, make a full, thorough investigation of all these rivers to see what ought to be added to the present jurisdiction, and not take up the subject by piecemeal, first, the Tennessee, then the Red River, then the Big Kanawha, then the Chippewa, then the Saint Croix, and there will be forty other rivers. Each Senator will feel obliged to propose to insert one. That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to say to the Senator from Kentucky and to the Senate that you have just as much information in relation to the necessities of the Tennessee River to-day in this respect as you will have five years hence, and I beg that the amendment proposing to furnish lights to navigable waters of the Tennessee shall not be made to depend upon the ten thousand other streams that the Senator from Kentucky apprehends will be pushed forward for light-houses or beacon-lights. I think it is quite sufficient to look at the merits of this proposition, and we must deal with the merits of others as they are presented. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I notice in the recommendation read from the desk of Admiral Rodgers that he names the Kanawha in connection with the Tennessee River. When the Tennessee River is added I shall expect the Kanawha to go with it as recommended from the same source.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If this amendment is adopted I shall insist upon retaining the two rivers in Wisconsin mentioned in this portion of the bill, the Chippewa and the Saint Croix. The House of Representatives thought that lights ought to be provided for those rivers.

I would inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether he addressed a communication to Admiral Rodgers asking for information or asking for his opinion in regard to the advisability of establishing lights on these rivers?

Mr. HARRIS. I did not, and for the reason—

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. One moment. Did he address a communication asking whether lights ought to be established on the Tennessee River, or did he include in his inquiry all the rivers mentioned in this portion of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. I addressed no communication, for the reason that on the day before yesterday evening, when this point was reached in the bill, I promised the Senator from Iowa that I would endeavor to inform myself very much better than I was then informed as to the necessity of these beacon-lights on the Tennessee River. I carried a copy of the bill; I showed every line in that clause, and I asked Admiral Rodgers and others in the office what was necessary and proper to be done in respect to that clause, leaving out no river, but saying that I was more interested in the Tennessee than in any other. I was informed that in the opinion of that board it was important and necessary that beacon-lights be established on the Tennessee and the Great Kanawha. And if the Senator desires me to state the balance of what I was informed, it was that in the opinion of that board it was hardly necessary to establish the beacon-lights upon the streams mentioned by him.

Mr. CONGER. I was not aware that there was any Admiral Rodgers connected with the Light-House Board now, since the death of Admiral Rodgers some months ago, who was chairman of the Light-House Board. That is the reason I made the inquiry I did. I am not aware now that there is. There may be some Admiral Rodgers; but I understand Admiral Wyman was appointed chairman of the Light-House Board.

Mr. HARRIS. I am inclined to think the Senator is right. It was Rear-Admiral Wyman instead of Rodgers with whom I had the interview, but I had the interview with the chief of the board, and was introduced to him as rear-admiral, and finding Rear-Admiral Rodgers's name to the paper I read from, I perhaps miscalled the name.

Mr. CONGER. For a long time there has been a question in regard to John Rodgers and his family, and I think we had better not be misled about it here in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONAS. I desire to ask whether the amendment of the committee has been adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. It has not. My amendment is to that amendment.

Mr. JONAS. The committee amendment is to strike out.

Mr. HARRIS. So it is.

Mr. JONAS. At the proper time, after the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee has been acted on, I desire to offer an amendment providing that the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board shall be extended over the Red River in Louisiana, and that the appropriation contained in the bill as it comes from the House shall be maintained. That is quite as important a stream as the Tennessee; it floats as large a commerce, it is as long, runs through as many States, and is of as much importance to the commerce of the country as the Tennessee River, or any of the rivers mentioned in this bill.

Mr. BECK. After a number of these amendments have been voted in, as of course they will be, I hope the chairman of the committee will move to insert a clause that all the streams—I will not call them rivers, but all the streams—provided for in the river and harbor bill shall be thoroughly lighted by the Light-House Board and that Admiral Rodgers shall give it his personal attention. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOGAN. Lit up on both sides with the electric light. [Laughter.] That will be about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the amendment of the committee be acted on in some way before we pass from it. Mine was an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for a vote on the amendment of the committee, if it has not been acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Acting Secretary advises the Chair that the amendment of the committee, which was an amendment to strike out, has been agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. So I supposed.

Mr. WINDOM. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 31, page 2:

The salary of secretary of legation and consul-general at Madrid, in lieu of that heretofore appropriated for secretary of legation, $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Minnesota is so hostile to legislation on appropriation bills that I trust he will not press that amendment. It is changing existing law. There is no consul-general at Madrid.

Mr. WINDOM. I was not aware until now that the Senator was so much offended by my opposing general legislation on an appropriation bill the other day, but I now see that it rankles still. I do not think this changes any existing law; it is not general legislation. The President is authorized to appoint a secretary of legation, can do it without any law, and this simply pays the compensation of that officer; and I would say that the State Department desires to have this amendment made. It is also recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLISON. It simply increases this officer's compensation $1,200.

Mr. WINDOM. It appoints a new officer. At present there is no consul-general. There is a secretary of legation and there are a very large number of consular officers, some fifty-eight, under his jurisdiction. The State Department believes, and so urges upon our committee, that it will be altogether a very great benefit to the service to have this officer appointed.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt this is a very meritorious case, and the Secretary of State has recommended very strongly that an appropriation be made for the pay of the consul-general at Siam. Heretofore there has been a consul there. Last spring the then President of the United States appointed the consul to be consul-general. Within a few weeks the President has appointed, and the Senate has confirmed, a gentleman to be consul-general and minister resident. Perhaps I have got the titles mixed up.

Mr. WINDOM. It is not the same office.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say simply that there have been two promotions here without increase of pay. If we are going into the question of the pay of the consular or diplomatic service, I want the thing open because the Secretary of State has recommended a great number of persons for increase of pay. He is very urgent also in the case of the consul at Manila. If the Senate shall take up this subject on account of anything which the Senator from Minnesota may offer, I shall insist that it take up all these items that have been recommended by the Secretary of State, and decide them all upon their merits; and if they are not to be decided upon their merits, then I raise whatever point of order may lie.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to taking up any meritorious case that may be presented. As I said this is recommended by the State Department, and has been examined by the Committee on Foreign Relations and recommended by that too. I believe it to be important. I will not discuss it, but ask the Senate to vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. ALLISON. Is it in order to increase the compensation of an officer at Madrid, to provide a new salary and a new office? Is that in order on this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the question of order raised?

Mr. ALLISON. I raised the question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish the Senator to state his point of order distinctly.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the creation of a new office to begin with; it increases the appropriation, and of course to that extent is legislation on the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. The President has to-day the power to appoint a consul-general. He has the power to appoint, as I understand, any foreign representative. It does not therefore alter the law by granting that power, but it does simply pay the officer whom he has the power to appoint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from Minnesota if this amendment has been offered in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WINDOM. Substantially the same amendment. If the point of order is raised on that ground I will renew the amendment in the form that it was offered before; but it is substantially the same amendment. If that point of order is raised I will substitute the other, which is equally good, though a little different in form.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order.

Mr. WINDOM. That it has not been referred?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; I make that point.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I withdraw the amendment and offer the one that was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It accomplishes precisely the same end, but the verbiage of the other is a little better.

For salary of consul-general at Madrid, (in addition to that of secretary of legation when acting as such,) $1,200.

That amendment has been referred by the Committee on Foreign Relations to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds the amendment to be in order.

Mr. BECK. I desire only to say that eight or ten, or perhaps more of this class of cases were before us, many of them represented as very urgent, and I believe most of them recommended by the Secretary of State. When the consular and diplomatic bill was before us I happened to be on the sub-committee upon that bill, and we held it back I think for six weeks in order to give the State Department an opportunity, as the Secretary had not been there a very long time, to reorganize his matters as well as he could, and we did everything as far as we could to meet his views. When all these matters were before us and were urgently presented we felt that now on the sundry civil bill, after having waited that long, and having the organization made as nearly perfect as we could at the time, the Secretary of State ought to wait until December.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas that if this is put in the bill we shall have to go into a great many other cases; I think it is a good time to stop now.

Mr. WINDOM. This is offered in harmony with what has already been done by Congress in the consolidation of like posts at Constantinople, Vienna, and Rome. The committee agreed to those propositions, and there is no more important one than this, which, as I have shown to the Senate, has already under it forty-eight consular posts. I hold in my hand a paper prepared in the State Department urging it, and giving the reasons why it should be done. I will not take time to read it because I know the Senate is anxious to complete the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 28; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 3172:

For salary of the United States minister resident and consul-general to Siam $5,000, in lieu of the salary of the consul-general at that place appropriated for in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

I only have to say that that officer has been appointed, and this is a moderate salary.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order, if it is possible to make a point on that.

Mr. WINDOM. On what ground?

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope no objection will be made to that. I think it is right.

Mr. ALLISON. It increases the appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. That does not make a point of order. A great many amendments increase the appropriations. If that was a violation of the rule we have been violating it pretty badly all day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was this amendment offered in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WINDOM. That point has not been raised.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that a point of order was raised. Will the Senator from Iowa state his point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not raise that point, because I think it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. I thought so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 26, noes 21.

Mr. ALLISON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say that we have just established this mission at Siam, where we are likely to have a very important trade. There are eight million people under that government, and the commercial advantages to our country from that section of the world are likely to be very important. Our Government would not have thought of sending a minister to that country unless there had been some very important reasons at the back of it. It is scarcely respectable for us to send a minister abroad without something of a minister's salary. He ought at least to have the lowest salary paid to any other man who fills such a position under the United States. The Committee on Foreign Relations have looked into this subject carefully, and they have come to the conclusion that it was a wise measure of administration to establish this mission in Siam. If the Senate think they have done wrong about this matter they ought not to have confirmed the gentleman appointed; they ought to have said to Mr. Halderman, "We do not wish your services in that capacity; a consul-general is all the officer we need there." But while we have a mission there I cannot understand why we should discriminate against him among all the men of his class serving the United States. I look forward to the establishment of this mission to Siam with a great deal of confidence as to its commercial success in the future.

Mr. BECK. This is one of the cases to which I referred, and as far as I know it is as meritorious as any of them. I do not know many of the gentlemen applying for these appropriations, but I do know this man, and if there is a man in the service whom I would desire to serve I do not know one whom I would go so far to serve as I would Mr. Halderman. But if we begin this now that the regular diplomatic bill has passed, there will be no end of the amendments that we shall be required to make.

Mr. MORGAN. This is the only case of the kind. We have no other ministers confirmed by the Senate at this session and none who is not included in the laws heretofore passed. This is an exceptional case. The gentleman is about to sail. He goes to a very far distant nation; his expenses are going to be heavy; and it is due to the dignity of this country when we send a minister abroad that we should not send him with the salary of a consul-general.

Mr. WINDOM. He was appointed and confirmed, I think, subsequent to the passage of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 35, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—35.

| | | | |

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment to come in on page 69, after line 1676:

That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purchase of a site near the War Department and erection thereon of a brick and metal fire-proof building, to be used for the safe-keeping of records of the executive and legislative and judicial departments not required in the present executive or legislative or judicial offices for constant reference, as recommended by the Secretary of War in his annual reports of 1879 and 1880; said building to be erected under the supervision and direction of General M. C. Meigs, lately Quartermaster-General, according to the plans heretofore prepared by him and submitted in his annual reports of the Quartermaster's Department.

I will say that this amendment was unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I may also add that it is the language precisely of a bill already passed almost unanimously by the Senate and which is now pending in the House, and recommended there by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and will be acted on if they can get the floor to report the bill. There is a great necessity for this, and it has been thoroughly considered. There is a vast amount of these records, and they are invaluable, and if they were destroyed as they are constantly exposed to fire, their destruction would inflict a loss upon the Government that would be utterly irreparable.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask of the Senator why does he put in the amendment "ground near the War Department?"

Mr. MORRILL. Because there is a spot there that can be had at a very low price.

Mr. LOGAN. There is a spot right adjoining the Freedman's Bank building where the Attorney-General's Office is, large enough for a very good-sized building. That belongs to the Government, and it is unoccupied except by small buildings and shanties. It is one of the most desirable places in the city and one that the Committee on Appropriations had under consideration for this very proposition; but inasmuch as we had provided for a building for the Pension Office, we concluded to let this go over. Why not locate it on that piece of ground?

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that that is required for another purpose, and besides the spot is not nearly large enough for the object named in this amendment. The building has to be one occupying a very large space and to be built in the very cheapest and most economical manner, one story high. The plans have been submitted and have been before the Senate heretofore, and I think a bill for this purpose has passed the Senate twice before.

Mr. LOGAN. One story high for the purpose of holding records?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly, one story high.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I object to it if that is the plan it is to be built on. I raise the point of order.

Mr. MORRILL. You cannot raise the point of order because the amendment is legitimately before the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I object to it if it is going to be built on any such plan as a one-story building for the purpose of holding records. There is plenty of ground vacant adjacent to the Freedman's Bank building on which to put a building four or five stories high that will hold all the records which are not in use now and which should be put away for safe keeping, right next to the building commonly called the Freedman's Bank building. There is plenty of ground there, plenty of space on which to erect a building large enough to hold all these surplus records.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. LOGAN. No, I am not mistaken; I have gone and looked at it.

Mr. DAWES, of West Virginia. Suppose we strike out the provision as to the location, and leave the location to the parties who are to erect the building.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DAWES. If there is danger of locating it on the ground suggested by the Senator from Illinois, I think that ought to be precluded.

Mr. LOGAN. Why?

Mr. DAWES. That ought to be reserved for a building for the overflow of the Departments in that vicinity. Each one of them today is overcrowded; and that location should not be occupied for filing away papers.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the difference?

Mr. DAWES. There is the question of convenience.

Mr. LOGAN. I know the Senator is on the committee, and I suppose he was there when this question was discussed, and it was only postponed for the reason that we had provided for another building already, and that building certainly, according to its dimensions, would provide for the overflow from these Departments. If you cannot erect a building on this ground, as the Senator says, that will provide for the overflow of the Departments, as far as clerks are concerned, certainly you can erect a building there that will hold all the records that are necessary to be stored away.

Mr. DAWES. Where the Freedman's Bank is?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir. Does the Senator know how large that lot is?

Mr. DAWES. One hundred and sixty feet on one side and one hundred and forty on the other.

Mr. LOGAN. That would hold quite a large building.

Mr. DAWES. The site of the sandstone building is included in the dimensions I stated.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. That is one of the most desirable places in the city for a building for the accommodation of the working force of the Treasury and of the other Departments, and it would seem to me to be very bad policy to use that site for a building for filing away papers.

Mr. LOGAN. What are you going to use it for?

Mr. DAWES. To put up a building that will cover the whole of the space, five or six stories high, and let us hear no more about taking off the force of the Pension Bureau up into the attic of the State Department, where it is so hot to-day that a person cannot stay.

Mr. LOGAN. I only desire to say that it does not seem to be possible to select any location that belongs to the Government that will be agreeable. Property that belongs to the Government is never agreeable to put buildings on, but property that does not belong to the Government must always be selected.

Mr. DAWES. There are reservations right on Seventh street and Eighth street, reservations down where the talk was of putting the building spoken of yesterday, and all over this city that do not compare with the reservations to which the Senator alludes for the convenience of the Departments.

Mr. LOGAN. But the amendment does not provide for that. It provides for its being near the War Department where we do not own property.

Mr. DAWES. I do not agree with the amendment in that respect; I agree with the Senator from Illinois that it should be put on a Government reservation; but as between the ground we purchased this session of the Freedman's Bank and a Government reservation, I do not think the Senator when he comes to think of it will insist on his suggestion.

Mr. LOGAN. I only mentioned that as property belonging to the Government and a desirable site for a building.

Mr. DAWES. So I understood.

Mr. LOGAN. My object is if I can—but I do not suppose I can—to get these public buildings hereafter put on ground that belongs to the Government, and not to be purchasing ground all around for speculative purposes, as has been done heretofore.

Mr. DAWES. I will do what I can to help the Senator in that respect.

Mr. LOGAN. I say now that if the Senator from Vermont will strike out the provision to which I have alluded, so that Government ground may be selected, it will certainly be more acceptable, and then I would strike out the provision in reference to the building being one story high, because I think it would be perfectly absurd to build a house one story high in Washington City for any purpose.

Mr. BECK. I understand the Senator from Vermont accepts the suggestion made by the Senator from West Virginia not to locate this building upon any particular piece of ground.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to striking out that part of the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not insist on the particular place named by him being selected.

Mr. LOGAN. I shall not; I merely suggested that to the Senator because that site belongs to the Government. I do not care where the building is placed so that it is on Government property. My object is to prevent the Government having to purchase ground all the time when it has acres of ground around here desirable for building purposes.

Mr. BECK. I believe the Senator from Illinois was present when a suggestion was made to the Committee on Appropriations, which I will state. The present State Department is an enormous building, and the rooms are enormously large; it cost us some $4,000,000. The suggestion has been made, I do not know whether it meets the approval of the State Department exactly, that a building could be erected adjoining the Freedman's Bank on our own ground that perhaps would not cost over $400,000, with rooms so accommodated as to make a State Department building that would be absolutely satisfactory to the Department itself, adjoining the Department of Justice. Then all that south front of the State, War, and Navy building, in which perhaps there is only one clerk in a large room where eight or ten could be placed, could be occupied by the War and Navy Departments and the different bureaus of those Departments. I think that is a suggestion which is worth considering. Therefore I did not want anything that would take that ground for any other purpose.

Then it was further suggested that perhaps the present Post-Office Department could stand the addition of another story or two, and thus we should get an immense accommodation there.

In other words, in looking over the ground to see how we could get clear of $186,000 rents we are paying, I thought at least, and I think others of the committee agreed—I am not sure that the Senator from Illinois was present when the discussion was going on—

Mr. LOGAN. I was present.

Mr. BECK. We deemed it advisable to leave these questions open to see what was best and how we could best utilize our own property. I know there are rooms in the State Department with only one clerk where perhaps eight or ten clerks of the War Department could be properly accommodated. I understand that many of the rooms are not considered as properly adapted to the State Department. If a cheap building could be put on the Freedman's Bank ground to accommodate the State Department, I did not want that precluded by an appropriation of that ground for any other purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I went with the chairman of the committee at his invitation and examined these grounds; we went around by the open grounds belonging to the Government, drove all around and examined them, and examined the ground at the Freedman's Bank, and found quite a number of places belonging to the Government that struck us as being entirely eligible for building purposes, without the purchase of a foot of ground by the Government of the United States. As I said, that was the objection I had to this amendment, and if the Senator from Vermont will strike out that portion of it providing for the purchase of ground, and strike out that portion in reference to the character of the building, that it shall be one story high—

Mr. MORRILL. There is nothing about that in the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. But it refers to a plan, and you say that plan is one-story high, so that if the law is to make it according to that plan, of course it will be but one-story high. The gentleman mentioned is certainly very competent and capable of making a building that would be satisfactory to everybody, but the idea of having a building one-story high for stowing records seems to me absurd.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator had seen the plan he would not object to it, for it is a fine plan for holding a vast amount of documents, and at a very cheap and economical rate.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont, in reference to this amendment, what character of records it is proposed to put in this building.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment proposed specifies the character of the documents. I have not all the papers here. When the separate bill passed it was in the care of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. VEST,] and the papers were placed in his hands.

Mr. VEST. I can answer any question of the Senator from Iowa.

In the first place, this bill originated in a recommendation made by General Meigs at the time he occupied the position of the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. MORRILL. And indorsed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand all about that. We passed it twice, I think.

Mr. VEST. An amendment was put on the bill providing for the papers of the Quartermaster-General's Department, that building having been on fire three times, and there was great danger of the destruction of those valuable papers. Then it was found that all the old portion of the Capitol was filled with old papers of every description, and the Architect of the Capitol informed us that in the event of a fire the heat would tear off the roof though it might not injure the walls; the steam engendered by fire would throw off the roof, and there was actually no place to put the accumulation of legislative papers and papers connected with the Supreme Court room. The bill was amended so as to provide a place of deposit for legislative and judicial papers, so that now the intention is to provide a place of deposit, fire-proof, for the papers of all the Departments, and particularly the War Department, and all these legislative and judicial papers.

If the Senator from Illinois will permit me to answer an objection of his in regard to the form of this building, I will say that that matter was considered very elaborately and earnestly by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and this plan, I undertake to say, although I do not profess to be an expert in regard to this sort of architecture or construction, is far the best that can be suggested. It gives more room; it gives absolute safety; it has been passed upon by all parties who have been particularly interested or who have any knowledge on the subject; and I undertake to say that there can be no sort of objection, after an examination, to the plan that was submitted to us by General Meigs.

Mr. LOGAN. Why not strike that out and let any plan be adopted that the persons named select?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think any building such as is proposed here will hold the records of this Government for any great length of time. If we are to have a one-story building, I think we had better proceed to purchase ground in order to put all the records of the several Departments of the Government into that building. The Treasury Department itself has all its records from the beginning of the Government; so of the War Department; and if all these records are to be put into a single building, it will require a very large one.

I am thoroughly in favor of erecting this building. We have passed a bill for it twice or three times in the Senate, but I had supposed it was to be a much larger and more commodious building than that suggested by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator will find it to be large enough.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the amendment is agreed to I see that it has been modified and words are stricken out, and the very words that are objectionable are left. On line 3 of the amendment I move to strike out the words "for the purchase of a site."

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will not be done. I understand that negotiations have been entered into so far as to ascertain that the ground can be obtained for a very small price, and it does not increase the cost. It is limited to $200,000 to erect a building and obtain the site.

Mr. LOGAN. How much will the ground cost?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state that the estimate which was made for the purchase of ground by the War Department was $59,000, and as I said it is very strange, when the Government has plenty of ground here which is eligible for building, that every appropriation that is made must have a provision in it for the purchase of a site. I object to that. I do not believe in making these arrangements beforehand about purchasing somebody's property, and then getting a bill through to pay him an extravagant price for it. It has been already estimated, no contract made, but an arrangement made for the purchase of this property for $59,000, as stated before our committee, and we objected to it, and proposed to put the structure on ground that belonged to the Government. If you have not ground belonging to the Government purchase it; but if you have the ground I should like to know why it is that Congress must always insist upon buying somebody's property here when we have plenty of our own? I move to strike out those three words.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will not be done. It will take a large piece of ground for the erection of this building. A bill in the same form passed the Senate twice. Although we have not the plans here to-day, they were exhibited before, and they were entirely satisfactory so far as we know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. MORRILL. That will kill the proposition.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 32, noes 20.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not care to have the provision put in now, and if I am at liberty I withdraw it, for this amendment will effectually kill the proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. I notice that everything is killed unless you can buy something.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1574 on page 65:

For establishing a coaling-dock and naval storehouse at Port Royal Harbor, South Carolina, $30,000, the site for said coaling-dock and naval storehouse to be located by a board of naval officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy for that purpose.

I simply desire to say in connection with that—

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to be heard on that. I do not see how the Senator can make the point of order. The amendment has been recommended by a committee of this body, the Committee on Naval Affairs; recommended by Captain Jouett, commander of the Wyoming at Port Royal Harbor; by Commodore English, the Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting; by the Secretary of the Navy, and regularly referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I have the letters if the Senator desires to have them read. I simply make that statement to show that it is not liable to the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa state his point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not know that this was a report from the Naval Committee. I thought it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations on the motion of the Senator himself.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to put in "for completing" the dock, so that we may know that this is not beginning a work to grow to large proportions.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator under what existing law this appropriation is being made. It seems to me there is no existing law which authorizes such an appropriation. You might as well establish a new navy-yard, it seems to me, as to establish a coaling station.

Mr. BUTLER. I introduced the amendment to the naval appropriation bill in order to get it on that bill. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] advised me that the sundry civil bill was the proper bill for appropriations of that kind. So I introduced the amendment to this bill, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations in connection with this bill.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly the sundry civil bill is the bill that this should go on, but subject to the rules of the Senate. No proposition in reference to the establishment of new stations or new yards ever goes on to the naval appropriation bill. Those items always go on to the sundry civil bill, but you cannot get them on to the sundry civil bill unless under the rules of the Senate. You cannot establish a new coaling station and buy land unless you have a law for it.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not propose to buy any land. The Government owns the land. I will read the letters of Captain Jonett, Commodore English, and the Secretary of the Navy if the Senate desires to hear them.

NAVAL STATION, BEAUFORT, SOUTH CAROLINA.
U. S. S. WYOMING, (THIRD RATE.)
April 7, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor, as commandant of this station, to submit for the consideration of the Department the following remarks upon the advisability and necessity of establishing at this important port a permanent storehouse and coal depot.

I take it for granted the Department is acquainted with the natural advantages of this port as regards ease of access, exceptional depth of water over the bar and roomy anchorage inside, which necessarily makes it an important place as a naval rendezvous.

The medical records on this station for several years past, as well as during the war, when the Government had located here large hospitals for the care of wounded, show a very healthy climate, with freedom from epidemic diseases of all kinds, and thus renders possible a concentration of the forces on the North Atlantic station at any time of the year, should an emergency arise.

Work of all kinds can be done out of doors all the year around, and ships can refit here whenever they may arrive without the usual delay incidental to the more northern ports and their inclement climates. All kinds of exercises may be had, such as with great guns, small-arm ranges ashore, boat-sailing, in short all that the regulations require. With these facts in view, I am of opinion it would redound greatly to the interest of the naval service and our Government that a permanent depot of supplies be kept here, such a one as would be capable of meeting the ordinary needs of the North Atlantic squadron, and possibly the training squadron in winter, should it be sent cruising south.

The storeship now here, the Pawnee, has been in southern climates without any material repair for over twelve years. Her hull is very rotten, the copper is off her bottom in large spaces, and the destructive worm has seriously endangered her safety as a place of deposit for Government property.

That the copper is off her bottom I know, as last year a diver was sent down to examine, and so reported to me. No one can tell the ravages the worms may have made since that examination, and, in my opinion, the Government property now on board is seriously endangered. The value of this property, outside the nominal value of the vessel, is about from ten to fifteen thousand dollars.

The expense of keeping a crew of ten men and an officer in charge and other incidental repairs and cost is by no means an inconsiderable amount, exceeding $5,000 per annum. The ship itself is beyond repair, and now that the Department seems desirous of disposing of old material on hand she would be in all probability classed under that head and sold.

When we consider the risk to which the Government property now on board the Pawnee is exposed by reason of the unsoundness of the vessel, the natural deterioration from dampness aboard ship, and the cost of maintaining the ship's company, I can but say that it would be very much to the interest of the Government that a storehouse be built on shore, nearly where the Pawnee now lies, that would contain such a supply of coal, provisions, and equipments as the Department might deem advisable.

I am possessed of the knowledge that the Government could buy the land suitably ble as a site for a storehouse and other minor naval purposes for a reasonable, I might say nominal, price.

This land has a fine beach, suitable for building a coaling-dock, extending from shore or coal house to deep water.

The chart shows twenty-four feet at low water within two hundred and fifty feet of the beach.

From discreet inquiries as to the cost of building the kind of dock that would be needed, and the estimate made by the carpenter of this vessel for a suitable storehouse, about $12,000 would buy the land, build the dock, and construct the storehouse. Considering the present risk of our stores and cost of taking care of them, it appears the cost of building a substantial dock and storehouse would be covered in two years.

After that the expense would be trifling and the property safe. The storehouse considered above would contain 2,000 tons of coal and provisions for the present North Atlantic squadron for one year.

I have weighed the matter carefully during nearly two years I have had command of this station and have reached the conclusion pointed out in these remarks, and deem it my duty to lay them before the Department, that the Government may take advantage of that in time of peace which would prove of inestimable value in time of war.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAS. E. JOUETT,

Captain, U. S. Navy, Comd'g Naval Station, Beaufort, S. C.

Hon. WILLIAM H. HUNT,

Secretary of the Navy, Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

Then there is a letter from Commodore English, Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, and finally a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, which are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING,
Washington, May 22, 1882.

SIR: In accordance with instructions as per indorsement on letter of Hon. J. D. CAMERON of the 12th instant, I have the honor to state that during the months of January, February, March, and April, 1876, I was senior officer present at Port Royal, South Carolina. At that time there were about twelve cruising ships and a number of the monitor class of vessels anchored there.

I was thoroughly convinced at that time of the importance to the Government of securing a spot in those waters for a permanent naval station. In case of a foreign war, or any extensive disturbances that might arise among the West India Islands, in which this Government might become involved, its advantages would render it of inestimable value.

There is no place on the Atlantic coast south of the Chesapeake possessing the same advantages—abundance of water for the heaviest draught of vessels, easy of access and egress, sufficiently far inland not to be assailed, and easily protected by land batteries.

I would therefore suggest and recommend that a site for a grand naval station be secured at the earliest possible moment; and in my judgment the best site for a permanent station upon the waters of Port Royal Bay is on Broad River, near the lower end of Port Royal Island. There is a stretch at that spot of over a mile frontage, with never less than thirty feet of water, with good holding ground, &c.

For present naval purposes, however, (and what is likely to be required by the present generation,) the site on Saint Helena Island, near the mouth of Beaufort River and abreast the naval anchorage since 1875, will afford every facility. I believe it is one of the reservations and belongs to the Government, unless recently sold.

At this spot a wharf could be constructed, a storehouse for coal and other stores, and a moderate-sized machine shop built for a small amount.

The old U. S. S. Pawnee, which has been used for a coal hulk, &c., cannot last much longer, and to replace her with another vessel would require a much larger expenditure than to construct on shore a building sufficient to supply all immediate wants. In a sanitary point of view the position is all that can be desired. I would therefore suggest that the site be taken possession of, and recommend that the appropriation be made for the above purposes.

I inclose a chart showing the sites referred to.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EARL ENGLISH,

Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. E. CHANDLER,

Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 3, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 12, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 1789, appropriating $30,000 for a warehouse and coal-dock at Port Royal, South Carolina. In reply, I inclose, as desired, the report on the same subject made by a board of naval officers, of which Admiral Porter was chairman; also copies of a report dated April 7, 1882, of Captain James E. Jouett, commanding the naval station at Beaufort; and of two communications dated May 22, 1882, and June 2, 1882, from the Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting.

Inasmuch as the United States undoubtedly now owns the necessary land, I have to advise that no appropriation be made for the purchase of land, but that the sum of $30,000 should be appropriated for the construction of a storehouse, machine-shop, and coal-dock on the reservation located on Saint Helena Island, as recommended by the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. E. CHANDLER,

Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. D. CAMERON,

Committee on Naval Affairs, Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This appropriation having been estimated for by the head of an Executive Department, and the amendment having been presented in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair holds the amendment to be in order, and the question is, Will the Senate agree to the same?

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I offer, to come in after line 242, on page 11, the following amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase the ground adjoining the United States court-house and post-office at Springfield, Illinois, between Sixth, Monroe, and Seventh streets, and an alley in the middle of the block on which the said building stands, the sum of $26,000. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to cause the building now on said ground to be sold and removed; and the proceeds used for enclosing the said ground, and he may expend $1,000 in addition to such proceeds, if necessary, to properly inclose and improve said grounds.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. Right across the alley from the post-office is a large livery stable and barn, with combustible material that endangers the post-office building, and under the provision for "the repair and preservation of public buildings" it seems to me this would be an appropriate amendment. It has been examined, and I have the maps here to show the facts as stated. There is no doubt but what the Government at some time will have to purchase this property for the purpose of preserving and protecting the building as it now exists which belongs to the Government. Anybody who will take the photograph before me and look at the map will say that there is a necessity for the purchase of this ground for the purpose of removing the stables and outbuildings adjacent to them. Any person who will examine the map will see the necessity of this provision.

Of course I know it is subject to the point of order, but I supposed no point of order would be raised on this from the fact that it is an absolute necessity that the Government should have this property and the alley there, so that it can remove this combustible material there which is so close to the building as to make it liable to fire.

Mr. ALLISON. Wait until next winter. I raise the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the amendment is very proper. It is for the Springfield building. I know about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the question of order raised on the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I desire the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the Book of Estimates. I brought to the attention of the Appropriations Committee an amendment which I framed in accordance with the recommendation of the Government respecting the Pensacola navy-yard. I will now leave out everything but what relates to the dry-dock recently constructed. This is no new station. The Government, at the recommendation of those at the head of the Navy Department, has expended over $400,000 on a dry-dock for the Gulf of Mexico. Four sections are now there. The two last were taken down within the last month from the yard of Mr. Roach, having been completed there.

They have been under contract since 1872; those sections have cost the Government over $400,000; and unless you decide to throw that money away and leave them in an utter state of inefficiency, the money must be appropriated. According to the estimates of the Department it requires $60,000 to make effectual what has already been expended on this work. The committee have given $300,000 for the purpose of partially completing the dry-dock on the Pacific. This $60,000 is to finish and make complete the dock in the Gulf of Mexico at the only place where it is possible to have one. In their present condition, of course the sections of it are useless; they will not float a Government ship; but with the expenditure of this sum of money they will at all times be in readiness to raise a ship of war that may be needed to be raised in that locality.

The Department has recommended it, and I have left out all the items of recommendation except that, because of the necessity of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It has been recommended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No amendment has been offered, so far as the Chair is advised.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Here is the amendment. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. To come in on page 64, after line 1551.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 1551 it is proposed to insert:

For completing four sections of dry-dock at Pensacola navy-yard, $60,000.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is estimated for, and I sent the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations in accordance with the rule. The estimate for $200,000 included other things, but realizing this as a matter of first consequence I have only included it.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this is the first of a series of amendments which will take two or three million dollars out of the Treasury. In the naval bill we have suggested the idea of getting rid of some of the navy-yards. I hope it will not fall to the lot of my friend to lose his.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is not mine; it is the country's.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt it is a valuable navy-yard in the Gulf of Mexico; but to put on this amendment in reference to the Pensacola navy-yard right in the face of the fact that we have selected a commission in the naval bill whose duty it shall be to examine all the navy-yards with a view to the vacation of a portion of them and closing them up, it seems to me, would be very bad policy indeed.

As to this dry-dock, I feel quite certain that $400,000 or half a million dollars would not complete it so as to make it useful for the docking of ships.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator is entirely mistaken in that or every scientific calculation utterly fails. The four sections were contracted for in accordance with the recommendation of the head of the Department, Mr. ROBESON, who was then in charge; they were built at Chester and towed out there, corresponding a good deal to the British dock at Bermuda. The British have one at Bermuda, the Spaniards one at Havana, and there is not one place from the Rio Grande to the Chesapeake where one of our ships can be raised in case of necessity, and it is that which gave use to this dock. If any one of our men of war were crippled in the Gulf of Mexico the vessel might be lost and millions gone for the want of a place to raise her. There has been $450,000 spent on this dock, and this will complete it. That is the estimate of the Department.

Now, with reference to the abandonment of the navy-yard I do not think it was ever seriously contemplated by anybody to abandon that yard for repairing purposes. Six millions of money have been expended at it under the authority of the Government on the suggestion of the wisest and most patriotic men of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. JONES, of Florida, called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. It seems to me that we are exposing the commerce of the Gulf very much by reducing this appropriation to be added to the $400,000 already expended. This dry-dock when completed will be very useful to the commercial marine of the Gulf of Mexico, to all the ships that go there. There is no other place on that coast where a large ship can be repaired. The Government has gone to all this expense, and, as the Senator from Florida states, after the most scientific investigation has made a dock and towed it around from Mr. Roach's works, the last of the sections arriving within a few days past. The object of this appropriation is merely to make that efficient. Sixty thousand dollars is estimated for to make it efficient.

I think we ought not to stop. Whether we are to have a navy-yard there for the repair of Government vessels or not, the Government having expended this amount of money, the commercial marine of the country requires that we shall have some place for the repair of ships that get into distress. We now have to go to Cuba or Bermuda to get a large ship docked for the purpose of making any repairs that a dock is necessary for. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment. It is wise economy.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 35, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. On page 34, at the end of line 806, I offer the following amendment:

To pay to the State of North Carolina the sum of $42,532.58, said sum being the net proceeds of five hundred and six bales of cotton, the property of said State, erroneously seized by United States Treasury agents and sold in the months of August, 1865, and April, 1866, and said proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I must make a point of order on that amendment. That, I believe, was property that belonged to the Confederate State of North Carolina. I do not think we ought—

Mr. HOAR. Let us have a vote on it.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on it.

Mr. VANCE. What is the Senator's point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa state his point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. First, that it is not estimated for; secondly, that it does not come from a committee; and there are a good many other reasons that might be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from North Carolina if this appropriation is estimated by the head of any Department?

Mr. VANCE. I think that is very doubtful. [Laughter.] When the proceeds of cotton enter the Treasury the maxim nulla vestigia retrorsum applies, and there has been no estimate for it; but I would say to the Senator that there is a report from the Secretary of the Treasury acknowledging that that cotton was seized at a date posterior to the time fixed by the act of 1872, and it is in pursuance of section 5 of the act of May 18, 1872, that I have introduced the amendment. That law is in these words:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the lawful owners or their legal representatives of all cotton seized after the 30th day of June, 1865, by the agents of the Government unlawfully and in violation of their instructions, the net proceeds, without interest, of the sales of said cotton actually paid into the Treasury of the United States.

In pursuance of that I offer the amendment. I have the report of the Secretary of the Treasury here, setting forth the number of bales and the net proceeds. They were seized in the city of New York after they were shipped by the government of the State of North Carolina with the permission of the military authorities that were then in command.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. VANCE. I appeal from that decision, and I desire to say a word. I do not think it comports with the spirit of fairness for the Committee on Appropriations to fill a bill with amendments that could be objected to on points of order and be ruled out, and after they have secured all their own amendments in that way then to turn upon everybody else and prevent others having the same justice.

This follows an amendment by the Appropriations Committee directing the adjustment and payment to the amount that may be found due to the State of Nebraska for the direct tax that was collected off her, as clearly out of order as this amendment is, and more so far as I am able to see, as it is not in pursuance of any positive law. Yet, after having secured that for the State of Nebraska, the State of North Carolina is not permitted to have the vote of the Senate as to whether she shall be repaid the amount of her property that was seized after the war was closed and after a law had passed forbidding the seizure of any more property. I do not think that that is the spirit of fairness. If it meets the ideas of the Senator and of the Senate, I have nothing more to say.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him long enough to say that the claim of the State of Nebraska provided for in the bill is a regularly audited claim, audited by the accounting officers?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. LAPHAM. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 247. The words "that remains" should be changed to "which remains." This bill was prepared before the end of the fiscal year, and the language is not appropriate to the present condition of things. It should be "which remains."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. LAPHAM. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 756:

Out of which the secretary of the Territory of Utah shall be paid a reasonable sum, to be certified by the president of the commission, for his services as secretary of the commission, as provided by law.

The act of March last creating the commission in regard to Utah provides in the sixth section that "the secretary of the Territory shall be the secretary of the said board and keep the journal of its proceedings and attest the action of said board under this section." There is no provision whatever for any compensation to him for that service, and this clause of the bill which appropriates the sum of $15,000 for printing, stationery, clerk hire, and rent I propose to amend by adding a provision that the president of the commission may allow to the secretary of the Territory for this service such sum as he shall judge proper. I cannot fix a definite sum, because it is entirely uncertain what amount of time he will spend on what service he will render.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we had better wait until we see what service he does render. I make the point of order on it.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was the amendment offered in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. LAPHAM. It was not; but the bill itself makes an appropriation of this sum.

Mr. ALLISON. But there is an existing law which prohibits a man from receiving two salaries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is ruled out.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have still one more amendment. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 1003:

For officers' quarters and barracks for two companies at Fort Montgomery, Rouse's Point, New York, $55,010.66.

I ask to have the Secretary read a letter from the Secretary of War upon that subject, which I send to the desk.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, July 28, 1882.

SIR: Referring to your proposed amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, for the purpose of providing an appropriation for officers' quarters and barracks at Fort Montgomery, Rouse's Point, New York, I have the honor to state that I have this day addressed a communication to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, inviting attention to letter of my predecessor of February 20, 1880, (House Executive Document No. 45, Forty-sixth Congress, second session,) and renewing the recommendation therein contained, that the sum estimated to be necessary for the construction of said quarters, &c., be appropriated by Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

Hon. E. G. LAPHAM, United States Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment. It is not estimated for in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And was not referred to the committee.

Mr. LAPHAM. The Secretary of War and the General of the Army have both recommended this appropriation. It is an appropriation of a sum of money for the improvement of one of the established posts of the Army now existing. It does not create anything new. It provides for an expenditure for a purpose which has been recommended; and I introduced this amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of presenting the question for the consideration of the Senate.

There is a Government reservation at the city of Plattsburgh, on Lake Champlain, as well as at Rouse's Point, to which this amendment applies. The object is to concentrate the forces of the Government at Rouse's Point, and to permit the Government reserve at Plattsburgh to be converted into a reservation adjacent to that city for memorial purposes.

I might occupy time in stating the events which are connected with that locality, but it is unnecessary; they are familiar to all. I remember in my boyhood to have read what was said of that locality by the poet and patriot of the day, somewhat in the following language:

Backside of Albany is Lake Champlain,
A little pond half full of water;
Platt-e-burgh there tries his luck upon the main,
While the boat try her luck upon the water.

On Lake Champlain Uncle Sam set a boat;
Massa McDonough he sail 'em,
While General Macomb make Platt-e-burgh his home
With an army whose courage never fail 'em.

It is of this locality and with a view of carrying out the purpose of the people of the vicinity that I ask this appropriation for the purpose of completing upon this very important point on the border of Canada the Government reservation and armory now existing there.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator might have added that at Rouse's Point the Government has already expended, I think, something like a million dollars upon fortifications, but there are no barracks there. General Sherman and others interested consider that an important point and intend to have a permanent post at Rouse's Point.

Mr. ALLISON. No barracks there, and no soldiers there. Neither barracks, nor soldiers, nor officers!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As this amendment was offered in the Senate and regularly referred to the Committee on Appropriations—

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule 27. I anticipated that the Chair was going to rule the amendment in order. I think if the Chair examines Rule 27—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator had waited a moment longer the Chair would have so ruled.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is what I was afraid of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator read that part of Rule 27?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. "Unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate." This, I understand, has not been moved by direction of a standing committee.

Mr. LAPHAM. This is to carry out the provisions of existing law. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I dispute that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a controverted point. The Chair would like to be advised exactly how the fact is.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Inasmuch as the Senator from New York has the affirmative, he must produce the statute.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is one of the military forts of the Government, established by law, that has been in existence ever since 1812, and an appropriation for the purpose of protecting the interests of the Government there is an appropriation in pursuance of existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was in the act of ruling the amendment in order, but after hearing the Senator from Wisconsin the Chair is very decidedly of the other opinion, and will rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 275, on page 12:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized to secure, by private purchase or by condemnation, land on the Savannah River between the city of Savannah and the bar at Tybee for the location of lights under the appropriation of $60,000 made by the Forty-sixth Congress to light the river from the bar to the city; and said Secretary may use not exceeding $3,000 of said sum so appropriated to pay for such land and for the location of lights as may be necessary; and said appropriation of $60,000 shall be used as soon as convenient for the location and construction of said lights.

The Forty-sixth Congress, last May a year ago, made an appropriation of $60,000 to light the harbor of Savannah and the river from the city down to the bar of Tybee. As it is well known to those who are in the habit of passing in on vessels at that port, vessels of any considerable draught have to go in on the high tides. Vessels very often arrive at the bar in the night tide and could go up if the river were lighted, but as it has not been lighted heretofore they have to lie over twelve hours until the next tide. To meet that emergency this appropriation was made.

There are marshes all along the sides of the river, both on the Carolina and Georgia side. The owners of that marsh land at once put very exorbitant prices on the small pieces of marsh land that would be required for the location of these lights, refused to sell on any terms that could be agreed upon between them and the city or any other authorities there. The portion of the bill just preceding the point where I desire my amendment to come in provides for the purchase or condemnation of land in another State for a similar case.

Now I desire not to appropriate an additional dollar, but to authorize the Government if it cannot by purchase get these locations to take them by condemnation, and use as much as $3,000 of the $60,000 appropriation made last May a year ago to pay for these locations for the lights.

I do not propose to increase the appropriation a single dollar, but as the $60,000 was appropriated to put the lights on the river, and they cannot be put there without the location, I propose to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to use $3,000 to pay for the land, and if that cannot be purchased at a reasonable rate to condemn the land, and the balance then to be applied to the building of the lights. That is the whole case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BROWN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I invite the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to page 47, concerning the Signal Service. I intimated to him at the time we passed that point that I should make a motion to raise the appropriation provided for on page 47. In line 1141, I move to strike out $250,000 and insert $310,000. The committee, I respectfully submit, did not have the whole information before it, and the result of this appropriation as it stands now will really be to very seriously cripple the Signal Service, and I will show why.

This $60,000 comes out of the $180,000 for telegraphic service. The impression of the committee was that the Signal Bureau could dispense with one of the reports. I showed briefly at the time that that would be a very grievous injury, it would depreciate very largely from the value of their estimates of probabilities.

The observations of the Signal Service are taken at 7 a. m., at 3 p. m., and at 11 p. m. It was stated that they were taken at seven, two, and then at midnight. That was a mistake. They are taken at seven in the morning, and by half past nine these statements of the barometer and thermometer and humidity are collected, and at 9.30 they are summed up and the indications are made up from those observations. At three other indications are taken at all the points and sent in, and by about five o'clock they are ready. All that 7 a. m. and 3 p. m. compilation is sent southward over the Southern States and also some of it sent North; but the fact is that in many of the Southern States the newspaper offices there, through lack of proper telegraphic facilities, or for some other reason, do not keep open so late and do not get the 11 o'clock p. m. estimates, but they have the afternoon indications.

At eleven at night other indications are taken, and they are gathered in here by about twelve or twelve and a half, and those are the reports that go out to the great morning papers all over the country up to one or half past one. They are collected between twelve and twelve and a half and are ready to start out from here by 1 or 1.30. The telegraph offices are usually open in the larger cities till two or three o'clock in the morning.

The only observations telegraphed at noon are those from the sea-coast telegraph line extending from Sandy Hook to Wilmington, North Carolina, and that is done without expense to the Government; from this special observation indications are not made.

The display and discontinuance of storm signals are based upon all these telegraphic reports, and observations at additional hours may be called for when necessary. Storms may increase or diminish so much in energy within a few hours that the loss of a single daily observation would seriously impair the efficiency of the system of storm warning.

On account of the great amount of telegraphic work of the Signal Service it has been able to make specially favorable contract with the telegraphic companies, and it is very doubtful if the companies would be willing to perform two-thirds of the work for two-thirds of the same pay. That any business man will see is obvious. If you strike off one-third of the money, they are not likely to give you for $150,000 the service they would if the contract were larger, especially in view of the fact that the telegraphing for the Signal Service is now done at hours when the lines are not crowded with commercial business.

General Hazen, the Chief Signal Officer, sends me this note which I have shown to the chairman of the committee:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
Washington, D. C., August 2, 1882.

Gen. J. R. HAWLEY, U. S. S.:

When I informed the Senate appropriations sub-committee that the $60,000 dropped from my estimates by the House would cause us to discontinue one of the tri-daily meteorological reports received, as the telegraphic work costs just three times that sum, or $180,000, I was under the impression that that was the extent of the effect it would have on the work of the Signal Bureau. But on closely examining these expenditures I find the tri-daily observations comprise but a little more than half of our telegraphic work, a large sum being paid for information sent out to all the large centers of population, to all the boards of trade and chambers of commerce in the land.

This information is very much sought and ought not to be discontinued. It must be greatly curtailed, however, and the cotton-belt reports, and frost warnings to tobacco-growers, and the system of flood warnings just begun must be stopped if this sum of $60,000 is withheld.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant.

W. B. HAZEN,
Chief Signal-Officer.

The whole service will be greatly crippled by this reduction, which takes away the basis of their estimates. Even if this be put in as estimated for by the Chief Signal-Officer, the total then will be something like $50,000 less than the appropriation for last year. He has greatly increased the service and its benefits, and yet does not ask for so much by $25,000 or $50,000 as he had last year. This taking off $60,000, two of the best officers connected with that bureau do affirm, will greatly cripple the service. If the thing is to be kept up at all, certainly we ought not to have less than three regular daily observations, besides the occasional twelve o'clock and other special notifications as to floods and storms on the coast.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now that the Senator from Connecticut has finished, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the five-minute rule. I believe we are proceeding under that rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The five-minute rule will be applied.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Connecticut I suppose had forgotten it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had forgotten it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not desire to say more than one word. The Chief of the Signal Bureau seems to state now to the Senator from Connecticut that he misled the committee by a statement made before the sub-committee with reference to these observations.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will not say that he misled the sub-committee; the committee misapprehended him. It will be a more serious injury than he thought it would be.

Mr. ALLISON. We have gone over this matter very carefully, and we believe that this service can be made efficient with the amount of appropriations here made. For that reason, and that only, we have opposed an increase of the appropriation.

Mr. HAWLEY. They positively declare, and it must be obvious to any man, that by taking off one-third of the observations you vastly diminish the usefulness of the bureau.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 32, noes 15.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have one other amendment to offer. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to another point where the Signal-Service suffers by this bill. Mind you I am keeping $50,000 below what they had last year even if I add this. On page 49, lines 1185 and 1186 read "and the further sum of $300,000, payable from the respective appropriations," &c. That $300,000 ought to be $359,000, and I will show why. The paragraph reads:

And it is provided that to support the Signal Service no money shall be expended except such as is appropriated by this act and the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1883, and such sums as are specifically appropriated for said service in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; and the further sum of $300,000, payable from the respective appropriations in said last-named act—similar to those heretofore drawn upon for its support, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the Secretary of War may apply to the support of said service from said appropriations.

That is, in the Army act—

That ought to be $359,000 instead of $300,000. The money is appropriated in the Army bill, but the Signal Service Bureau is told in this paragraph that they can have only $300,000. That $59,000 then will either lapse into the Treasury or go into some other branch of the Army; I do not know whether it may be diverted to anything else, but if not, it must lapse into the Treasury, $359,000 having been appropriated in the Army bill; in this bill they are told they can have but $300,000 of the $359,000.

The sundry civil bill—

This memorandum from the office says—

also reduces very greatly the money to be expended from the Signal Service from the amount appropriated for the Army. In 1881 the amount expended was $593,844.44. It certainly was not less than this for the fiscal year 1882. The sundry civil bill as it came from the House Committee gave the service for the military establishment, only such sums as were appropriated specifically by the Army bill, and $300,000 in addition. According to the statement of the Secretary of War, the part of the money taken from the Army fund in 1881, not specifically appropriated for, was $359,688.37. This is what the $300,000 must pay for, leaving a deficiency of $59,688.37.

Mr. HALE. This bureau is under the Secretary of War. Has the Senator from Connecticut any letter from the Secretary of War recommending a raising of this appropriation?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not proposed to raise the appropriation.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has moved to add something here. Has he any letter from the Secretary of War asking that there be any more appropriation than is provided in the bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. No; I have no letter from the Secretary of War. The money is already appropriated, but in this bill you say that they shall have but $300,000 of it. The part of the money taken from the Army fund in 1881 not specifically appropriated for was $359,688.37. That went to the Signal Service, though it was not specifically set apart for it. This year you say they shall only take $300,000, and you reduce them $59,000 below what they got last year. It is not a new estimate; it does not require an estimate.

Mr. HALE. But the appropriation sought to be taken from is a war appropriation, under the charge of the Secretary of War, who knows the needs of the service. The money will be spent somewhere. If anybody should write a letter recommending what the Senator proposes, it is the Secretary of War, who has not a special interest to get more money for one particular thing, but who looks at all the appropriations for his Department and knows what can be spared from the others. He ought to recommend this before it is increased, it seems to me.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to add, after the words "three hundred," in line 1185, the words "and fifty-nine;" so as to read "and the further sum of $359,000;" so that they may have just what they had last year out of this appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he read from any statement of General Hazen with reference to this matter?

Mr. HAWLEY. This came to me from authority from the Signal Office.

Mr. ALLISON. Who is it signed by?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is not signed by anybody, but delivered to me by two of their officers.

Mr. ALLISON. I was afraid it was not, from the fact that I called General Hazen's special attention to this exact item and he said there was enough.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know there is a loss of $59,000 to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. At the end of line 765, I move to insert:

To pay James L. Selfridge, late assessor of internal revenue for the eleventh district of Pennsylvania, $397.12, that being the balance due said Selfridge for salary and commissions as assessor of internal revenue.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to move an amendment, which I do in pursuance of an estimate of the Department of the Interior. After line 2008, I move to insert:

For collecting statistics and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports, and editing and publishing circulars of information for the use of the Bureau of Education, the expenditures to be approved before payment by the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000.

For the distribution and exchange of educational documents, and for wrapping, directing, tying, and packing the same; and for the collection, exchange, cataloging, and caring for the collection of educational apparatus and appliances, articles of school furniture, and models of school buildings illustrative of foreign and domestic systems and methods of education, and for repairing the same, $5,000, to be expended by the Commissioner of Education under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

I wish to say a word with reference to the subject before action by the Senate upon these amendments. These amendments are in the language of the Book of Estimates. Both these items are recommended, and they are repeatedly recommended, by the Secretary of the Interior.

Last winter there was a meeting in this city of superintendents of education for the various States. They represent of course the teachers of the entire country, of whom there are about 280,000; and under these two amendments they desire two things. They appointed an agent to represent their views, and I have here his statement in full, which, as reaching the point more rapidly than can be done in any other way, I will read:

There are in the United States over two hundred and eighty thousand common-school teachers. They have a voluntary organization, which they call the "National Educational Association," divided into sections or departments; a department of primary schools, of grammar schools, of high schools, of normal schools, and so on. But the most important department of this association is the "department of superintendency," composed of State and city superintendents of the common schools.

Under their supervision are about ten million pupils, and over eighty millions of money are expended annually. Nine millions are expended in building school houses.

These superintendents lately held a session of their department and expressed a desire to obtain certain expert information and statistics, which they seem to think could better be prepared under the direction of the Commissioner of Education than elsewhere. For instance, they want prepared a report or circular of information on school-house architecture, which shall embody the latest and best knowledge and plans on that subject. Manifestly the preparation of such a report, to be of any value, must be committed to experts in architecture, in sanitary requirements, and in school-room convenience.

They also want prepared a report or circular of information on industrial education, not a mere compilation of statistics, but a report which shall interpret the statistics, and shows whether and how it is practicable to teach children in the common schools, along with the alphabet and arithmetic, something of the trades and occupations of after-life.

They want the city systems of schools treated in the same way by an expert—the man deemed most competent for such a work. And so of other subjects. And they ask for this purpose an appropriation of $20,000.

The committee charged with presenting this request to Congress was composed of Messrs. Orr of Georgia, Armstrong of Alabama, Scarborough of North Carolina, Newell of Maryland, Marble of Massachusetts, Smart of Indiana, and Gove of Colorado. The undersigned and Superintendent Wilson of this District were requested to act for the committee in their absence.

I have now stated the case, but I may add that Congress appropriated last year $15,000 for the collection of statistics, presumably for the purpose above indicated; but the unexampled increase of demands upon the bureau compelled the Department to use the fund to pay for ordinary clerical force. This remarkable increase, consequent upon the revival of interest in the common schools all over the country, but particularly in the Southern States, has more than doubled the correspondence of the bureau, and considerably more than doubled the calls for reports and circulars of information. This demand upon the bureau is likely to increase somewhat more during the coming year. It is perfectly plain, therefore, that it will take the whole of the $50,000 allowed last year to run the office; and unless Congress shall grant in addition thereto the $20,000 which the superintendents ask for they must go without the special information which they want. The sum they ask for is not large, but the interest they serve to secure is.

Respectfully,

CHAS. E. HOVEY.

These amendments as they are presented ask for both these items only $15,000. I appeal to the Senate, in view of the record we have made to-day and on former appropriation bills, not to deny this little pittance of only $15,000 to add to the facilities of the Bureau of Education for the discharge of its functions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BROWN. I am a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, of which the honorable Senator from New Hampshire is the chairman. I know the committee feels great interest in this matter. There has been less done for the objects of education than for any other important objects of appropriations. This is a small matter asked for to make valuable additions in certain subjects connected with schools, and I trust it will not be passed by in this way. I hope this little amount, at least, will be given to aid in the cause of education.

Mr. BLAIR. I submit for publication in the RECORD the following paper:

The friends of the Bureau of Education are often asked why it requires an increase of appropriations for its support, and what work it does to justify the expenditure? This question can be best answered by considering, first, why was it established; second, what it is doing; and, third, what is expected of it.

WHY IT WAS ESTABLISHED.

It was instituted by Congress in 1867, at the request of the State and city superintendents of schools who were managing public-school affairs at that time. They and their predecessors had long felt the need of an office which would render assistance in the establishment of school systems where they did not then exist, and be a potent means of improving and vitalizing them where they did; they memorialized Congress to this effect, specifying at least six uses to which such an office could be put, namely: securing greater uniformity and accuracy of statistics; comparing the results of native with those of foreign school systems; recording and reporting the results of all new and special methods in school management and instruction; diffusing correct information about such topics as school laws, the care and disbursement of school funds, the duties and rights of school officers, the training, qualifications, and pay of school teachers, the classification and grading of schools, and the architecture of school buildings, (respecting which subjects information was obtainable only by a few and at great expense, though of the highest value to every educator;) aiding in the proper organization of new school systems where needed; and inculcating in general the value of education to intelligence, morals, industry, wealth, and liberty.

Congress recognized these necessities so far as to prescribe in the law of March 2, 1867, that the office shall be "for the purpose of collecting such statistics and facts as shall show the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories, and of diffusing such information respecting the organization and management of school systems and methods of teaching as shall aid the people of the United States in the establishment and maintenance of efficient school systems, and otherwise promote the cause of education."

WHAT IT IS DOING.

With these main purposes always in view the bureau for fifteen years has endeavored to meet the responsibilities imposed on it. Mistakes may have been made, but it has tried to improve the quality and, as fast as time and means would allow, the quantity of its work.

As a branch of the Interior Department and a member of the official family of bureaus which conducts the administrative business of the Government, it has various routine duties to perform which consume the time of some of its employees. Among these duties, which make but little show yet which are essential to the continuity and consistency of action by many people through long periods of time, I may mention the prompt and orderly receipt, registry, and answering of its daily mail; the making of monthly and other reports to the Department as required by law and regulations; the care, custody, and repair of its property, and the indexing of its records, publications, and library. How great this regular labor is will be manifest by the fact that the number of American correspondents whose labors contributed to the report of 1870 were 831 in number, while those whose help was needed to make that for 1879 amounts to 7,869, more than a manifold increase.

The largest part of the ordinary work in the office is expended in the production of the annual reports. Ten of these, from 1870 to 1879, contained an aggregate of 9,661 closely printed octavo pages, or an average of 966 pages a year.

In addition to these annual reports, (eleven in number,) which are required by law, the bureau since its establishment has published five special reports, forty-eight pamphlets entitled "circulars of information," and nineteen other brochures on educational subjects, making eighty-three publications to date.

But this is not all. The bureau, in addition to the work necessary for its annual reports and the special publications it issues as funds and opportunities warrant, communicates much important information by letters. This method of distribution is growing in proportion with the other work of the office. During the first three months of 1881 there were written 1,615 letters; during the same period of the present year, 3,844 letters have been sent. The documents sent in the first quarter of 1881 numbered 25,405, those in the first quarter of 1882 were 51,718 in number.

The information sought is of every grade of importance, and comprehends a study of education of every kind and in every country, and in past as well as present times. The following details may prove of some interest: In one room, special replies in 1880 were prepared to inquiries about the education of colored people, in State and city schools; courses of study in district schools; free-school systems in the Southern States before the war of 1861-65; the number of public school teachers in the whole country; the educational qualifications of voters in the several States; compulsory school laws of the States; arguments for and against coeducation of the sexes in schools and colleges; city free schools for deaf-mutes; professorships of pedagogics in British universities and in American colleges; and university and polytechnic instruction in Europe as compared with that in this country.

Another room, in addition to its regular work, prepared special replies to inquiries about industrial education, the instruction of civil engineers, the organization and management of technical schools, the early history of public instruction at home and abroad, military schools in this country, laws exempting school property from taxation in the several States, mining engineering, hygiene in schools and colleges, and teacher's examinations. A third room answered special questions about normal schools, city school-systems, courses of study, graded schools, rural schools, and school supervision. Another room prepared elaborate statistics respecting kindergarten work, institutions of learning in the District of Columbia, graduates from professional schools, agricultural colleges, and the value of public school property. The translator prepared special letters on many foreign topics, among which I may mention primary education in Prussia and in Switzerland, compulsory school laws in Europe, military education in Europe, school-houses abroad, school discipline in Germany, organization of the University of France, education before the Reformation, education in Mexico, the medical inspection of schools, needlework teaching in Germany and Holland, education in Hungary, and agricultural instruction in Europe.

WHAT IS EXPECTED OF IT.

This point is partly anticipated in the synopsis of reference already made to the memorial of the educators who asked for the establishment of the bureau. It is obvious from what has been said that an eager, industrious, and enormous profession, such as that engaged in the teaching and supervision of schools and colleges, will inevitably stimulate any office with which it is in contact to a high degree and that the demand on that office may be expected to increase as the labors and difficulties of the profession successively appear. Whenever it has been possible the bureau has tried to anticipate the wishes of the profession, at least partially, and to provide in its collection, printed or manuscript, material for future investigations when they may be called for.

A few out of the many circumstances which confirm the propriety of the methods adopted by the bureau in its work are mentioned here briefly. The following are opinions selected from those of Southern educators:

"Resolved, That we recognize the great value of the work of the United States Commissioner of Education, and respectfully ask our legislators and representatives in Congress to render the Bureau of Education every possible facility for collecting and distributing the important facts and statistics embraced in the circulars and annual report of the Commissioner."—Missouri State Teachers' Association, 1873.

"Those who have to deal practically with this matter of State education know what need there is of some central depot of information, where educational facts from all parts of the world may be gathered, digested, and distributed over the country, as is done by the present Bureau of Education. This is a work too large and costly for any State office, and yet important to all."—Hon. W. H. Ruffner, of Virginia, report for 1873.

"Your bureau can render incalculable aid to the South by elevating the standard of popular educational sentiment, by stimulating and encouraging increased effort, and by furnishing the information widely and imperatively needed. The South needs the aid of your bureau much more than the North."—From the principal of a female college in Alabama.

The testimony from the Northern States is equally emphatic, as the following opinions will show:

"The good already accomplished by the National Bureau of Education is a complete vindication of the wisdom of its establishment."—The National Educational Association, 1875.

"We hereby renew our expression of confidence in this national bureau as an instrumentality for the advancement of education, and we earnestly recommend to Congress the policy of continuing the support of the bureau on a liberal scale, so that its valuable reports may be largely distributed in all parts of the country."—The Association of New England Superintendents, 1875.

"That we commend to the fostering care of Congress the National Bureau of Education, and that we would regard its abolition, as threatened, a calamity to the cause of education."—The Vermont State Teachers' Association, 1876.

"Whether these returns are ever looked at again or not, they will, if the system be continued, have the result of making institutions bring their affairs into order. The making up of this paper on our museum has made us acquainted for the first time with the extent of our collections and with their deficiencies."—From an officer of a prominent university.

Nor is the testimony altogether of native origin. The following is culled from foreign sources:

"The advantages of the establishment of the National Bureau of Education cannot be overestimated. By bringing together the results in each State, educational thought and enterprise have been greatly quickened. Even with its present limited powers the action of the bureau is full of promise for the future."—Francis Adams, author of Free Schools in the United States.

"My friend, Signor R. Mariani, an eminent Italian scholar, has shown me a letter from Signor D. Chilovi, director of the great Biblioteca Nazionale at Florence, requesting him to procure for him, if possible, a copy of the report of your Department on the Libraries of the United States of 1876, a publication to which Mr. Chilovi ascribes great value, both on account of its intrinsic merit and because it is constantly referred to in articles in bibliographical works, which are unintelligible without consulting the volume to which they refer."—From Hon. Geo. P. Marsh, United States minister to Italy.

The French Republic, as is well known, has established a similar bureau in its ministry of education, to which further allusion here is unnecessary. The Swiss Government has also taken steps with the same object, as shown below.

The museum at Zurich possesses a complete collection of all the text-books used in the Swiss schools of all grades; also all the books of reference required by teachers in the preparation of their lessons.

The works on the history and science of education are especially numerous. Further on we find very rich collections of apparatus, (physical, chemical, &c.) school-furniture, charts, maps, globes, gymnastic apparatus, plans of school-buildings, work prepared in the sewing-schools, &c.

In the library there is a complete collection of all the federal and cantonal school laws and regulations, time-tables, cantonal and city reports, and the statutes and reports of the various educational associations. Then comes the foreign section, with the statistics and educational literature of every civilized country in the world. In another corner we find a separate collection of works written by prominent Swiss educators, as Rousseau, Girard, Fellenberg, Scherr, Werli, Pastalozzi, and others. The catalogue closes with the enumeration of the special educational works published by prominent educators in all parts of the world. This latter collection contains the works of two hundred and thirty-seven educators and philosophers.

The following extracts show the influence of the bureau on two other foreign governments:

EGYPT.

"As I have recently been appointed by his highness the Khedive a member of the permanent board of education, and as I am especially charged with supervising the instruction in the English and French languages and selecting text-books and preparing statistics for the ministry of public instruction, I thought that I could not do better than place myself in communication with you, and I should deem it a great favor if you would cause to be sent to me the latest reports that have issued from your bureau, and especially those which contain 'comparative statistics.' It is needless to say that I will most cheerfully reciprocate and keep you provided with the latest statistical information in reference to our educational system which may from time to time be published."

"The Khedive, who reads English and who also takes great personal interest in educational reform, while examining your circular of information in reference to school architecture, was very much pleased with the plan of having windows in two opposite sides of school-rooms, a suggestion which will probably be adopted for the future in Egypt."—From letters from O. I. Barnard, member of the superior council of public instruction.

JAPAN.

"I take the liberty to tell you that our educational museum was founded by the department of education through the proposal of Mr. F. Tanaka, the former minister of education, after his return from America in 1876, where I accompanied him as one of his secretaries and had the honor of seeing you.

"The museum contains the school materials of every description, as well as the natural history objects both native and foreign, and is open free to the public at all seasons. I take this opportunity to express to you our gratitude for the school materials, &c., which you were pleased to present to the educational department through Mr. Philbrick at the close of the Paris exposition, in which they were so admirably displayed. They were a valuable addition to the museum and form one of the attractive parts.

"The educational library, containing educational works, Japanese and foreign, which number now about 40,000 volumes, is annexed to the museum, and the public are also daily admitted to the reading-rooms.

"The later issues of your publications are much called for by the readers, having proved beneficial to them; in case you do not have them all for distribution, such numbers as relate to school architecture, teaching chemistry, and physics, library buildings, relation of education to industry and technical training in American schools, &c., will be very gratefully accepted by us."—Letter from S. Tesima, curator educational museum, Tokio, Japan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR.]

Mr. RANSOM, (at six o'clock and fifteen minutes, p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Last night we agreed to finish the bill to-day.

Mr. RANSOM. It is manifest that we cannot finish the bill to-day. I wish we could.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from North Carolina withdraw his motion until a count is had on the amendment?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There was an agreement to finish the bill to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division has been called for on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 25.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment. I would rather have a record on some of these questions relating to education, and they will get to be serious some time. I should like to have the record as we go along.

Mr. ANTHONY. I voted with the Senator from New Hampshire, but I hope we shall not have the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall not insist on the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I will offer another amendment, which I report by direction of the Committee on Education and Labor—

Mr. RANSOM. If my friend from New Hampshire will pardon me, I dislike to interfere with him, but I must insist on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I thought we had unanimous consent last night to finish the bill to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. RANSOM. I made the motion to adjourn when the Senator did not have the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know that I have yielded the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. I then move, by direction of the Committee on Education and Labor, to add, after line 2008:

That the sum of $50,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated, to be expended by the Commissioner of Education, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the establishment and support of schools at such points in Alaska as may be designated by the said Commissioner of Education.

I send to the desk to be read a communication from the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. BECK. Is that amendment subject to a point of order? If it is I should like to make it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is made upon the amendment, and that ends it.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the point of order?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is not estimated for.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not estimated for, but it is reported from a standing committee, and has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations and by them considered, and, like other educational amendments, rejected.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is general legislation.

Mr. BLAIR. Everything that tends in the direction of the alphabet for the children of this country is general legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. It is general legislation relating to Alaska.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to have printed in connection with the amendment I have offered a letter from the Commissioner of Education, with the communication and message transmitting it to Congress:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:
I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing a letter from the Commissioner of Education, in which the recommendation is made that an appropriation of $50,000 be made for the purpose of education in Alaska.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 15, 1882.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 8, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your consideration, a letter from the Commissioner of Education, in which he recommends that an appropriation of $50,000 be made for the establishment and maintenance of schools in Alaska.

I concur in the recommendation that the appropriation be made.

Very respectfully,
S. J. KIRKWOOD, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, February 4, 1882.

SIR: My attention is called to the provisions of the law determining the purpose and duties of this office, which provides that it shall "collect statistics and facts showing the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories, and to diffuse such information respecting the organization and management of schools and school systems and methods of teaching as shall aid the people of the United States in the establishment and maintenance of efficient school systems and otherwise promote the cause of education throughout the country;" and it is affirmed that I have not yet made any specific recommendation with regard to education in Alaska. I cannot claim to be ignorant of the fact that there is no law either for the protection of life or property or for the establishment of schools in that Territory, nor would I be among those who are indifferent to facts reflecting so unfavorably upon us as a people.

I have sought diligently to gather all information in regard to the education of the children of Alaskans, as will be seen by reference to the several reports of this office. Prior to the purchase of Alaska the Russian Government had schools in portions of that country. When it was transferred to the United States those schools were generally discontinued, and the entire Territory, with few exceptions, has been left without any means of education. From the census of 1880 we learn there are about thirty thousand people in Alaska, and of these it is believed there are about ten thousand children or young people who ought to have some school privileges.

With regard to this people, it may be observed—

(1) That they are docile, peaceful, and have here and there some knowledge of useful industries; are apt in the mechanical arts, and anxious for instruction.

(2) They are self-supporting people, needing no annuities, clothing, or rations from the Government, but do need teachers that they cannot procure for themselves. These teachers should instruct them, not only in letters but in the arts of civilized life and the duties of American citizenship.

(3) If given an opportunity for this kind of instruction for a few years they would, it is believed, make good progress in throwing off tribal relations and in preparation to become an integral portion of the American people, thus contributing to the common wealth and prosperity of the country.

(4) It is well known that civilization in approaching an untutored people may be their destruction by sending its vices before its virtues. It is equally well known that various weeds spring up spontaneously where useful plants must be cultivated, and that not neglect but painstaking care is necessary to the improvement of the human mind.

The people of Alaska having received some measure of aid from the Russian Government, have expected the same from the United States. The natives, already to a limited extent demoralized by the introduction of intemperance and disease, it is thought would by the introduction of schools be prepared better to resist these evils and stand a far better chance to be a permanent and prosperous race.

(5) The development of the fishing interests, the discovery of gold, and the increase of commerce in that region are now calling public attention to it, and the time seems to have arrived when school privileges should be immediately provided. In 1870 Congress appropriated $50,000 for educational purposes in Alaska, which, on account of difficulties of administration at that time, was not expended there. This amount could now be expended there, I am sure, with most satisfactory results.

In accordance, therefore, with these considerations, and in order not to come short of any duty required of me by law, I have the honor to recommend that Congress be requested to appropriate $50,000 for the establishment and maintenance of schools for instruction in letters and industry at such points in Alaska as shall be designated by the honorable Secretary of the Interior.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN EATON, Commissioner.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President—

Mr. RANSOM. I thought I had the floor, and made a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire had the floor at that time, and the Senator from California obtained it afterwards.

Mr. RANSOM. Very well, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. FARLEY. I offer an amendment to the bill, which was reported by the Committee on Claims and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. After line 825 I move to add:

¶ The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to adjust and settle, on the principles of equity, the claims of Charles Murphy, arising under his contract with the United States for the supply of material for the erection of the United States appraiser's stores at San Francisco, California; and the money necessary to pay the amount found due him is hereby appropriated, not exceeding the sum of $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. FARLEY. I wish to say that the amendment simply authorizes the Treasury Department to adjust any claim Mr. Murphy may have and pay him what is due, if anything is found to be due. It has been reported by the chairman of the Committee on Claims. If nothing is found to be his due, nothing will be paid. It strikes me that there can be no impropriety in placing the amendment upon the bill.

I notice the Committee on Appropriations to-day have been very liberal in allowing a good many amendments to go upon the bill that had not as much merit in them as this amendment has.

Mr. LOGAN. They were voted on the bill by the Senate.

Mr. FARLEY. I understand that many of them went in without any serious objection, as for the purchasing of papers and other articles, and no objection was made by anybody. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Claims will explain this amendment. There is a letter from the Treasury Department in regard to it, which I should like to have read if necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What paper does the Senator desire to have read?

Mr. FARLEY. If it is necessary, there is a letter here from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury recommending this proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order. This is a claim, and has not been estimated for. It is true it has been reported by a standing committee of the Senate; and I see that my friend here [Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin] who teaches me the rules is about to insist that it is in order. It may be in order; but if this claim can be put on the bill, then every other claim it seems to me can.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not make the point of order, but allow the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to be read.

Mr. CONGER. If nobody makes the point of order I desire to make it, and have it decided. This would bring in every bill that has been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims as an amendment to this bill, not having been acted upon in the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. This amendment is moved by direction of the Committee on Claims. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I think under Rule 27 it clearly is not liable to a point of order.

Mr. FERRY. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the Committee on Claims moved this as an amendment to the appropriation bill?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. This identical amendment?

Mr. FERRY. That was the point made on me a while ago, and I am a little bit sensitive in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the committee recommended this identical amendment, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, it is not liable to the point of order.

Mr. FARLEY. The Committee on Claims did so recommend it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that Rule 30 may be read. I understand that this is a private claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is a private claim, then it is subject to a point of order under Rule 30, which provides that—

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The Senator from Michigan is correct.

Mr. FARLEY. The point is this: the amendment has been recommended by a standing committee of the body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That makes no difference. If it is a private claim it cannot be received. It is ruled out under Rule 30. The attention of the Chair was not called to that. Rule 30 provides that—

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. After line 2132 I move to add:

For one-half month's extra pay to the employees of the Census Bureau to whom certificates of service were issued after June 1, 1881, $33,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask the Senator if some provision has not been already made for those employés?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it was placed by the Senate in the deficiency bill but was not agreed to by the House. I understand that there is a prospect that it will go through now. It was passed by the Senate but was not concurred in by the House on the deficiency bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It was ruled out in the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. After the word "RECORD," in line 2251, I move to insert "as actually delivered, and nothing else;" so as to read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as actually delivered, and nothing else.

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

Mr. ANTHONY. The amendment is not liable to the point of order. The object of it is too obvious to need any remark. It is merely to make the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what it professes to be, a record of what has been delivered in the two Houses of Congress, and not what has not been delivered. The practice prevails of publishing speeches which have never been delivered, thereby presenting arguments and alleged facts which would not have been allowed to be delivered without objection, and protest, and refutation; and instead of enlightening the public and posterity as to the arguments upon which a measure was carried, it gives arguments that were never adduced.

Mr. LOGAN. In the Senate?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have known it to be done in the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I never did.

Mr. ANTHONY. My former colleague, Governor Sprague, once threatened to inflict upon the Senate a speech in the closing hours of a session, and we unanimously gave him leave to print it.

Mr. LOGAN. That was done by the consent of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was done by the consent of the Senate of course; it could not have been done without the consent of the Senate; and it cannot be done without the consent of the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. If the Senate will suffer me just once more, I rise to offer an amendment; and for fear that my career may be cut short untimely by a point of order, I desire to precede the offering of the amendment by a brief statement, to the effect that there was an Indian agent in the State of California against whom sundry citizens had claims. He requested them to send up their bills receipted. They did so, and instead of paying the money he kept their receipted claims and got credit at the Department. I have here a letter from the auditor's office showing that there is a portion of the money due to these parties, not quite enough to pay them all, but to pay them a large percentage of each claim. This man's account has been audited, but as it stands in another man's name it requires an act of Congress to enable him to draw the money. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point is well taken.

Mr. VANCE. I ask to have the letter of the auditor read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the point of order is made that ends the question and all papers in connection with it.

Mr. VANCE. This is an audited claim.

Mr. SAUNDERS. After line 1014 I move to insert:

To build brick barracks at Fort Omaha, to take the place of the dilapidated wooden buildings heretofore used for said purposes, $60,000.

This appropriation was asked for by General Sheridan. The papers which were placed with the bill cannot be found now, but I have a letter from General Sherman on the same subject. General Sheridan recommended $163,000; General Sherman cuts it down to $60,000. I have a letter from General Sherman showing that he asks for that amount.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the amendment been recommended by any head of Department?

Mr. ALLISON. It has not been estimated for in any Book of Estimates.

Mr. HALE. Nor by the head of a Department.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is recommended by the War Department.

Mr. ALLISON. It is recommended by a sort of letter or indorsement of one kind or another.

Mr. VANCE. I move that the Senate adjourn, if that motion is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order while the Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I should like to have the letter of General Sherman read, at any rate.

Mr. HARRIS. What became of the point of order upon the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. The point of order is that it is not estimated for by the head of a Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that is so, it is of course not in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is estimated for by the War Department.

Mr. ALLISON. By letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is ruled out.

Mr. BUTLER. After line 2127, I move to add:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the officers, clerks, and employés of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia, or their legal representatives, the amount due them under the joint resolution of Congress of February 28, 1867, $46,846.86.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. It is recommended by a standing committee.

Mr. ALLISON. But it is a private claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the Chair decided the point of order to be well taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; it is a private claim.

Mr. BUTLER. After line 746, I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amount of pay and allowances due to James W. Schaumburg, in accordance with the law stated by the United States Supreme Court in the case of James W. Schaumburg, appellant, versus the United States, of October sessions, 1880, numbered 274, the sum of $11,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a private claim, and is ruled out of order.

Mr. BUTLER. The point had not been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order was made. The Chair saw the Senator from Iowa rise to make the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I submit that the court cannot take notice of that.

Mr. SEWELL. After line 1217 I move to add:

For improving the road from Beverly, New Jersey, to the national cemetery near that city, $3,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has it been recommended?

Mr. ALLISON. If it is estimated for by the head of a Department, I suppose it is in order.

Mr. SEWELL. Such things could not possibly be estimated for. I introduced the amendment regularly and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SEWELL. I am sorry the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations raises the point of order. Will the Chair allow me to state that in line 1214 of the bill the following provision received the approval of the committee?

For the road from Fort Scott to the national cemetery, Kansas: For the completion of the roadway from Fort Scott, Kansas, to the national cemetery near that city, $3,000.

That received the approval of the committee, and I do not see why they should rule my amendment out, which is for a similar purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa insist on his point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. Is it a road to a national cemetery?

Mr. SEWELL. It is a road to a national cemetery.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. SEWELL.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I make the point of order. I do not think it is fair to rule out one person and let another in on the point of order. The amendment was not referred to the Committee on Appropriations that I have had any knowledge of.

Mr. SEWELL. I will state to the Senator from West Virginia that it was regularly referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I cannot help it. Senators all around me have been shut out on the point of order, and it is not fair to let another one when his amendment is objectionable on the same ground.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I knew the Senator would.

Mr. ALLISON. But this was estimated for, and I thought at the moment it was as fairly in order as anything in the bill. I will stick to the point my colleague makes.

Mr. SEWELL. I offered the amendment yesterday in the Senate, with the statement that I should renew it to-day, and the Senator from Iowa intimated that he would not make the point of order against it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will state the facts, as I was in the chair at the time. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] offered an amendment in regard to a road to a cemetery in his State. After some question the point of order was not insisted upon, and the amendment was adopted. Thereupon the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] offered his amendment, and it is the fact that he was assured if he would not insist upon it at that time he could offer it at a subsequent period. The Senator from New Jersey is correct.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. By whom was he assured?

Mr. McMILLAN. The RECORD shows what took place.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Who had a right to agree that the point of order should not be made?

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senate. I understood at the time that it was more because of the subject-matter to which it related than anything else, it being the improvement of the approaches to a national cemetery. I think that was the reason why the Senator from Georgia succeeded in his amendment, and I thought the Senator from Iowa at the time made his objection to the Senator from New Jersey more because he wanted to economize time and get through with the body of the bill than because of his intention to object to it at a subsequent period. Those are the facts as I understand them.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that the Senator from Georgia put in an amendment at this point, and then the Senator from New Jersey rose with a view of also adding an amendment. I then stated to the Senator from New Jersey that I trusted he would not offer it yesterday until the committee amendments were disposed of, and I may have led him to believe that I should not object to it if offered to-day. If so, I shall not object.

Mr. SEWELL. That was my understanding.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to inquire by what right Senators farm out points of order on this floor, and agree that one Senator may offer an amendment and another one shall not. I do not recognize the propriety of such farming out.

Mr. SEWELL. If the point of order is not made, then I ask for the question on agreeing to my amendment.

Mr. BECK. The point of order having been made, I have been looking over the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. BECK. Yes; the Senator from West Virginia has made the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I thought it was not fair, when Senators on this side of the Chamber all around me had been shut out on points of order, to allow this amendment to go in.

Mr. HOAR. I object to debate. If the point of order is made it must be settled without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the statement of the Senator from Indiana does the Senator from West Virginia insist upon his point of order?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I propose to say whether I made the point of order or not, notwithstanding the Senator from Massachusetts objects to it.

Mr. HOAR. What is the question? I should like to have the question stated before it is debated.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am going to state the point of order, which I have a right to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the point of order. The Chair has permitted the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Iowa to state what was the understanding.

Mr. HOAR. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order raised on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, and the Chair supposes the Senator from West Virginia is stating why he made the point of order with a view to withdrawing it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am stating what the point of order is, and I am certainly in order when I do that. The chairman of the committee knows whether I am correct or not when I state that this amendment has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day, as the rule requires.

Mr. SEWELL. That is a mistake on the part of the Senator from West Virginia. It was presented several days ago, was printed and laid on the tables of Senators, and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. May I be allowed to say a word? The Senator from Indiana, having been in the chair yesterday, stated his recollection. I will read from the RECORD. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] offered an amendment, which was agreed to. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] then said:

I will say to the chairman that a similar amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia has just been adopted, of which no one complained. However, I have no objection to letting it go over until the amendments of the committee shall have been acted upon.

Mr. FERRY. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia was an amendment to a committee amendment. It was not strictly in order, but being an amendment to an amendment, on a generous construction it would be in order. But the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is entirely new, being offered to the text of the bill, and if new propositions are to be taken up I have an amendment to offer. I think if the Senator from New Jersey will waive his amendment until we get through with the amendments of the committee we shall facilitate business.

Mr. SEWELL. I waive it for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

So that the Senator from Georgia submitted an amendment to an amendment, but the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey being an original amendment there was, in fact, no agreement made according to the RECORD. There was no understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment is not moved by a standing or select committee of the Senate, nor is it in pursuance of the estimate of the head of one of the Departments, and it will increase the appropriations in the bill. It is liable to the point of order, of course.

Mr. SEWELL. There is no point of order now insisted upon, I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course if there is no point of order made the question is on agreeing to the amendment. Does the Senator from West Virginia withdraw his point of order?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, sir; I have not withdrawn it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. Was I mistaken in supposing that the Senator from Iowa stated that this was estimated for by the head of the Executive Department?

Mr. ALLISON. I thought for the moment that it was; but I do not think it is estimated for.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I quite agree with the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. MAHONE. After line 1551 I move to insert:

For extension of quay wall, $255,000.
For chain and cordage store, $36,000.
For railroad extension, $10,000.
For marine railway, $100,000.
For timber-sheds numbered 34 and 35, $71,000.

I wish to say that this amendment is offered in conformity with an estimate of the Navy Department. This work is deemed necessary at the Norfolk navy-yard.

Mr. BAYARD. From what committee does the amendment come?

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was the amendment reported by a committee?

Mr. MAHONE. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was referred as an "amendment intended to be proposed." It is not reported by any standing or select committee. It is subject to the point of order.

Mr. PLUMB. After line 2008 I move to add:

And not to exceed $20,000 of the amount appropriated in this paragraph may be applied, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the procuring of statistics in relation to mines and mining, and in making chemical analyses of iron, coal, and oil.

The amendment does not increase the appropriation. It simply diverts $20,000 of the $220,000 appropriated in the paragraph for the purpose of providing for these statistics, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BECK. What is the amount?

Mr. PLUMB. Not to exceed $20,000.

Mr. BECK. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add at the end of the first section of the bill:

In the payment to one hundred and twenty supervisors of registration in Baltimore, for services during the year 1882, not exceeding $5 per day for not over forty-two days' service each, deducting any sum they may have received, the sum necessary being hereby appropriated.

Mr. BECK. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add to the bill:

In additional compensation to the consul of the United States at Manila, $1,000.

That is putting upon the same footing substantially the consul at Manila with the consul-general at Siam, by the amendment adopted some time ago.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken. Salaries cannot be increased on this bill when the point of order is raised.

Mr. CHILCOTT. After line 2331, I move to add:

Provided, That the wages paid printers, bookbinders, pressmen, and stereotypers employed in the Government Printing Office shall be the same as paid them prior to March 4, 1877; and all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this are hereby repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment. It is legislation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Changing existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. LOGAN. At the end of line 242, I offer an amendment which is not an appropriation, but merely a direction. I move to insert:

That the Supervising Architect of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to make a report through the Secretary of the Treasury to the next session of Congress, first, as to a suitable plot of ground belonging to the United States upon which a suitable building can be erected, to be built of brick, to be used for the safe-keeping of the records of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments which are not required for constant reference; second, the probable cost of such building, with plans and specifications for the same.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator to say "a suitable fire-proof building."

Mr. LOGAN. I will modify the amendment so as to say "a suitable fire-proof building."

Mr. MORRILL. I make the point of order that that is an amendment which has not been presented by any committee.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not make any appropriation; it does not change any law. It is not subject to a point of order. It merely adds to the appropriation for the preservation and repair of buildings a direction that a certain plan shall be reported to the next session of Congress. That is all there is of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection to the amendment on the point of order.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. It is not subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not increase any appropriation. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 23, noes 17.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. After line 825 I move to add:

That the Architect of the Capitol is authorized and directed to pay the employees under his charge the pay deducted from them for the time lost by them, respectively, during the obsequies of the late President, James A. Garfield, in the month of September, 1881.

That is proposed pursuant to the recommendation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. At what time was anything deducted from these employes?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. During the obsequies of the late President Garfield.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Were they not paid?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. They were not paid.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is strange.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I have an amendment which I hope the chairman of the committee will not object to. I move to insert after the amendment just adopted:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay T. B. Kelleher the sum of $198, it being the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger, from November 5, 1881, to February 1, 1882.

I will simply state to the chairman of the committee that that is for service performed by a person who acted as a messenger of the Senate for that time, as certified by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and who received the pay of a laborer only. It is the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger.

Mr. ALLISON. He was a very worthy servant, I have no doubt, but it is a private claim, and I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CALL. I know the Committee on Appropriations do not recognize the rights of any Senator here. They cut us off, disfranchise us, but still the only right we have is to offer amendments. At the end of line 2545 I move to add:

That the compensation of the assistant postmaster and mail-carrier of the Senate shall be $2,238 per annum, the same to date from July 1, 1882.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CALL. I should like to know what point of order is raised on that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. It changes existing laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is altering the law.

Mr. ALLISON. It increases the salary of the assistant postmaster. I am very sorry to make the point of order, but I cannot help it.

Mr. CALL. I do not intend to discuss the question, but I will simply say that under such a ruling there can be no law passed by Congress prescribing the compensation the Senate shall pay one of its own officers. But I am not one of your long speakers, and I shall not debate it. At the end of line 523 I move to add:

The jurisdiction of the Light-House Board is extended over the Saint John's River, Florida, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to expend any part of the money herein appropriated for light-houses or lighting rivers which shall not exceed the amount required for the purpose of the appropriation.

I will state to the chairman of the committee that that does not increase the appropriation at all, and it is scarcely objectionable upon any substantial point of order. I will take that if I cannot get anything more.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that changes existing law, extending the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board over a new river.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MORGAN. I have waited to offer an amendment to the bill when the Senate might get through with all its other amendments, as a sort of coup de grâce upon the bill, or rather as an act of grace. I have undertaken to do that which is everybody's business and therefore nobody's business.

I have not the backing of any committee, but I have the recommendation of a former President of the United States, Mr. Hayes, and the recommendation of all the officials in the District of Columbia connected with the subject of the preservation of life and property against fire. I think that it is probable now that we should be making some fire-escapes for ourselves, if for nobody else, upon this very large bill, which, however, I think is a very good bill. There is a great deal in it that is very meritorious, and very little in it indeed which is not proper. I have been urged by the Superintendent of the Public Printing and by various medical gentlemen of eminence of this city to present an amendment, which I submitted and had referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and which they have considered. After line 2097 I move to add:

For the erection of suitable fire-escapes, and stand-pipes and other facilities for extinguishing fire in the Government Printing Office, Freedmen's Hospital, Providence Hospital, the Reform School, Howard University, Children's Hospital, and the Government Hospital for the Insane, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Treasury, the health officer of the District of Columbia, and the chief engineer of the fire department of the District of Columbia.

That amendment has been well considered by all those gentlemen who have connection with this subject, and who are interested in it, and it would be a very deplorable thing if some of these days we should find at the Public Printing Office, which seems to be liable to spontaneous combustion really because of the immense amount of paper and oil there, that a number of the employes, many of whom are women, had been destroyed because we have not furnished the means of escape from this enormous building.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask what buildings besides the Government Printing Office are included?

Mr. MORGAN. A series of hospitals.

Mr. HARRISON. Those are private hospitals.

Mr. MORGAN. Some of them are private hospitals.

Mr. HARRISON. Providence Hospital is. I did not hear the names of the others.

Mr. MORGAN. If there is any objection on account of any of these hospitals being private and not within the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States I am content to have them stricken out.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will strike out the buildings about which our responsibility is questionable. I think the Senate will agree to the amendment if properly limited.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

For the erection of suitable fire-escapes and stand-pipes and other facilities for extinguishing fire in the Government Printing Office, the Freedmen's Hospital, Providence Hospital, the Reform School, Howard University, Children's Hospital and the Government Hospital for the Insane, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Treasury, the health officer of the District of Columbia, and the chief engineer of the fire department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is no doubt about any of those institutions. I think they are all supported by the public.

Mr. MORGAN. Really, I do not know.

Mr. ANTHONY. Congress makes appropriations for all of them.

Mr. ALLISON. Nearly all of them.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think quite all.

Mr. ALLISON. If this amendment is going through, the sum ought to be expended under some other supervision than that suggested.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought that was the best that could possibly be suggested, the Architect of the Treasury, the health officer of the District of Columbia, and the chief engineer of the fire department of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Alabama if this matter has been referred to any committee or reported upon by any?

Mr. MORGAN. No; it has been under the consideration of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for some time.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask what is the character of the appliances?

Mr. MORGAN. The chief of the fire department reports that there are some three hundred different varieties of fire-escapes, and of course we cannot anticipate which one will be selected. There are some of them that I suppose are very valuable. The board of course will select the best. I think it is a matter that we should give our attention to. I feel apprehensive about this matter.

Mr. ALLISON. Why does the Senator fix the amount at $20,000?

Mr. MORGAN. I have an estimate from the Public Printer that four fire-escapes to his building, which are necessary, would cost $5,000, and I suppose that the other fire-escapes would probably cover the amount of $20,000, including the stand-pipes, which are very essential for the extinguishment of fire. Here is a report showing that if we had had two stand-pipes the Patent Office could have been saved.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think that we ought to extend this appropriation to private property. If it extends to Government institutions that is well enough, but I understand there are several buildings mentioned here that are not Government buildings at all. If the Senator will limit it to those which are really Government institutions, belonging to the Government, which we are under obligations to provide for, I shall make no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. If I knew what to strike out I would do so.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not think there is one of the institutions named which is not supported to a very large extent, if not entirely by appropriations from the Treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. I admit there are public appropriations made, as at Providence Hospital, for certain wards which are public wards, but still it is not public property.

Mr. MORGAN. Still it risks the lives of people who cannot escape.

Mr. HARRISON. You might as well put a fire-escape on a hotel here at public expense.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can afford to make appropriations for the support of these institutions I think we can afford to furnish fire-escapes, so as to secure the lives of the inmates in the contingency of fire.

Mr. SEWELL. I would suggest to the Senator from Alabama that this should not be done through the Architect of the Treasury. He is not an executive officer. Why not do it through the commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MORGAN. There seemed to be a general concurrence of the officers connected with this subject that these three officers were the proper persons to whom to intrust this matter.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the matter ought to go over until next December, when we may have a more thorough examination. I am told all about me that it has been before the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and if it is a matter of such essential importance it seems to me they would have reported in favor of it long before this time. I do not see why these committees neglected this matter if it was so very meritorious.

Mr. MORGAN. I have never seen such a mass of recommendations for any one project before brought to the attention of the Senate. Every official in this city of any consequence at all seems to have certified in favor of it, and the President sent a special message asking that this might be done. We shall throw away no money by voting this appropriation.

Mr. CONGER. Congress has no power to authorize anybody to go into private buildings to make any of these erections. There are two of these buildings under the control of the Government, the Printing Office and the Hospital for the Insane. All the others have merely annual appropriations because Congress thinks it well to encourage them. Congress has no power whatever over them, either to put in fire-escapes or the stand-pipes or anything of that kind; and when Congress has given to each of these institutions what it thinks proper to aid and assist them and pay them for taking in these hospitals those whom the Government sends there it has done all that it has any right to do there. If this could be confined to the Printing Office and the Insane Asylum, which belong to the Government and are managed by it, I do not see any impropriety in it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will modify my amendment to that extent, to apply to the public Printing Office and the Insane Asylum.

Mr. HOAR. And make the amount $10,000.

Mr. CONGER. The Reform School ought to be included.

Mr. MORGAN. If any Senator, then, desires to put in any additional building that will be a subject of discussion.

Mr. PLUMB. A similar proposition was before the Committee on Appropriations and came to the sub-committee having charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Two or three questions came up. One was in regard to the patents that might be involved possibly in the purchases recommended or sought to be made. The committee thought on the whole that was getting into deep water, and they would not venture on anything of that kind, which might seem to make a discrimination in favor of one patent or against another or might bring the Government into litigation about a patent or into the purchase of a patent without knowing precisely what it was doing. For that reason it was not favorably considered.

Now, I think on the whole unless some other person desires to speak on this amendment, I had better make the point of order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That point is no more serious, I take it, in connection with this matter of fire-escapes, than as to the patents in regard to lighted buoys, and yet your committee makes appropriations for lighted buoys. Fire-escapes are just as necessary as lighted buoys.

Mr. PLUMB. The operations of this world will be somewhat unequal until somebody who knows more than somebody else gets control of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no information about patents or who has a patent, but Mr. Cronin, the chief of the fire department, says there are about three hundred contrivances in the way of fire-escapes. I suppose from that number they can certainly select the best. It is a matter of utter indifference to me which they select so that it is good.

This amendment was drawn up because these three officers were supposed to be men who would not squander the public money or would not engage in the sale of a patent in a provision for this very necessary matter.

Mr. INGALLS. There are 1,400 employes in the Government Printing Office—men, women, and children. They are employed very largely in the night-time. Vast amounts of inflammable material are stored there. Gas is burned during the greater portion of the night. The building is of fragile architecture, and if there is no opportunity for escape in case of conflagration I am surprised, and I should regard the refusal of Congress to make provision for such a disaster as cruel and inhuman neglect.

The same may be said about Saint Elizabeth, the Government Hospital for the Insane, where vast numbers of the most unfortunate of human beings are held in restraint, and I should say about that, that if in case of conflagration there was no opportunity of escape from the dangers of destruction by fire, the Government was neglecting one very serious and important duty. With regard to Providence Hospital, the Reform School, and the other institutions named, while, to a certain extent, they are private institutions, yet they are supported largely by public appropriations. Take the Providence Hospital. I venture to say that at least one-half of the patients that are there maintained are supported at the expense of the Government.

I should regret very much, while I believe that the point of order may be well presented to this appropriation, to have it enforced, and I hope the Senator from Alabama, if there is any objection to the institutions named, will so modify his amendment as at least to correct the great neglect that exists in regard to the Government Printing Office and the Hospital for the Insane.

Mr. MORGAN. I have so modified the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order. If the Senator from Alabama desires to offer another amendment, that can be considered when it comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama modifies his amendment so as to confine it to the Insane Asylum and the Printing Office, and reducing the appropriation to $10,000.

Mr. FRYE. I hope for the sake of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] there will not be a fire in the Printing Office or Insane Asylum within the next year.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Chair will rule on the point of order, and if it should be adverse, I will take the liberty of asking the opinion of the Senate on that question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] insist on his point of order?

Mr. PLUMB. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS. Let me understand what the amendment now proposed is.

Mr. MORGAN. Ten thousand dollars to be applied to the Government Printing Office and the Insane Asylum.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that we adopt his original amendment. As the question is to be submitted to the Senate, I trust it will be submitted on the amendment he first offered to include all. ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been modified.

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The Acting Secretary read the amendment as modified.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My colleague on the committee consents that we shall vote directly on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is withdrawn.
Mr. ALLISON. Then I move to amend the amendment by inserting the Public Printer and the Superintendent of the Insane Asylum. Let us have people who are responsible for the buildings.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PLUMB. It may be necessary to have fire-escapes, but that necessity has suddenly occurred to somebody, and my own belief is now, exculpating everybody here about the matter, that there is a patent interest at the bottom of this, a great deal more than a humanitarian interest. That is the propelling power of this tremendous interest in human life. I do not say the patentee has not a right to pursue his interest and get somebody to adopt his patent, but what I do say is that when such a proposition comes in that kind of way it is not entitled to that sentimental consideration which it would be entitled to if responding to a desire to save the possible consequences of a conflagration in a building so badly situated as the Government Printing Office.

But there are a number of ways in which things may be accomplished, and it is singular that not one single method of substantive legislation has been introduced tending to accomplish this purpose, and that proper opportunity has not been given to investigate the question.

I do not think the Public Printer is necessarily the proper person to be consulted because the Public Printing Office is to be affected by the amendment, but it ought to be submitted to those persons who are best calculated, by their skill and their judgment, to pass on the question, and who are the furthest removed from any possibility of the suggestion that they may have some ulterior purpose in view in the purchase of a patent which might possibly warp their judgment.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are abundant fire-escapes that have no patent connected with them. If we have neglected—and I am ashamed to hear that we have—these buildings in this manner up to this time, let us have some sort of ordinary stairway such as we put up on our factories, put up at once wherever there is occasion for it. I am ashamed. It is discreditable to us that that Printing Office, with 1,400 employes, blazing with gas from top to bottom, filled with oil and combustibles, should have no fire-escape. I do not care if they should find that the best fire-escape involved a patent fee of five or ten dollars for each building or each escape, let them take it; but there are many ways of putting up a strong plain staircase. I am not afraid of patents; the patentee generally has something better than anybody else, and if so we ought to buy it.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope the shame and indignation of the Senator from Connecticut will outlast this session of Congress, and will extend to some other employes of the Government besides those residing in Washington, and will manifest itself in such a way that other public buildings in the country not supplied with these patent appliances may be so supplied.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that instead of adding the superintendents of the two institutions who are not architects, he add the Architect of the Capitol to the commission that is to determine how this shall be done.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Hayes sent in a message here on the 10th of December, 1877, announcing that he had appointed a commission under a resolution of Congress to investigate this subject. That commission made a report to him which he laid before the Congress of the United States. That commission consisted of Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas L. Casey, Corps of Engineers; J. G. Hill, Supervising Architect of the Treasury; and Edward Clark, Architect of the Capitol Extension. There cannot be any stronger admonitions of the necessity of action than is contained in that report. Afterward, it seems, the House of Representatives passed a resolution raising a commission, and that commission made an additional report on the 15th of March, 1882, a very recent report, in which the whole subject is gone into, taking in every school-building in the District of Columbia, the Public Printing Office, and all the buildings belonging to the Government that are not supplied with fire-escapes and stand-pipes to furnish water to extinguish fire.

This subject has been under official investigation for a long time. It is not for me to say why action has not been taken on it, but when this request came to me that I should move an amendment of this kind, I could not refuse my assent to the proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I will modify my amendment in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee. I move to strike out the last two names and insert General M. C. Meigs and the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. MORGAN. I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified. The Chair does not know, unless he is advised, that the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir, it is withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama as modified; which will be read. The Acting Secretary read as follows:

For the erection of suitable fire-escapes, and stand-pipes and other facilities for extinguishing fire in the Government Printing Office and the Government Hospital for the Insane, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Treasury, General M. C. Meigs, and the Architect of the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROOME. I offer an amendment to come in immediately after the one just adopted:

That the Architect of the Capitol, the Architect of the Treasury Department, and the chief engineer of the fire department of the District of Columbia are hereby constituted a board to examine the following public buildings in the District of Columbia, and if, in their judgment, any additional facilities are necessary for the extinguishment of fire or safety of the lives of the occupants, they are hereby authorized to provide the same, namely:

The Treasury Department, Winder's Building, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, United States Patent Office, United States Post Office, city post-office, Pension Office, Agricultural Department, Department of Justice, Coast Survey, Hydrographic Office, Smithsonian Institution, Howard University, Bureau of Education, National Medical Museum, Naval Observatory, Quartermaster-General's Office, Paymaster-General's Office, Statistical Bureau, public schools, Reform School of the District of Columbia, court-house, Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum, and Columbian Institution for the Deaf and Dumb.

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the supervision and direction of said board.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. This is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand from the Secretary that a formal vote was not taken on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out the words from line 430 to 447, inclusive, on pages 18 and 19, in relation to the extension of the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board over certain rivers. I ask that those words be considered as stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment just stated by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the vote on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole shall be taken in gross, or are there some upon which a separate vote is desired?

Mr. CONGER. I ask a separate vote on the amendment striking out this clause on page 22, being lines 507 and 508:

For the erection of a light-house in Little Traverse Bay, Michigan, $15,000.

Mr. FERRY. That was not stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not stricken out.

Mr. FERRY. The amendment of the committee to strike it out was negatived.

Mr. CONGER. Then I ask for a separate vote on striking out this clause, commencing in line 484:

For the establishment of a light and range-beacons at the turn of the channel through Maumee Bay, Ohio, $20,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any other amendment reserved?

Mr. BROWN. I wish to give notice that I shall ask for separate action on the amendment in reference to the appointments to office in the Territory of Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator state the page?

Mr. BROWN. I do not remember it; but it is the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. HOAR. Page 32, after line 756.

Mr. MORRILL. I propose to move on page 11 to strike out the amendment agreed to in Committee of the Whole and other words from line 250 to line 255.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. What amendment does the Senator wish a separate vote on?

Mr. MORRILL. I reserve that because I want to make a motion to strike out the whole.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to have a vote upon an adopted amendment of the committee on page 38, line 907, which struck out the provision giving $250 to the Government actuary; also on an adopted amendment on page 58 which gave $48,000 for the erection of a quartermaster and commissary depot at Saint Paul. Also, I propose to offer a motion to raise the appropriation for the civil-service commission from $15,000 to $25,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That also will be a separate amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish a separate vote on the rejected amendment which I moved after line 2008.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If an amendment was rejected it is not to be acted on now. It can be offered again.

Mr. BLAIR. I will offer it.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask a separate vote on the committee amendment on page 3, line 44, relative to the Baltimore post-office.

Mr. CALL. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment of the committee on line 519, page 22, striking out the following clause:

To commence the construction of a light-house at Mosquito Inlet, on the Atlantic seaboard of the State of Florida, $30,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on all the amendments not reserved.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, not reserved for separate votes, were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reserved will be acted on in order. The first one will be read.

The PRINCIPAL LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out lines 484, 485, and 486, in these words:

For the establishment of a light and range beacons at the turn of the channel through Maumee Bay, Ohio, $20,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring with the amendment striking out the clause.

Mr. ALLISON. That is more important than several amendments the Senate has put in, and I do not think I shall make much fight upon it. I know perfectly well the Senate will overrule the committee.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, at the end of line 756, to insert:

The governor of the Territory of Utah is hereby authorized to appoint officers in the said Territory to fill vacancies which may be caused by a failure to elect on the first Monday in August, 1882, in consequence of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, to hold their offices until their successors are elected and are qualified under the provisions of said act.

Mr. BROWN. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is general legislation, and that it is not germane to the objects of this provision of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No point of order can be taken in the Senate; it must be taken in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWN. Can we not make the point of order in the Senate? I do not so understand the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has decided that repeatedly at this session. The point must be taken as soon as the amendment is offered in Committee of the Whole, and if an amendment has been made in Committee of the Whole and no point of order is taken to it, the point cannot be made in the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. Simply because it was not made in time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course.

Mr. BROWN. That being the ruling of the Chair, I ask for a vote. I desire to say only a few words. The recital is that the registration that was necessary in the Territory of Utah was not made on account of what is known as the Edmunds bill, and that at a certain future period the present officers will go out of office. The proposition now is to permit the governor of Utah to appoint all the officers of the Territory, as I understand it, until their successors are elected and qualified.

Mr. HOAR. All those who do go out, no others.

Mr. BROWN. All go out, as I understand. It amounts to the right to appoint the whole of them, and until their successors are elected by law and qualified. I do not know when the commission that has gone out there will authorize an election or will make any provisions for an election. If the governor of Utah is permitted to make appointments until such elections are had they may not be had in years, and the right of election by the people of the Territory will be defeated by a measure of this character. If there was something in this amendment that limited this duration to some definite time and required the commissioners sent there to institute a government by election within a reasonable time, I would not have the objection.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think my honorable friend heard the explanation which I made when the amendment was offered, or the letter from the judges of the Territory. This amendment was proposed unanimously by the Judiciary Committee, in consequence of a letter brought to their attention by the Senator from New York, [Mr. LAPHAM,] and the mode of reaching the difficulty was one suggested by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] although I actually held the pen that put it into shape myself. The point is this: These commissioners go on and provide for a new election of the Territorial Legislature forthwith; that is their duty; and that Territorial Legislature in its turn is to provide for elections for all these county and other subordinate Territorial officers. Until that action is had by the Territorial Legislature elected in the new way under election officers appointed by the commissioners the old law would go on; but the Edmunds bill vacated every elective office in the Territory. The effect of that was that there were no officers who could make a registration in May. The August election was to be an election by voters registered in May. Therefore there is not a legally qualified voter in the Territory of Utah to vote next Monday. The effect is that all the offices in that Territory become vacant, and there is a time of absolute and total lawlessness, which is to be next Monday unless the Government can provide for it. There is not a register of deeds; there is not a local county assessor, or collector, or I suppose a constable—though I am not sure about that, no auditor of accounts. This amendment provides, without suspending or delaying the operation of the Edmunds bill a moment, that the governor may appoint these officers temporarily to hold until the new Legislature comes in under the Edmunds bill, which will then provide, according to the provisions of that law, for a new election.

Mr. BROWN. What length of time does the Senator from Massachusetts suppose it will take to organize the government?

Mr. HOAR. Probably two or three months.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection, then, to the amendment, with a proviso that the appointees shall not hold more than three months.

Mr. BAYARD. It amounts to this: it merely is intended to keep that Territory from almost anarchy until the next election.

Mr. BROWN. To that I do not object, but I do object to the delay that may be practiced by the commission. It may be six months or twelve months or two years. There ought to be some time beyond which these appointees shall not hold.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will make it six or eight months there will be time enough to cover it.

Mr. BAYARD. It is understood to be a mere temporary appointment to keep the machinery of government going.

Mr. BROWN. But in fact it may be years before there will be any election.

Mr. HOAR. Congress will be in session in four months from this day.

Mr. BROWN. I want some time fixed beyond which they shall hold. I am willing to say six months.

Mr. BAYARD. You had better make it eight months, and you can reach it almost any time.

Mr. BROWN. If the commissioners have gone there with an honest intention to organize a government as soon as it can be done, I know that it can be done in six months.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me to be an impossibility to suppose that those officers will not exercise that duty, and that there will not be a Legislature in Utah. The Senator's idea supposes that there will be no election for a Legislature in Utah under the Edmunds bill at all.

Mr. BROWN. If you authorize the governor to appoint all these officers, and the commissioners choose to delay it, there is no power behind them to compel them to act in a year.

Mr. HOAR. I will consent to an amendment adding:

Provided, That the term of said officers shall in no case exceed eight months.

Mr. BROWN. I will then submit to that. I want some reasonable time within which the people shall have the right to organize government there. I will suggest that the usual provision in States, and I suppose in Territories, where no election is made to fill an office, is that the incumbent remains in office until his successor is elected and qualified. Is there anything in Utah in conflict with that?

Mr. HOAR. The difficulty with that is this: the present officers are, very many of them, polygamists, and the Edmunds act provides that no polygamist shall continue to hold office. Therefore the present officers do not hold there.

Mr. BROWN. How do you ascertain that a man is a polygamist?

Mr. HOAR. The judges of the Territory are unanimous in sending this to us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. On page 11, in line 252, after the word "dollars," this clause was inserted as in Committee of the Whole:

The same to be expended on plans to be made and approved by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out that proposed amendment and other lines preceding it, commencing in line 250.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on concurring in the amendment of the Committee of the Whole. The Senator can afterward move to strike out. The question is on concurring in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was to strike out, after line 706, the following words:

For the purchase of books and serials for use in the office of the Government actuary, $250, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is a comparatively small amount. The Government actuary, who is a very valuable officer in my opinion, has furnished his own library, which is a pretty good one in that line, and he desires to have the Government do a little something toward it. He has to purchase some books of computation which are valuable and necessary in his work. I should like to have the committee let him have this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment striking out this clause.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the chairman will allow it to be retained.

The amendment was non-concurred in; there being on a division—ayes 16, noes 23.

The next reserved amendment was, after the word "promote," in line 2659, to insert "the efficiency of the," and after "civil service" to strike out "reform;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to carry out the provisions of section 1753 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to promote the efficiency of the civil service and official accountability, $15,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I propose to strike out, in line 2660, after the word "accountability," the word "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," so as to give that civil-service commission, if it is organized under the statute providing for it, the $25,000 they used to have, and the $25,000 that the President recommends.

Mr. LOGAN. Why do they want $25,000? How can they expend it?

Mr. ALLISON. That is not in order now. Let us concur in the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was trying to find it.

Mr. BLAIR. The next one in order is, after line 2008, page 82.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any amendment of the committee that the Senator from Connecticut wishes concurrence in here?

Mr. HAWLEY. No, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know but that there is some misunderstanding. I asked for a separate vote upon the amendments which I introduced which were rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They can be moved after the reserved amendments are disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. I think there is no other reserved amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; there are more.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The next reserved amendment is, in the clause making appropriation for the post-office and court-house at Baltimore, Maryland, after the word "dollars," in line 44, to strike out:

And the same shall be built of white marble, provided the cost shall be no greater than if constructed of granite.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the chairman of the committee to allow that amendment to be rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it go.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any further reserved amendments?

Mr. CALL. I had one reserved in line 519.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The Committee of the Whole struck out the following clause, beginning in line 519:

To commence the construction of a light-house at Mosquito Inlet, on the Atlantic seaboard of the State of Florida, $30,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment striking out these words.

Mr. CALL. That is a light upon the Atlantic coast. It was obviously erroneously stricken out. The whole commerce of the country from the Mississippi River and the Gulf to the Atlantic passes there.

The amendment was concurred in, there being on a division—ayes 22, noes 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved amendments are disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out from line 250 down to and including line 255, as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to erect a suitable brick building to be used for storing, packing, and shipping seed, $25,000, the same to be expended on plans to be made and approved by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and the Architect of the Capitol.

Undoubtedly we have now the most brilliant Commissioner of Agriculture that we have had for many years, and I trust it will not be long before the grand old Commonwealth of Massachusetts will be honored by having him promoted to a Cabinet position; but so far as this appropriation for a public building is concerned, it will be seen that there is no larger amount of seeds appropriated for this year than last. I cannot, therefore, conceive how it can be possible that this new building should be wanted. I know that we have added to the force of that Department this last year nineteen clerks and other employés, but we have not increased the amount of seeds to be distributed, and I therefore am emboldened to make this motion.

Now, I do it for another reason. I do not desire that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall have the right to locate that building on the grounds there wherever he may please. I think there has been one building placed there now in defiance of any public authority, and without the consideration of a standing statute which provides that before any new buildings for the use of the United States are commenced the plans and full estimates therefor shall be prepared and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Secretary of the Interior, and the cost of each building shall not exceed the amount of such estimate.

It seems to me that this may well be postponed until we meet here again in three or four months. I therefore hope the item will be stricken out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the Senate will not agree to the motion. The Agricultural Department needs this building badly and the House and the Senate Committees on Appropriations have agreed to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to strike out the clause from line 250 to 255, inclusive.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 18.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope my colleague on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will not insist on that.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think this ought to go in without further consideration. It will leave that ground entirely as it is now, all sprinkled over and nearly spoiled by several of the buildings put up there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are called for. The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. MAXEY. My colleague [Mr. COKE] left the Chamber a few moments ago indisposed. He is paired.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 22; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SLATER. I move an amendment, on page 74, to strike out, commencing with the word "provided," in line 1807, to the end of line 1817.

The Acting Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

Provided further, That no certificate issued for a deposit of money for the survey of lands under section 2403 of the Revised Statutes, and the act approved March 3, 1879, amendatory thereof, shall be received in payment for lands except at the land office in which the lands surveyed for which the deposit was made are subject to entry, and not elsewhere; but this section shall not be held to impair, prejudice, or affect in any manner deposits and contracts made under the provisions of said act prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SLATER. This amendment was proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, and was not agreed to in Committee of the Whole. It is very difficult to make Senators and Members of Congress who live so far away from that western section understand our situation and the needs and wants of our people. For many years in California and Oregon and in the Territories adjacent our people were very much straitened. The settlers in going on the public lands were compelled to remain on their lands many years before they could secure titles. I know of many instances myself where people lived upon their lands ten and fifteen years before they could get title under the homestead laws or file a pre-emption claim. Settlement goes constantly in advance of the surveys. The statutes were amended so that the deposit system was adopted.

Now it is claimed that some frauds have been perpetrated in Colorado and some of the Western States, and that therefore this law should be abandoned. As I understand, the General Land Office has recently taken such steps as practically to destroy any chance of frauds growing up under the statutes as they exist now and will exist if this proviso is not inserted.

I trust the Senate will not rashly repeal this law and place our people who have gone so far west in the condition in which they were for many years. Many of our people who had lived upon their land many years were unable to perfect their titles. In Oregon and portions of California and many portions of the Western Territories in a township there would not be more than two or three sections susceptible of settlement or selected for settlement. If they are allowed to be surveyed under this system they will be surveyed; otherwise they will not be.

It may be stated, and will no doubt be stated if it has not been already, that these surveys outrun the needs of settlers and will absorb all the money that will come into the Treasury. Under the restriction that I see is contained in the bill the reduction in the price of surveys of land West will of itself check surveying to a very large extent. The rough mountainous country cannot be surveyed at the price here allowed. That will restrict it, and under the restrictions of the Department three persons now must commit perjury before a fraud can be perpetrated upon the Government. So I cannot see why the Government is not entirely and amply protected under the laws that exist and the regulations of the Department. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WINDOM. The House provision affords all the facilities, in my judgment, that are needed. If there are settlers in any given land district who want their lands surveyed, they can sell the certificates in that district. The House bill now authorizes the use of those certificates in the district. If the surveys are needed, there will be a sale for the certificates in that district; if the surveys are not needed, they should not be made for the sake of speculating on the surveys and selling them elsewhere.

Mr. McMILLAN. But if settlers desire the lands surveyed on which they wish to settle, they can have them surveyed under this provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SLATER. I ask now to make a verbal amendment in the bill as it stands. After the word "manner," in line 1816, I move to insert "certificates issued or;" so as to read "affect in any manner certificates issued or deposits and contracts made."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to that?

Mr. ALLISON. No; there ought not to be objection.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What is the object?

Mr. SLATER. As the bill stands I have the impression that outstanding certificates would be debarred from being taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is adopted.

Mr. WINDOM. I renew the amendment moved in Committee of the Whole in reference to the consul-general at Madrid. I will not take up time with it.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 31, page 2, it is proposed to insert:

For salary of consul-general at Madrid, (in addition to that of secretary of legation when acting as such,) $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I renew the amendments which I offered following line 2008, providing for an appropriation of $15,000 in the aggregate—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was not the point of order raised?

Mr. BLAIR. There was none.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. BLAIR. I should not trouble the Senate with any further remarks upon what may be a disagreeable topic if I did not feel that I should not be wholly guiltless if this session closed without granting this mere pittance to the cause of common school education in this country. I can assure you, Mr. President, that it is as disagreeable to me as it is to any human being to speak upon a matter which I know it is not pleasant for others to hear, but I have this feeling in regard to this trivial amendment, that it is of more consequence to this country than everything else involved in the bill, and therefore I wish to be heard for a moment.

We are paying in this country to-day $10,000,000 and more annually in the construction and repair of our school-houses. There are very few school buildings anywhere in the United States that are constructed in accordance with the most improved patterns of science, and of the existing development in the direction of school architecture. The city of Boston, perhaps, has a few buildings that would serve as proper models for the country at large. There is, I think, no other city which, as a whole, is supplied with school buildings, properly constructed.

In the smaller cities, in the villages, and in the country at large, North and South as well, in the course of the next ten years at least, nearly every school-building that we have is likely to be replaced by another. Vast tracts of country are to be supplied with school-buildings for the first time. While we now spend $10,000,000 we are liable within the next ten years to be expending at least $20,000,000 annually in the matter of schools and school-house construction and architecture. There is nowhere in this country to-day a book upon school architecture such as the wants of the time require.

The 280,000 teachers of the country, the State superintendents of the country, the educators of the country almost en masse, have made their wishes known through the Bureau of Education, and through their own committees that have been here sitting the last winter, in this regard, and they have called upon the national Government to make a slight contribution for the preparation of a work of this kind, and such a work has been partially prepared.

Last year, from the appropriation of last year, a small amount was expended in that direction, but the unusual call for information on the office itself and the unusual consequent necessity of expending the appropriation in the way of clerical force in the office here in this city arrested that work. This year the committee has granted the usual appropriation, with $2,000 excess for the support of the bureau, but the $15,000 or $20,000 necessary—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's five minutes are up.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like two minutes more to complete what I have to say on this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to extend the time of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We ought to go on regularly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well. I decline to trouble the Senate longer. I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment, which will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. After line 2008 it is proposed to insert:

For collecting statistics and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports, and editing and publishing circulars of information for the use of the Bureau of Education, the expenditures to be approved before payment by the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000.

For the distribution and exchange of educational documents, and for wrapping, directing, tying, and packing the same; and for the collection, exchange, cataloging, and caring for the collection of educational apparatus and appliances, articles of school furniture, and models of school buildings illustrative of foreign and domestic systems and methods of education, and for repairing the same, $5,000, to be expended by the Commissioner of Education under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Did not the chairman of the committee make the point of order on that?

Mr. ALLISON. I made the point of order in Committee of the Whole, and it was overruled.

Mr. BLAIR. It was overruled because no point of order could be sustained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was no point of order made in Committee of the Whole on these amendments. A vote was taken on them and they were disagreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that his amendment should not come in after line 2008, because one amendment has already been inserted there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will fix that right if it is adopted. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 19—not a quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a quorum present if all vote.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, let us have the yeas and nays. ["Another division!"] I do not ask the yeas and nays if we can get a quorum to vote in some other way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take another count.

Mr. BROWN. Before another count is taken, I wish to appeal to my side of the Senate on this question. I do not want them to make a bad record on this point. We have done nothing whatever for the cause of education.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 22. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SEWELL. I renew my amendment offered in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. SEWELL. No point of order is made now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But any amendment ruled out on a point of order cannot be renewed in the Senate.

Mr. SEWELL. I thought the Chair might have forgotten it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Unless somebody makes the point of order the amendment may be offered.

Mr. SEWELL. I think there is no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

For the road from Beverly, New Jersey, to the national cemetery near that city, $3,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to move one amendment on the same page. On page 50 the appropriation is $3,000 to complete the roadway from Fort Scott to the national cemetery. That appropriation is estimated for at $7,000. I have seen the officer having charge of the work, and he says that $3,000 will not complete it, even in any condition, to be traversable at all. I therefore move to change that from $3,000 to $5,000.

Mr. BECK. Where is that amendment to come in?

Mr. PLUMB. On page 50, line 1216.

Mr. BECK. I want to say one word about that. We gave for the road from Fort Scott to the national cemetery, Kansas, "for the completion of the road-way from Fort Scott, Kansas, to the national cemetery, $3,000." We gave them $5,500 two years ago, and last year $5,500 to complete that road, and required them on the face of the bill to complete the road for $5,500, and instead of completing it they come now and want $7,000 more and we give them $3,000 in this bill after they agreed to complete it last year for $5,500. There must be an end to these roads somewhere.

Mr. PLUMB. The original estimate for this work was $17,000. Of that $10,500 has been spent, and here is an appropriation of only $3,000 more.

Mr. BECK. Eleven thousand dollars have been spent.

Mr. PLUMB. Well, $11,000 and these $3,000 make $14,000, leaving $3,000 short of the estimate. I do not question what the Senator from Kentucky says, and I deprecate as much as he does any exercise of executive responsibility such as he has properly characterized here; but the Government has got this money invested, a portion of it, and according to the best estimate that can be made more than this amount is needed in order to render what we have done effective. I think there is something in that, and I think $5,000 ought to be given.

Mr. BECK. One of the bad things we have to contend with all the time is that executive officers do not obey our law. When we said $5,500 should complete the road they ought to have done it; but I do not care.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move, on page 109, line 2660, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

To enable the President to carry out the provisions of section 1753 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to promote the efficiency of the civil service and official accountability, $25,000.

Section 1753 has been idle for several years, and public sentiment of the country—

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator what he wants with $25,000?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not want it at all.

Mr. LOGAN. Who does?

Mr. PENDLETON. The President does.

Mr. HAWLEY. The President wants it and recommends it.

Mr. LOGAN. If you make the calculation between now and the end of the fiscal year you will see that you cannot use it unless you pay $50 a day to each of the three commissioners.

Mr. HAWLEY. The President urgently recommends it in his message.

Mr. BECK. I want it provided that they shall not take 2 per cent. of this money for the campaign fund. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. I wish to offer one amendment and have the vote of the Senate upon it. It comes in under the head of "War Department:"

That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for a site and erection thereon of a brick and metal fire-proof building, to be used for the safe-keeping of records of the executive and legislative and judicial departments not required in the present executive or legislative or judicial offices for constant reference, as recommended by the Secretary of War in his annual reports of 1879 and 1880; said building to be erected under the supervision and direction of General M. C. Meigs, lately Quartermaster-General, and according to the plans heretofore prepared by him and submitted in his annual reports of the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. LOGAN. This was voted down a while ago when offered by the Senator from Vermont; and I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was the point of order made on this amendment in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. VEST. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there was no point of order made then, it is not subject to a point of order now.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, let us vote on it.

Mr. FERRY. This is a new amendment in the Senate. It is not a question of concurrence, and therefore the point of order can be made.

Mr. MORRILL. It is the same amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds verbatim and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERMAN. And held to be in order.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Missouri has modified it by striking out "near the War Department."

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is in order I desire also to insert the words "under the direction of the Secretary of War," so that he may be left to select a site and have the whole charge of the construction of the building.

I know it is almost cruel to speak even for a moment at this time, but I wish to say a word. I know the vital importance of having a building of this kind to secure the public records. I do not believe that any insurance company in the land would secure the public records to anything like their value for $200,000 a year. When the Patent Office was burned I happened to be in the city, and feeling anxious about the Treasury records, I for the first time examined into the enormous records of the Treasury Department. They were there piled in stacks up near the roof, and an accident like the dropping of a match might have set on fire all the records of the Department containing the settlement of accounts without number.

I do not care where this building is located or by whom it is erected, but I say it is a matter of as vital necessity and importance as any provision in this bill that some place should be selected where these records can be kept, fire-proof and burglar-proof and safe, and I do not think it ought to be delayed a day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the exact position of this question. The amendment is substantially the amendment that was presented by the Senator from Vermont in committee, but the Senator from Vermont withdrew it and no point of order was raised in committee. Does the Chair understand that any point of order is raised here?

Mr. LOGAN. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is well taken, because this is general legislation; it is for purchasing property.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I will explain why.

Several SENATORS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. It is out of order, and that is the end of it.

Mr. WALKER. I offer the following amendment:

For improving road from the national cemetery near Fayetteville, Arkansas, to the county road, $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. WALKER. Does the Senator wish to make a point of order on a national graveyard?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is made and well taken.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. No. 604) for the relief of William W. Thomas;

A bill (H. R. No. 2911) for the relief of the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4396) repealing the limitation of redemption of two-cent documentary internal-revenue stamps by the Government.

The bill (H. R. No. 1328) for the relief of Peter March, Frederick Kimmerly, David Vaughn, Barney Schooley, Eliza Scott, widow of Joseph Scott, Phebe C. Clement, widow of Isaac M. Clement, Frederick Smith, Owen McNabb, and Thomas Miller, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 2713) to extend the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of certain pensioners," approved March 3, 1879, to certain other pensioners, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives to public and law libraries was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

SIGNAL-SERVICE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate of the 6th ultimo to print and bind 2,500 copies of the annual report of the Chief Signal Officer for 1881 for the use of the Signal Office. The House amendment was, in lines 3 and 4, to strike out "2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "10,000;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed and bound for the use of the Signal Office and the Department of War 10,000 copies of the annual report of the Chief Signal Officer for 1881.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate sent two resolutions to the House, one to print 2,500 and one to print 7,500, the additional number being given for reasons stated to the Senate. The House put the two resolutions together and provided here for the full number in both, and disagreed to one of the resolutions. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 11, noes 10; and (at eight o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 2, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The SPEAKER. The remainder of the Journal of Monday last and also the Journal of yesterday will now be read.

The reading having been concluded, the Journal of Monday last and that of yesterday were approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag which belonged to the said regiment and which is now in the custody of the Secretary of War.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 63 and 64 to the bill (H. R. No. 6616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes; had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the said bill; asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia.

HELEN M. SCHOLEFIELD.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 249, for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield. The bill was read.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I trusted the gentleman would not object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I do object.

JAMES GAYLER.

Mr. CARLISLE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to James Gayler the sum of $50 for his services as expert and witness before the select committee to investigate the authorship of the anonymous letter to Hon. W. M. SPRINGER.

MASTER ARMORER, SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I ask by unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table a verbal amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, after the word "him," insert the words "from and after the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is before the House.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the naval appropriation bill, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. ROBESON, Mr. KETCHAM, and Mr. ATKINS.

STATIONERY FOR SUCCESSFUL CONTESTANTS.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to what I deem to be a privileged matter, and submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is in the nature of instructions to the Clerk of the House:

Resolved, That the successful contestants for seats in the House are entitled to stationery allowance for the Congress in which they may be seated.

Mr. CALKINS. It is a mere direction to the clerk, who claims, without such direction, contestants who have been successful are not entitled to their allowance of stationery.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reading of that resolution was not heard distinctly and I ask that it be read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CALKINS. It is a mere direction to the Clerk that they are entitled to it. The Clerk desires some direction in the matter from the House, as I understand it.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, which is the call of committees under the new rule. The pending bill is Senate bill No. 171, in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers. At the expiration of the hour yesterday the bill had been read. It is still open to objection.

Mr. PAGE. When the House adjourned it had completed the reading of the President's veto message.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think this hour having been entered on can be interrupted.

Mr. PAGE. But I rose before the hour had been entered on to a question of the highest privilege.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. PEIRCE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 280) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Washington Light Infantry Corps;

A bill (H. R. No. 2402) to quiet title to certain land in Washington, District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4460) to authorize the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for the United States district court, post-office, and other Government offices at the city of Williamsport, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 5222) to restore the Fort Benton military reservation to the public domain, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) making an appropriation to defray the expense of printing the memorial cards to accompany the additional numbers heretofore ordered of the memorial address on the late President Garfield;

A bill (S. No. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of certain lands adjacent to the town of Pendleton, in the State of Oregon, belonging to the Umatilla Indian reservation, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 70) granting a pension to Sarah Hayne;

A bill (S. No. 101) for the relief of G. W. Thompson and others;

A bill (S. No. 138) for the relief of James Burke;

A bill (S. No. 340) granting a pension to Erastus Crippen;

A bill (S. No. 346) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation;

A bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of Mrs. Caroline Mott, administratrix of the estate of Danford Mott;

A bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of the widow of George W. Flood;

A bill (S. No. 412) for the relief of Joab Spencer and James R. Mead;

A bill (S. No. 547) granting a pension to E. G. Hoffman, late a captain in the One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers;

A bill (S. No. 703) granting a pension to Sarah Shea;

A bill (S. No. 997) for the relief of Ella Carroll, formerly Ella Long;

A bill (S. No. 1170) granting a pension to Jane S. Taplin;

A bill (S. No. 1264) to increase the pension of Joseph N. Abbey;

A bill (S. No. 1437) granting a pension to Amos Chapman;

A bill (S. No. 1680) granting a pension to Ann Leddy;

A bill (S. No. 1796) for the relief of Elizabeth H. Spotts;

A bill (S. No. 1925) granting a pension to Ann Elizabeth Rodgers;

A bill (S. No. 1959) granting the right of way to the Arizona Southern Railroad Company through the Papago Indian reservation, in Arizona;

A bill (S. No. 2026) granting a pension to Mary E. Matthews; and

A bill (S. No. 2089) granting a pension to Caroline French.

VETO MESSAGE—RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PAGE. I am unanimously instructed by the Committee on Commerce to move to take up the river and harbor appropriation bill, with the President's veto message relating thereto, and to move that the bill do pass notwithstanding the President's objections.

Mr. COX, of New York. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. There is no occasion for calling for the yeas and nays. The form of the vote is well settled. The question will be, Will the House, on reconsideration, agree to pass the bill?

Mr. PAGE. And on that I call for the previous question.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is the question debatable?

Mr. KASSON. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to make a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce with the following instructions—

Mr. PAGE. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Gentlemen will resume their seats.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Iowa has not the floor to offer that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Iowa to rise to a parliamentary inquiry, whereupon he offered, after having obtained the floor, a motion to refer with instructions.

Mr. KASSON. No, sir; my object is to learn from the Speaker whether this motion, in the present status of this case, is now in order. That, of course, must be first determined. My parliamentary inquiry is whether it is not in order under our rules to move to refer the bill? And I have something to say to show why such a motion should be in order to refer with the instructions which I have sent to the desk. That was the point of my inquiry.

Mr. PAGE. I do not know how the gentleman from Iowa can take me off the floor to make such a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California was on the floor and had moved the previous question. The Chair thinks a motion to refer, if the gentleman from Iowa had obtained the floor in time for that purpose, would have been in order, but not a motion to refer with instructions. The motion to refer without instructions the message of the President and the bill, or either, the Chair thinks, would have been in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because that motion is not now pending.

Mr. KASSON. Will the Chair allow me to say one word on the point of order? I find there are abundant precedents for this proposition.

Mr. PAGE. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KASSON. I am entitled to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. PAGE. The point of order has already been decided.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa on the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. Gentlemen may as well listen to what I have to say on the point of order. I refer the Speaker to page 363 of the Digest.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not hold a motion to refer is not in order. The Chair only holds such a motion must come in its place.

Mr. COX, of New York. Where is that place?

Mr. KASSON. One motion to refer with or without instructions is in order pending the motion for the previous question on the passage.

Mr. PAGE. I submit that I was on the floor and was recognized by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that.

Mr. PAGE. I have called up the bill, with the President's message, and moved the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. And I make the point of order that my motion to refer is in order prior to the vote on the passage, and on that I ask to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no difficulty about this. The gentleman from California, having been recognized to demand the previous question on the reconsideration of the bill, is entitled to have the judgment of the House on that proposition first. The Chair does not hold a motion to refer would be out of order if the gentleman from Iowa had taken the floor before the demand for the previous question was pending.

Mr. KASSON. I took the floor, but the Chair, according to custom, recognized the gentleman from California. But I wish still to ask the Speaker to listen to me on the point I make.

Mr. POUND. I wish to know if there is any dispute between the gentleman from Iowa and the Chair on this point?

Mr. KASSON. I think I have the right to interpose, pending the motion for the previous question, a motion to refer.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can only hear one gentleman at a time. Mr. KASSON. On page 363 it is stated as being within the power of the House—

To proceed to the reconsideration of the bill or to postpone its consideration for a future day; but not where less than a quorum is present. A veto message and a bill may be referred, or the message alone, and the bill may be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. KASSON. Now, under our other rule, pending a motion for the previous question, one motion to refer may be entertained. I will turn to the rule unless the Speaker recollects it.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Rule XVII seems to cover that point.

Mr. KASSON. If the motion is not in order until after the previous question is seconded, then I would like to offer at that time a motion to refer with instructions, under Rule XVII.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not clear that Rule XVII applies in such a case as this. On the ordinary passage of a bill a motion to refer with or without instructions is in order pending the demand for the previous question or after the previous question is ordered. But the question still arises whether that rule applies to a case like this, where the House is simply considering the question of again passing a bill which has already been passed.

Mr. KASSON. The motion to refer is stated as one of the motions in order on the consideration of a veto message. I desire to save all the rights under the rules, for the purpose of availing myself of the right to submit the motion to refer; and therefore, pending the demand for the previous question, I interrupted the proceeding for the purpose of submitting the motion in order to lose no right. There must be a time when the motion to refer is in order; and if it is in order pending the demand for the previous question on the passage of any bill, then now is the time to submit that motion.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say one word in response to the gentleman from Iowa in regard to the rule to which he refers. The gentleman does not read the whole of the paragraph describing the order of proceeding which occurs in a contingency like this.

Whenever a bill is returned to the House with the objections of the President it is usual to have the message containing his objections immediately read, and for the House to proceed to the consideration of the bill—

That is the first thing which is prescribed by the rule, and that is the motion submitted by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE]— or to postpone its consideration for a future day, but not where less than a quorum is present.

So that it will be seen—

Mr. KASSON. Read the next clause.

Mr. REAGAN. I will do so.

The veto message and a bill may be referred, or the message alone, and the bill may be laid on the table.

But the motion to refer would have to be made, in order to be in order, before the motion is submitted to proceed to the reconsideration of the bill and the demand for the previous question on that motion. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa would have been in order if he had had the floor; but he did not obtain the floor and move it until the previous question had been demanded on the first proceeding in order.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman will read the first clause of the Constitution, under the head of veto, he will find that reconsideration under the Constitution means debate; and the proposition of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] is a proposition to cut off all debate. I desire to be heard, and so do many others, on this important question of appropriating $18,000,000 for this purpose; yes, nearly $19,000,000.

Mr. PAGE. I understand that the Chair has practically decided the point of order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. It is whether the instructions which the gentleman moves look to any change in the character of the bill which has been vetoed by the President?

Mr. KASSON. The instructions which I shall move, if it shall be decided in order, look to a reduction or limitation of the amounts appropriated by the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. Then that must be out of order, because we are entitled to vote upon the bill which went to the President and which was vetoed by him.

Mr. KASSON. But this is a motion to refer.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, but with instructions to change the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. There ought to be some settled rule about vetoes and our conduct with respect to them.

A MEMBER. There is.

Mr. COX, of New York. The rules are explicit on the subject. I cannot see how, if a vote be taken on the motion of my friend from California [Mr. PAGE] and the bill is passed in spite of the veto message, I cannot see how any motion for reference can be made after that. How can it be made after the bill be passed? Hence it is absolutely indispensable, under the rule which provides that a veto message and bill may be referred—when? Why certainly at the time when a reference would be useful, when a consideration of the question may be had, and that is just the object of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.] If the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] shall be sustained in his claim that he now has the right to move the passage of the bill and to call the previous question upon it, and the bill shall be passed by a two-thirds vote, where then is my friend from Iowa?

Mr. KASSON. Where is the consideration?

Mr. COX, of New York. Where is the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KASSON. The question being on the passage of the bill, by Rule XVII the motion to refer is clearly in order.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. Would it be in order, after the previous question shall have been ordered, for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] then to interpose his motion to commit?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not feel called upon to decide that question until it arises.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. ROBESON. It seems to me that this is a very plain question. This bill has come back to us disapproved by the President. We are now to vote upon it, not as an original proposition under our rules, subject to amendment, but as a proposition under the Constitution, which has brought this bill back to us for reconsideration, either to pass it over the veto or to fail to pass it. We cannot refer it with instructions, because no matter how we may instruct the committee the bill cannot be changed. We cannot pass a bill over a veto with an amendment. We cannot concur with the President with an amendment; nor can we disagree with the President with an amendment. The question upon the passage of the bill, notwithstanding the veto, comes squarely before us; and while it may be proper to refer the bill in order that the House may be informed by its committee as to what action ought to be taken upon the question of passage or nonpassage, yet the question cannot be presented otherwise than as the Constitution presents it—squarely, whether the bill shall be repassed in spite of the President's objections. Therefore instructions to the committee are out of order.

Mr. KASSON. One word in reply to the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON.] We have repeatedly received veto messages which have never been acted upon; there is one such now on our table. I regard this motion to refer the bill as appropriate under the rules prior to final action by the House upon the bill. If the committee should not report in favor of repassing the vetoed bill, but should report an original bill, being the bill as referred with some modifications satisfactory to them, that might be passed upon the recommendation of the committee as an original bill, and the main question upon the vetoed bill might never arise in the House, as sometimes has happened in reference to other bills vetoed by the President. But, sir, I will simplify the question by merely moving that the bill be referred.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is better.

Mr. KASSON. This will leave the matter free from all embarrassment, though I still believe that under Rule XVII I have the right to move to refer the bill with instructions.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Speaker, I think it immaterial, so far as this bill is concerned, what the ruling of the Chair may be; the question is only important as it may affect the orderly proceeding of the House. Rule XVII was designed clearly to include only bills and resolutions originating in the Senate or the House which come up for action in the first instance. It does not include bills returned by the President with a veto. No person, in my judgment, can read the rule without coming to this conclusion. The rule, after stating the effect of the previous question, says:

The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection.

This bill cannot be amended; it is impossible to amend the bill now. The only motions in order are to refer the message and bill, to table the message and bill, or to refer the one and table the other. The rule referred to does not enlarge our right in this respect. When a bill is accompanied by a veto message it is not within the terms of Rule XVII, and if the motion to refer is in order it is so not by virtue of Rule XVII, but by reason of some other rule or practice, and I am not acquainted with any such rule or practice. Rule XVII not applying to cases of this kind, the motion of the gentleman from Iowa cannot be in order after the gentleman from California has demanded the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I desire to be heard a moment upon the point of order. It seems to me there is no difficulty in this question. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] called up for consideration the veto message of the President; and upon the question whether the bill shall pass notwithstanding the President's objections the gentleman demanded the previous question. That was done for the very purpose of cutting off debate, or a motion to amend, or any other motion. Clearly the motion of the gentleman from California was in order. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa, it seems to me, cannot be entertained to take the gentleman from California off the floor. The first question is upon the motion of the gentleman from California. This matter is entirely within the control of the House. If the House should vote down the motion of the gentleman from California for the previous question, then the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to refer will certainly be in order; but it seems to me that motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. KASSON. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that there was on my part no attempt to take the gentleman from California from the floor. That gentleman having moved the previous question, I, under Rule XVII, made my motion, the question being upon the passage of the bill, and Rule XVII making no exception with reference to this particular case.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is important as a matter of correct practice that this question should be properly decided. It has been very truly said that the determination of the question is finally in the hands of the House; but the Speaker of course desires to rule properly upon it, that the House may reach a conclusion by a correct course. The House can of course sustain the demand for the previous question if it so desires, and can vote down the motion to refer. If the friends of the bill in its present form have a sufficient number of votes, it does not matter in the final result what order of proceeding may be pursued. But let us see what is the correct practice. Undoubtedly the motion to refer the message of the President to a committee would be in order unless the gentleman from California by taking the floor acquired a prior right to recognition. He certainly had that right, as I submit, unless it is qualified by Rule XVII. The simple question is whether Rule XVII in the last portion of the first clause meets this case. There need be no agitation about the question, because whatever result may meet the wishes of the House can readily be reached, whatever the ruling upon this question may be.

But let us see what harm will be done by following the rule strictly. And it seems to me the rule allows the motion to refer, the gentleman having modified it to remove the objection the gentleman from New Jersey made. I am not arguing whether that objection was a sound one or not. But the provision in the last clause of the rule is that pending the demand for the previous question or after the previous question is ordered on the passage of a bill, it shall be in order to make the motion to refer. Now, what is the question the Speaker proposes to submit to the House? Shall this bill pass notwithstanding the objection of the President? Therefore the bill is to be put on its passage. Now, the gentleman from California says on that question of passage, "I demand the previous question." Pending that demand on the passage of the bill within that portion of the Rule XVII I have cited, it is plainly in order the gentleman from Iowa or any other gentleman may make the motion to refer. That is all the question we have now to discuss.

When my friend from Indiana says the language of Rule XVII excludes this question of a veto, I reply that it does not in terms, because it does not say anything about it; nor indeed does it in spirit or intent.

It is proposed, pending the passage of the bill, to say whether the House will refer it to the committee for further consideration. It is in order under Rule XVII to refer. This House has already referred one bill, notably the steamship bill, and it has never come back from the committee; but the committee reported another bill and the House passed it. It has passed both branches.

Mr. CALKINS. If the gentleman's position is correct, it proves under this rule you may refer this bill and the accompanying message with instructions, because you cannot eliminate part of the rule from operation and say the residue shall be effective. Let me read in the presence of the gentleman from Massachusetts what the rule does say. It provides that "it shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee."

Now, if it comes within that rule, then it is in order to commit this bill and the veto message with or without instructions. You cannot eliminate a part of the rule and say it does not operate, but when you appeal to it as operating in this case you must take the whole rule. If it is in order at all, then it is in order to commit this bill and veto message with or without instructions. To say that it is in order to commit it without instructions and not with instructions is to say it does not fall within that rule at all.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. All right; I go right along with my friend from Indiana and answer him. The motion to commit is the motion to refer, and there is no difference between them, and there need be no argument about that. He says the first proposition might be sound, except that it is connected with another which seems to him objectionable. But the difficulty is only apparent, not real, for I hold that the motion to commit with instructions is entirely in order.

I might go on to support that statement, but it is not of any use at this time except as an illustration; but I say it enforces my position. I say it is in order for this House to refer or commit that bill without instructions to the committee, and it is no sufficient answer that the committee may bring in another bill, as the House has disposed of this bill by sending it to the committee.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask the gentleman how we can ever get a direct vote on a bill which has been vetoed under his construction of the rule? We would not get to a direct vote on it at all. We would get to a direct vote on the motion to commit or to refer with instructions, but not on the bill. Now, the rule says that these motions may be made in all stages of a bill, even to the engrossment. If the rule refers at all it refers in all its parts and must be so construed.

Mr. HASKELL. On page 363 of the Manual is a line of procedure on vetoed bills which is complete and full, and on that page, under the heading of "vetoed bills," it is distinctly recognized that the veto message is debatable, that it is referable, that it may be laid on the table; and it is just as distinctly stated it cannot be amended as a vetoed bill and the vote on it cannot be reconsidered, and those are the only two motions barred out under the practice. The proposition before the House now is on that veto message. A simple motion to refer, on page 363 of the Manual, is ruled in order—ruled in order by numerous precedents, and cannot be possibly controverted. Without discussing Rule XVII at all, there is the Manual and there is your line of action, clear and clean and perfect. As has been distinctly stated, if you give the floor to the member in charge of the bill by courtesy, and recognize him to handle it and move the previous question, then all these succeeding motions would be ruled out of order—you take it off the floor, you take it from the power of the House to move the subsidiary motions, and hence that practice has grown up a clear and clean practice. You can refer that bill, you can lay it on the table, you can refer the message, you can lay both bill and message on the table, or you can vote directly on the bill.

Mr. KENNA. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HASKELL. There is no power of amending a vetoed bill. There is no power to reconsider the vote on the passage of a vetoed bill. But otherwise this bill is precisely like any other bill. It is now upon its final passage under the Constitution of the United States; and every motion but the one to reconsider the vote on the passage and the motion to amend—every other motion is just as much in order on this bill as it is upon any bill that can be brought before the House.

Mr. ATKINS rose.

Mr. KENNA. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me to ask him a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] is recognized.

Mr. ATKINS. I simply desire to have read at the Clerk's desk a paragraph from article I, section 7, of the Constitution, if it be not amiss to have it read upon this floor; or I will read it myself:

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law.

It seems to me that the only thing that is necessary to do is now to proceed to vote whether or not this bill shall become the law or whether it shall fall.

Mr. KASSON. Is it not "reconsideration" to refer it?

Mr. REAGAN. The right to debate covers any bill that comes before the House, qualified by the right of the House to order the previous question. There is no measure that can come before the House upon which the previous question does not cut off debate. And to insist that the right to consider involves the right to debate, so as to preclude the call of the previous question, is to assume that this case is exceptional to rules, and takes from the House the power to direct its own business under the rules of the House.

The river and harbor bills have often come here on motions of the committee to suspend the rules and pass them. But never with reference to one of them—I am not speaking of veto messages, but that does not change the case—never in the case of one of them was a motion made or sustained to supersede the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill by referring the bill with or without instructions, because under the ordinary rules of the House the motion to suspend the rules on a pending question precludes debate and precludes other motions except in certain cases specially provided for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to dispose of this question. Since the inquiry was first made whether it would be in order to move to refer, and since the motion which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] proposed to make was sent to the Clerk, the Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to have withdrawn that part of his motion which included instructions to the committee. Clearly that would be out of order. The House could not instruct the committee to report the bill back with amendments, as it is a bill which the House itself could not amend when it was being considered. What the House cannot do itself it cannot instruct a committee to do.

This bill comes back to the House by reason of the veto message of the President of the United States, and under the Constitution, paragraph 2, section 7, article 2, the House must proceed to reconsider it. That does not necessarily mean that the House may debate it. Reconsidering may be voting on it; and perhaps that was all that was intended by the language of the Constitution. The Chair would not intimate that if the House desires, it may not debate; but reconsideration might be had by simply voting on the bill.

It is settled, the Chair thinks, by the practice, that a motion to refer—a simple motion to refer—to a committee may be entertained. But the Chair thinks that that motion to refer must come in at the proper time. It is the first duty of the House, under the Constitution, as the Chair interprets its language, to reconsider and proceed to vote upon the vetoed bill. If the House chooses, by ordering the previous question, to cut off debate upon this matter of reconsideration, that is within the power of the House. If the House does not order the previous question, the Chair would hold that a motion to refer would be in order. It is claimed that under Rule XVII of the House the motion to refer, being, as the Chair holds, equivalent to a motion to commit, is in order. The Chair does not think so. Rule XVII speaks entirely of proceedings governing the ordinary passage of the bill. If the whole rule is read it will appear that a motion for the previous question is made, first, upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill. Then that having exhausted itself upon the third reading of the bill, the second step is a motion for the previous question upon the passage of the same bill, such a bill as the House has ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. This rule refers to the passage of a bill in the ordinary sense. The bill before us is at a different stage. It is a reconsideration of a bill which the House and the Senate have already passed, and for the purpose of determining whether the House will by a two-thirds vote pass the bill, notwithstanding the President's veto as provided by the Constitution.

The Chair feels bound to hold that the demand for the previous question having been made first, must be first submitted to the House. If that be voted down, the Chair will entertain a motion to refer the bill.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from California if he intends to allow debate for the hour following the previous question?

Mr. PAGE. I will be frank with the gentleman from Iowa, and will say I do not.

Mr. KASSON. Then I ask for the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 16 in the affirmative, not one-fifth.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays. Tellers were not ordered; there being 5 in the affirmative, not one-fifth of a quorum.

The question was taken upon ordering the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes 121, noes 8.

Mr. BROWNE. No quorum has voted. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PAGE and Mr. BROWNE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 138, noes 19.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill notwithstanding the objections of the President? By paragraph 2, section 7, article 1 of the Constitution of the United States this vote must be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 59, not voting 108; as follows:

YEAS—122.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio. My colleague [Mr. MOREY] is absent on account of illness, and I believe he is paired; if present, he would vote "no."

Mr. PRESCOTT. On this question I am paired with Governor PACHECO, of California; if present, he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. THOMAS. On this question I am paired with Governor CURTIN, of Pennsylvania; if he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. KNOTT. On this question I am paired with General HOOKER, of Mississippi. If General HOOKER were present, he would vote "ay" and I would vote "no."

Mr. SPEER. I have a general pair with Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts; but having been informed by his colleague that if present he would vote "ay," I have therefore voted.

Mr. CASSIDY. I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. FROST.] If he were here I understand he would vote for the bill, and I should vote against it.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to state that the gentleman from Delaware, Mr. MARTIN, is paired with Mr. SHULTZ, of Pennsylvania; if present, Mr. MARTIN would vote "ay." I have been requested to state further that my colleague, Mr. COVINGTON, is paired with Mr. MASON, of New York; if present, my colleague would vote "ay."

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk announced me as being paired. I was paired yesterday during my absence.

The SPEAKER. Has notice been given to the Clerk of the termination of the pair?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I do not know; but I have voted on this question with the understanding that the pair terminated yesterday.

Mr. MANNING. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. MULBROW, is paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. ARMFIELD; my colleague, Mr. MONEY, with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WATSON; and my colleague, Mr. HOOKER, with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. KNOTT. My three colleagues, if present, would vote "ay."

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 122, the nays 59. Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill has passed notwithstanding the objections of the President. In accordance with the provision of the Constitution the bill as thus repassed will be sent, with the President's message, to the Senate. [Applause.]

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the One Hundred and Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry Association the blue regimental flag which belonged to the said regiment, and which is now in the custody of the Secretary of War.

FEES OF REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is now the consideration of business for one hour under the special rule. The hour begins at fifteen minutes before one o'clock. When this hour expired yesterday the House was considering the bill (S. No. 171) in relation to certain fees allowed registers and receivers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the fees allowed registers and receivers for testimony reduced by them to writing for claimants, in establishing pre-emption and homestead rights and mineral entries, and in contested cases, shall not be considered or taken into account in determining the maximum of compensation of said officers.

SEC. 2. That registers and receivers shall, upon application, furnish plats or diagrams of townships in their respective districts, showing what lands are vacant and what lands are taken, and shall be allowed to receive compensation therefor, from the party obtaining said plat or diagram, at such rates as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and said officers shall, upon application by the proper State or Territorial authorities, furnish, for the purpose of taxation, a list of all lands sold in their respective districts, together with the names of the purchasers, and shall be allowed to receive compensation for the same, not to exceed ten cents per entry; and the sums thus received for plats and lists shall not be considered or taken into account in determining the maximum of compensation of said officers.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask that the report be read; and I hope the House will be in order and listen to the reading.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, which is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 835) regulating fees allowed to registers and receivers of land offices, beg leave to report the same back and recommend its passage.

Formerly the registers and receivers had only to reduce the testimony offered in contested cases to writing and forward it to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for his decision, accompanied by an informal recommendation as to the merits of the case.

The rules of practice of the General Land Office, approved December 20, 1880, required the registers and receivers, in addition to the above duties in such cases, to enter all objections made, exceptions taken, and prayers offered, to entertain and determine all motions for continuances—the taking of depositions to be read at the trial, issuing the commissions for taking the same, in conformity to the specific rules of the Department.

Upon the trial of all cases the registers and receivers are personally required to see that all the facts within the knowledge of the witnesses requisite to a correct conclusion of the same be developed in compliance with specific rules of the Department as to the status of the land involved, nature, extent, and value of all improvements, when and by whom made, date of settlement, and steps taken to make and secure the claim, and to pass judicially upon all of the same.

The effects of these rules is to construct of the registers and receivers a court of record, and require of these officers the duties of judges and clerks without providing any additional compensation for the additional duties and responsibilities.

Exhibits of the occupied lands are necessary for the purpose of levying the taxes by the State or Territorial officers, and cannot practically be obtained from any other source.

Lists and plats of the occupied and unoccupied lands are valuable to prospectors and settlers, as they greatly cheapen the expenses and reduce the liability of error in making their selections of land for entry.

The registers and receivers are not required by law or rule to supply either the exhibits or plats, and the effects of the law as now construed by the General Land Office, which requires these officers to account for these fees in determining their maximum, is to encumber the local land offices, on the one hand, with the county assessors for the purpose of levying the taxes, and on the other it deprives the settler of the benefits of the plats.

This labor is wholly outside of the legitimate duties of the local land offices, and the amount stated in the bill as compensation therefor is intended to be the first cost of producing these exhibits and plats, which the public are anxious to obtain and willing to pay for.

If the law or rules required this class of work to be done free of any charge, there could be little else attended to in the offices, and it is clearly impracticable to give the public free access to the records for the purpose of making these said exhibits and plats.

The following extract is taken from Senate Report No. 245, second session Forty-sixth Congress, relating to this subject:

"In his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, the Commissioner of the General Land Office makes the following recommendation, (pages 114, 115):

"Prior to the last fiscal year the joint fees allowed registers and receivers for reducing testimony to writing in establishing pre-emption, homestead, and mineral rights were not required to be accounted for by the receiver of public moneys. On July 9, 1877, this Office, after careful consideration, decided that, under the law as it now stands, these fees should be accounted for as other fees and commissions.

"The services for which these moneys are received are over and above the ordinary duties of registers and receivers. The performance thereof involves personal labor, and frequently requires clerical assistance to be employed by the officers for the purpose. Under said instruction registers and receivers employed the necessary clerical force, and paid therefor out of the fees authorized to be received for reducing testimony to writing.

"In July, 1877, an order was issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office directing registers and receivers to report monthly thereafter the amount of fees received from said service, but no order to pay over the same until February, 1879, when an order was issued requiring the payment of all fees received for such service subsequent to July 1, 1877, in all cases when by including these fees the maximum compensation was exceeded.

"The Commissioner of the General Land Office evidently regards the literal interpretation he feels compelled to give the law as a hardship. And the moneys are to be viewed in the nature of expenses incident to the prosecution of the claims, rather than fees. We regard it as a hardship to compel the district officers to charge up the same against their maximum compensation, and recommend legislation to relieve them therefrom."

The object of the present bill is to make the law conform to the construction given to the act of March 21, 1864, from its passage to July 1, 1877. And the committee recommend its passage.

Before the reading of the report was concluded, five minutes having expired,

The SPEAKER said: Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STRAIT. I hope there will be no objection.

The question being taken on the consideration of the bill, six members objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

The Committee on Indian Affairs being called,

Mr. HASKELL said: I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 405) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That those persons, being heads of families or single persons over twenty-one years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1860, for three hundred and twenty acres of land each, were issued to thirty-two of said Indians, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and permitted to enter and purchase at the proper land office, at any time within one year from the passage of this act, said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, according to the Government surveys, at not less than $3 per acre, payment to be made in three annual installments, one-third at date of entry, one-third at the end of one year from date of entry, and the balance in two years from date of entry, with interest on said amounts respectively from date of entry at 6 per cent. per annum; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, in trust for, and to be paid to, said Indians respectively to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within five years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of one year from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale in the usual manner, at not less than $3 per acre, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold, together with such tracts as have heretofore been or may hereafter be entered, and wherein default has been made in the payment of any portion of the purchase-money, or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided, shall be thereafter subject to private entry at the appraised value of said tracts.

Mr. SCALES. I object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HASKELL. There is a minority report, recommending an amendment with reference to the price per acre which shall be charged for these lands. I desire to offer that amendment; and if the amendment be agreed to there is no difference of opinion in the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have the amendment prepared.

Mr. SCALES. I am afraid the amendment may not be adopted. Is the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] willing to accept it?

Mr. HASKELL. I would rather accept the amendment than have the bill defeated. With this amendment the bill is not objected to by any member of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me this is too important a bill to be considered in this way.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the amendment which I have prepared embodies the views of the minority of the committee, and that there is no objection on the part of any member of the committee to the passage of the bill provided this amendment be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me it is too late in the session to be passing bills of this kind.

The question being taken on the consideration of the bill, four members objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

HALL OF RECORDS, WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds being called, Mr. SHALLENBERGER said: By instruction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I ask the consideration of Senate bill No. 817, making appropriation for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon, in the city of Washington, of a building to be used as a hall of records.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purchase of a site near the War Department and erection thereon of a brick and metal fire-proof building, to be used for the safe-keeping of records of the executive and legislative departments not required in the present executive or legislative offices for constant reference, as recommended by the Secretary of War in his annual reports of 1879 and 1880; said building to be erected according to plans prepared by the Quartermaster-General and heretofore submitted, and under his supervision and direction.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I desire to be heard for five minutes in explanation of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to be heard before the question is taken upon considering the bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has a twofold purpose. First, it is designed to protect valuable records of the Government, dating back to its foundation, which are now stored in insecure buildings—records which are not referred to once in six months, possibly not once in a year.

Its next purpose is to rid ourselves, if possible, of some of the extravagant rentals paid by the Government in the city of Washington by providing a warehouse wherein can be deposited secure from fire the large masses of Government records and vouchers and papers which are now encumbering every Department of the Government, occupying valuable and costly space, which is demanded for clerical force and must be provided in rented buildings at heavy expense.

This bill comes before this House thoroughly matured. It has been strongly recommended by the Secretary of War and by the late Quartermaster-General, M. C. Meigs. Elaborate plans have been prepared for it. It has passed the Senate twice. It has been unanimously reported favorably by the committee of the House. It has been indorsed by every public man I have talked with in the city of Washington. It will accommodate records and papers from all the Departments, securely housed and conveniently arranged. Its estimated cost is only $200,000. As I have said, it proposes to put up a cheap building, but perfectly fire-proof, on a cheap piece of ground, connected by telephone with every Department, in which can be stored all these valuable records which are now exposed to destruction by fire, and which could not be replaced if lost, of necessity entailing great loss to the Government. The Quartermaster-General's Office alone in 1878 and 1879 had 24,000 claims pending, involving $13,000,000, and the Quartermaster-General at that time urged Congress to make some provision by which these records and valuable vouchers could be protected from casualty of fire, such as occurred in the Interior Department only a year or two ago. This building will cover a large square of ground; it will be 305 by 540 feet; it will be of brick and iron; it will have in each room stone floors and iron ceilings; the interior partition-walls will be solid and of brick; it will have 1,750,000 cubic feet of storage space, and will not cost more than $200,000, which will be eleven and one-half cents a cubic foot for space which now costs the Government vastly more.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if the bill comes before the House for action under the rule, and I hope it will, I would suggest an amendment, asking consent that it be accepted, as follows, to come in at the close of the bill:

Provided, That the plans and specifications shall be subject to modifications and approval by a commission consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and General M. C. Meigs: And provided further, That said building may be located on ground now owned by the Government at a point designated by said commission, with the approval of the President.

The following is the letter of General Meigs:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1879.

MY DEAR SIR: In preparing the project for a hall of records, I assumed, as a basis of estimate, that it might be built on square 172, which is on the west side of Seventeenth street, just south of New York avenue northwest.

This is very convenient to the new executive building, to contain the State, War, and Navy Departments, and the land is not valuable. The greater portion of it was assessed for the fiscal year 1873-74 at 12 cents per square foot; a small portion, probably one-eighth of the lots, was assessed at 15 cents. The total assessment, including all improvements then existing, was, for the whole square, $28,582.85. Values throughout the city are less now than in 1873-74.

I know of no square more conveniently situated, and I presume that none exists. But I do not think it prudent, if the appropriation is granted, to fix absolutely the site of the building. The President should have authority to procure any other site more desirable and at a cheaper rate.

It will be well to limit the appropriation to $200,000 for the site and building complete. If it be found that a site cannot be obtained at such cost as to bring the whole expense within the appropriation suggested, report can be made at the next session of Congress. I hope, however, that final action may be now taken. The insecurity of the records of this office keeps me constantly anxious.

The subject of a hall of records has been discussed for years, but I believe that this is the first project brought before Congress. The great difficulty heretofore seems to have been that no one was willing to present or project a plan for a warehouse; architects working for the country all desire to build palaces. The public departments should be palatial, but the Government may very well build its stores or warehouses of brick, in simple and cheap style, and brick is, of all building material, the most thoroughly fire-proof. Even if the contents burn the brick walls are seldom harmed beyond repairs, and no material lasts longer than brick. The marbles of the baths of Caracalla and Diocletian at Rome have disappeared; the brick walls and arches to a great extent remain.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,

Quartermaster-General, Bt. Maj. Gen., U. S. A.

Hon. Senator MORRILL, United States Senate.

The following is an extract from the report of the Secretary of War:

SAFETY OF RECORDS.

The papers relating to the claims filed in this office are very bulky and are valuable. They contain the evidence for and against claims reported above as amounting on 1st of July last to 12,778 miscellaneous claims and accounts, $6,947,000; 11,676 claims under the act of July 4, 1864, $5,960,172.55.

Until the 2d August of this year it was the custom of this office to transmit to the Third Auditor of the Treasury not only all the claims recommended for settlement, in order that they might be paid or reported to Congress, under existing laws for appropriation, but also all the papers, evidence, reports, and decisions in cases which, on examination, the Quartermaster-General found himself unable to report favorably.

On that date the Third Auditor advised this office that his file-rooms were burdened with these claims, which he had theretofore received and placed in the fire-proof rooms containing the records of his office, but that the space at his command was too small to justify him in continuing to receive papers which he found no existing law requiring him to take care of, and for which in fact he now had no space.

This office is in a building not in any respect fire-proof. A fire originating in it would, in despite of all precautions of watchmen constantly on duty here, and water always kept ready, and portable fire-extinguishers, probably clear all persons out of the building before any considerable portion of the records could be removed.

A fire-proof storehouse of simple and cheap construction could be built on some place convenient to the executive offices for about $200,000, which would afford perfectly safe and convenient storage for such of these papers as have been finally disposed of, and for such others as are seldom consulted. Telegraphic or telephonic communication with its superintendent would bring to every office in a few moments any paper needed for reference.

Such a building would not only relieve this combustible and unsafe office of the valuable papers relating to many of these claims, but of many other papers whose loss would be a grievous calamity. It would also relieve the War and Treasury Departments of papers which now occupy rooms costing millions of dollars.

I submit a plan which I have caused to be prepared of such a building, to be 302 by 540 feet, surrounding a court-yard 171 by 309 feet.

It would occupy a whole block, would provide 70,000 feet of stone floor under fire-proof roof, (about one and two-thirds acres,) would contain 1,750,000 cubic feet of storage room, and could be built for about $200,000.

It has but one door of entrance from the street. The rooms are all separated by fire-proof party walls without openings. There are windows on the street and on the court, placed high so as not to be easily reached and forced. Each room communicates by a strong door with a covered porch surrounding the court-yard. A water and watch tower in the center keeps a supply of water constantly at a sufficient head to extinguish fire, which, originating in any one room, could not possibly communicate to the other rooms, and, in fact, could be extinguished before it could destroy much of the contents of the room in which it originated.

I submit this as a cheap provision for keeping in safety a great quantity of very important state papers and at the same time relieving the handsome and costly buildings occupied by the Executive Departments of a considerable portion of the matter stored in them, which occupies such costly space needed for the transaction of daily business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

The question being on the consideration of the bill, more than four members objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

SMITH E. G. RAWSON.

Mr. VANCE. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to call up for present consideration the bill (S. No. 203) for the relief of the widow and children of Smith E. G. Rawson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Patents be, and hereby is, authorized to hear and determine the application of Frances A. Rawson, widow of Smith E. G. Rawson, for an extension of letters patent for an improvement in testicle-supporters granted to him the 4th day of August, 1863, numbered 39452; and if upon such hearing the Commissioner shall be satisfied that the said Smith E. G. Rawson, without fault or neglect on his part, has failed to obtain from the use or sale of his invention or discovery a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it and its introduction into use, and that it is just and proper that the term of the patent should be extended, the said Commissioner shall make a certificate upon said patent renewing and extending the same to Frances A. Rawson, widow of said Smith E. G. Rawson, in trust for herself and her children, for the further term of seven years from the date of the issuance of such certificate, which certificate shall be recorded in the Patent Office: Provided, That no person shall be held liable for infringing the patent between the expiration of the patent and its extension.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. VANCE. Let the report be read, and I think there will be no objection to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2505) for the relief of Frances A. Rawson, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The report of the Committee on Patents, submitted by Mr. Ward in the Forty-sixth Congress, correctly states the case. The report is as follows:

"The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 2537, submit the following report:

"In this case the committee have decided to report a substitute, and recommend favorable action on the bill, because they find exceptional circumstances connected with it, and believe that no precedent can thereby be established to make a general rule for the extension of patents.

"The subject-matter of this patent is exceptional in itself. It is a surgical appliance of a delicate and private nature, and its beneficial effects have been in the direction of relieving the suffering and sustaining the weak.

"Of its value as an invention there can be no doubt. This is fully established by the testimony submitted to your committee by such eminent surgeons as Drs. Buchanan, Belcher, and Lusby, of New York City; Hall, of Saratoga; Bulkley, of Washington; and Bliss and Connor, surgeons in the United States service.

"The evidence shows that the patent was originally granted on August 4, 1863, for the period of seventeen years; that for the first eight years there were virtually no returns, notwithstanding the inventor and his family worked faithfully, laboriously, and constantly to introduce the invention, investing all his own means, the separate estate of his wife, and borrowing funds from friends and relatives in the enterprise. But the article was of a character that confined it to a necessarily restricted market, and closed to it the ordinary channels to publicity by advertisement and exhibition.

"As soon as these indefatigable efforts had produced results by establishing a business in 1871, the hostility of infringers was manifested, followed by a long course of litigation, and expenses to the inventor of about $3,500.

"About this period, also, the extraordinary exertions of years and the anxieties of the business and litigation preyed upon the health of Mr. Rawson, and he was prevented by illness for a considerable time from giving such care and attention to the promotion of his business as would develop it to the full extent. Nevertheless, he worked to the utmost of his strength, and with the assistance of his family maintained the manufacture of the patented article. Mr. Rawson died on July 9, 1879.

"It is further to be noticed that Mr. Rawson gave his whole time and effort to the introduction of his invention. He did not speculate by disposing of licenses, but himself manufactured; he did not sell his invention, but struggled himself to make it a success. His accounts, verified by affidavit, show that for the entire life of the patent the profits realized both from the patent and the business of manufacturing, representing the aggregate labors of himself, wife, and children, amount to $19,177.12. But the long illness, with the consequent heavy expenses, have left the inventor's family without money or property.

"The widow of Mr. Rawson is the petitioner for the extension of the patent proposed by this bill. She is entitled to consideration, having invested her private estate in the enterprise at its inception, and having faithfully assisted her husband by her manual labor, her encouragement and advice during all the long years of his struggles. Believing, therefore, that the exceptional character of the invention, its benefit to the public, and the peculiar circumstances of difficulty that attended its introduction to public use render it a case eminently entitled to the consideration of Congress, the committee recommend that the substitute to the bill do pass."

"The committee propose to amend the bill by striking out, in line 19, the words "ten years" and inserting the words "seven years;" also, with a proviso that no person shall be held liable for infringing the patent between the expiration of the patent and its extension. With these amendments, we recommend that the bill do pass.

The question being on the consideration of the bill six members objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

HELEN M. SCHOLEFIELD.

Mr. RAY. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to call up for present consideration the bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Helen M. Scholefield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury appropriated or hereafter to be appropriated to the payment of the Army, to Helen M. Scholefield, administratrix of the estate of C. M. Scholefield, deceased, late an additional paymaster in the Army, the sum of $544.32, being the amount due to the said paymaster on the final settlement of his accounts, after deducting from the amount charged to him the sum of $10,000 which stands to the debit of the said paymaster on the authority of an alleged voucher for that amount presented by Major J. Ledyard Hodge, late paymaster, and bearing date August 10, 1864, the validity of which voucher the Government has failed to establish in a suit brought and finally determined in the United States district court at Utica, New York, in April, 1876, for the settlement of the accounts of the said Major C. M. Scholefield, as such additional paymaster, with the Government; and upon the payment of the said sum of $544.32, as herein provided, the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to balance the accounts of the said Major C. M. Scholefield, as paymaster, with the Government.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement touching this bill. I think no one will object to it if its object and purport be understood. The beneficiary of this bill is the widow of the late assistant Army paymaster Major Charles M. Scholefield, of Whites-town, New York, who died November 21, 1869. He was assistant paymaster for several years and until October 3, 1865, when he resigned. His accounts were all rendered to the proper department and the funds of the Government in his hands at that time were all paid over to the proper officer of the Government. But his account was not closed or settled at the time, probably because other and earlier accounts preceded it.

In 1867 or 1868 another assistant paymaster, named J. Ledyard Hodge, was discovered to have embezzled a considerable amount of public money. Hodge returned false accounts and vouchers to the Government, and among them one showing he had paid Scholefield $10,000. It does not appear that Paymaster Scholefield was ever advised of these facts in his life-time. Scholefield died November 1, 1869, without ever having been informed of the existence of any such charge or voucher against himself. The Government did not notify him. After his death, and after Hodge had been indicted and convicted as an embezzler of the public funds, a claim was made against the estate of Scholefield for the $10,000. On an examination of the voucher by his friends and the administrator, it was discovered that this voucher was a forgery, and the estate and his sureties refused to pay the $9,455.68 which the books at the Treasury Department, reckoning the false voucher, showed was due from Scholefield to balance his accounts.

In 1872 the Government brought a suit in the United States circuit court for the northern district of New York against his bondsmen to recover the balance due. The cause was twice tried by a jury. The only issue was whether this receipt purporting to be signed by Scholefield was a forgery. The jury found at both trials it was a forgery, and in 1876 a final judgment was entered for the defendants and against the Government in the cause.

Striking out the $10,000 item from the final statement of accounts rendered by Paymaster Scholefield in his life-time it leaves a balance overpaid by him to the Department of $544.32. The Government does not now claim anything from the estate, but the accounting officers of the Treasury still have this false balance of $9,455.68 charged on their books against him, and cannot adjust it without the authority of an act of Congress. It is conceded by the Government that the sum of $544 is due the administratrix, Mrs. Helen A. Scholefield, in whose behalf the bill is reported.

I hope nobody will object to this bill. It has passed the Senate. It was favorably reported in the last Congress by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CROWLEY,] who was also counsel for the Government and tried the case for the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Eight members rose.

The SPEAKER. Eight gentlemen objecting, the bill is not before the House.

DISTRIBUTION OF JOURNALS.

The Committee on Printing was called.

Mr. MCCLURE. I am authorized by the Committee on Printing to report for present consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives to public and law libraries.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed, from the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives in his charge, to distribute copies to such public and law libraries, not already supplied with the same, as shall be designated, in equal number, by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred joint resolution (H. R. No. 131) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to distribute copies of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there ought to be some explanation as to the necessity for this measure. These works are of very little general value; and we are so constantly increasing the printing and making it so heavy a cost to the Government that I think some caution should be exercised.

Mr. MCCLURE. The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to distribute the Journals of the Senate and the House to public and law libraries which are not now supplied with the same. These volumes have accumulated in the Interior Department, and there is no law for their distribution. It involves the distribution of about 1,200 volumes.

Mr. RANDALL. Annually?

Mr. MCCLURE. No; not annually, but simply the distribution of those now on hand.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does this apply to the distribution of those to be printed hereafter?

Mr. MCCLURE. No, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. I did not distinctly hear the reading of the resolution, but am inclined to think it does not guard against future deliveries.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be added that this only applies to the copies now on hand.

The SPEAKER. The word "now" after the word "Representatives" would make that perfectly clear.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. It would then read "now in his charge."

Mr. MCCLURE. I agree to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCCLURE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 6687) for the manufacture of salt in the Indian Territory.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) to print 25,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 2162) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate to the J. F. Sawyer Post No. 7, Grand Army of the Republic, at Omro, Wisconsin, one condemned 24-pounder cast-iron cannon;

A bill (S. No. 2153) for the erection of a public building at Leavenworth, Kansas;

A bill (S. No. 2169) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 2172) to amend section 4702, title 57, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to it by citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

The Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay was called.

Mr. CURTIN. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty and Back Pay to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2713) to extend the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of certain pensioners," approved March 3, 1879, to certain other pensioners.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain pensioners," approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same are hereby, extended to all pensioners now on the pension-roll, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, for amputation of either arm at the shoulder-joint.

Mr. CURTIN. The reasons for the passage of this bill are perfectly obvious. The law now provides a pension of $37.50 per month for a man who has lost a leg at the hip-joint. This bill proposes to extend that bounty to those who have lost an arm at the shoulder-joint. I do not believe that there are twenty men living in the United States who have suffered in that way; I know of but one now in Pennsylvania. That was a remarkable surgical operation sometimes resorted to during the war, and those who suffered it rarely lived. The loss of an arm at the shoulder-joint is certainly a greater disability than the loss of a leg at the hip-joint.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. I have not before me the law which this bill proposes to amend. I will ask the gentleman if it carries any arrears?

Mr. CURTIN. None at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope there will be no objection to this bill. It is of similar nature to one introduced by myself, and I think it is very meritorious. I know of but one case in my own district, and, as has already been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, believe it will affect but few persons.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

Mr. BROWNE. If I understand this bill correctly, it simply makes the pension of those who have suffered an amputation at the shoulder-joint equal to the pension given to those who have suffered an amputation at the hip-joint, $37.50 per month.

Mr. CURTIN. That is all, and there are but about twenty persons living who would receive any benefit under this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Either the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] is incorrect, or a soldier who suffered this disability is incorrect, for the soldier stated to me the number at a larger figure than the gentleman from Pennsylvania has given. I have no doubt but that we can find the exact facts by calling upon the Commissioner of Pensions. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

This committee, to whom was referred House bill No. 2713, have, after duly considering the same, come to the conclusion that it ought to pass.

The act of March 3, 1879, gave to all pensioners then on the pension-rolls, or who should hereafter be placed thereon, for amputation of either leg at the hip-joint, a pension of $37.50 per month.

This bill seeks to extend the provisions of that act to all pensioners who are now on the pension-rolls, or may hereafter be placed thereon, for amputation of either arm at the shoulder-joint.

The committee are of opinion that, taking everything into account, the man who has lost an arm is equally as helpless as one who has lost a leg, and they therefore favor the change of the law asked for in this bill.

There being no objection, the bill was before the House for consideration.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the bill is retroactive in its effect?

Mr. CURTIN. It is not.

Mr. McMILLIN. And carries no arrears?

Mr. CURTIN. It does not, and the original law does not.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know whether there are other sections of the original act which relate to this class of pensions than the one referred to in the bill now before the House?

Mr. CURTIN. The section referred to in the bill is the only one referred to by it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move to amend the bill so that it shall take effect only after its passage.

Mr. CURTIN. I do not object to that, though there is no necessity for it.

Mr. McMILLIN. It ought to be so guarded as to carry with it no arrears.

Mr. CURTIN. It does not; but I am satisfied to put that in if it will gratify the gentleman.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move to amend the bill by adding to it:

Provided, That no arrears shall be allowed under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CURTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REDEMPTION OF TWO-CENT DOCUMENTARY STAMPS.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4906) repealing the limitation of redemption of two-cent documentary internal-revenue stamps by the Government.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That claims for the redemption of two-cent documentary internal-revenue stamps may be allowed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, notwithstanding any existing statutory provision limiting the time for their redemption.

Mr. DUNNELL. This bill is a substitute for a bill which provided for the extension of time for the redemption of internal-revenue stamps and also two-cent documentary stamps. The Secretary of the Treasury and also the Commissioner of Internal Revenue did not recommend the repeal of so much of the law as referred to internal-revenue stamps, but did approve the extension of time for the redemption of the two-cent documentary stamps.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] whether he proposes to remove all limitations upon the redemption of these stamps?

Mr. DUNNELL. Of the two-cent documentary stamps, yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why is not the limit now proposed a very proper limit?

Mr. DUNNELL. The fact is that there are a great many of these stamps in existence, and there is a constant pressure upon the Department for their redemption. It is difficult to see why the Government should refuse to redeem these stamps which may not have been used and which cannot now be used. The report of the officers of the Government may be read if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is not satisfied.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill H. R. No. 2318, have had the same under consideration, and report back a substitute therefor and recommend its passage.

Your committee refer to the following letters from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the honorable Secretary of the Treasury for the reasons sustaining the report:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 9, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated the 8th instant, in reply to your letter to him of the 3d instant, requesting his views in regard to bill H. R. No. 2318, repealing the limitation of redemption of internal-revenue stamps.

It will be seen that the Commissioner gives what appear to be satisfactory reasons against the passage of the bill, except in so far as it would affect the redemption of the two-cent stamps now in current use. Such stamps, under the present law, must be presented for redemption within three years after the purchase of the same. The Commissioner proposes to repeal that limitation, and has drafted a bill (which is inclosed) for that purpose, to which I see no objection.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. M. H. DUNNELL,

Of the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Washington, February 8, 1881.

SIR: I am in receipt of a letter, under date of the 3d instant, from Hon. M. H. DUNNELL, chairman of sub-committee of the Committee on Ways and Means, inclosing copy of bill H. R. No. 2318, repealing the limitation of redemption of internal-revenue stamps, in which I am requested to give an opinion as to the propriety of the passage of the bill.

In reply I have the honor to forward herewith the copy of said bill, and have to inform you that the act of March 1, 1879, provided a limitation in regard to the redemption of internal-revenue stamps. The act of July 14, 1870, provided for discontinuing the use of certain documentary stamps after October 1, 1870, and such of these stamps as were in the hands of citizens unused were subject to be redeemed upon application to this Office.

You are further informed that such stamps were constantly presented for redemption for a number of years, when finally the stamps offered for redemption were few in number and most of them of doubtful character, it being almost impossible in many cases to determine whether the stamps had been used or not. These facts were brought to the attention of Congress, and after due consideration the act of March 1, 1879, was enacted, which provided that such stamps should not be redeemed after the 30th of June, 1879.

It will be seen that nearly ten years elapsed from the date of the repeal of the tax law until the limitation went into effect, during all of which time parties holding such stamps could present them for redemption.

I am of opinion that the evil to be remedied is not of such consequence as calls for legislation. I am satisfied that the number of unused stamps now in the hands of the people is very insignificant.

In regard to that branch of the act of March 1, 1879, which provides a limitation upon the redemption of the two-cent stamps now in current use, I have the honor to recommend its repeal, and respectfully forward a draft of a bill for that purpose.

Very respectfully,

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

Hon. CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read? [After a pause.] Only one gentleman objects, and the bill is before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It appears that the objection of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to measures of this kind has been based upon the difficulty of determining whether stamps presented for redemption have been used. Certainly it would appear proper that there should be a reasonable limitation to prevent fraudulent transactions growing out of attempts to secure from the Government the redemption of stamps which have actually been used. It has always appeared to me that when in the passage of a law reasonable limitations have been provided it is safest to adhere to those limitations. I do not see any ground for apprehending fraud in this case except in the direction suggested by the Commissioner himself; and as a safeguard in that respect some reasonable limitation should be imposed.

Mr. DUNNELL. The suggestions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has referred had reference to a part of the original bill, which has now been struck out. It might appear on first view that the bill is objected to by the Commissioner; but in point of fact the measure has been so modified as to obviate his objections. The Commissioner does not object to the redemption of two-cent documentary stamps.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed; there being—ayes 33, noes 5.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The hour for business under the special rule has now expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to move to proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The business of the morning hour is first in order.

GEORGE F. BICKNELL.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. No. 178) for the relief of George F. Bicknell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DECORATIONS FROM FOREIGN POWERS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration the joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing Lieutenant-Commander Charles Dwight Sigsbee, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the Emperor of Germany, and also authorizing Joseph R. Hawley to accept decorations from the Governments of the Netherlands, of Spain, and of Japan.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That Lieutenant-Commander Charles Dwight Sigsbee, of the United States Navy, be, and is hereby, authorized to accept a decoration of the Order of the Red Eagle which has been tendered him by the Emperor of Germany for meritorious service rendered to the German navy in superintending the construction of a deep-sea sounding-machine invented by himself. Permission is also granted to Joseph R. Hawley to accept from the Governments of the Netherlands, of Spain, and of Japan certain decorations tendered him as president of the United States centennial commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I must object to everything of this kind. We have a good enough eagle of our own without going abroad for a "red eagle." I object to all these decorations from foreign countries as a piece of snobbery.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I will.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Lieutenant-Commander Sigsbee of our Navy invented for deep soundings the finest machine in the world. The Emperor of Germany asked that it might be duplicated for his government. Lieutenant-Commander Sigsbee giving his time to the work, the machine was completed and sent abroad. There now rests in the State Department a simple decoration sent to him by the Emperor of Germany.

The decorations offered to General Hawley are from the Netherlands, from Spain and Japan, in recognition of his services as president of our great centennial exposition. I hope that no man will object to the interchange of courtesies of this kind.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope this resolution will pass as a deserved recognition to General Hawley.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. There is no man living who respects General Hawley more than I do. I withdraw my objection; but hereafter I will object to everything of this kind.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GERMAN NATIONAL BANK, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2911) for the relief of the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky, and that the same be put on its passage. It is a merely formal matter in reference to the loss of some coupons destroyed while in the custody of the postal authorities.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $313.50 to the German National Bank of Louisville, Kentucky, being the amount of United States 5-20 coupons inclosed in a registered letter and destroyed while in custody of the postal authorities: Provided, however, That a satisfactory bond of indemnity shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury before said payment shall be made.

Mr. WILLIS. This bill has been favorably reported in two Congresses.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM W. THOMAS.

Mr. REED. I desire unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill precisely similar in its object to that just passed. It is the bill (H. R. No. 604) for the relief of William W. Thomas. I ask that the Committee on Claims be discharged from its further consideration and that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to William W. Thomas, of Portland, in the State of Maine, the sum of $450, (being the amount of coupons of United States bonds lost by him, and now unpaid, namely: coupons due December 15, 1867, of five-hundred-dollar 7-30 notes numbered 132909, 132911, 142262, and 142268, act of June 30, 1864, dated June 15, 1865; also coupons due January 15, 1868, of one-thousand-dollar 7-30 notes numbered 24199, 24204, 39406, and 64136, act of June 30, 1864, dated July 15, 1865; and coupons due January 1, 1868, of bonds numbered 1437, 86826, and 86827, for $1,000 each, act of July 17, 1861) upon said Thomas giving a bond of indemnity in double the amount to be paid, with sureties satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the present law provide for cases of this kind?

Mr. REED. It does not; it applies only to bonds.

Mr. WILLIS. The law speaks of interest-bearing securities, and as coupons do not bear interest the Secretary of the Treasury on this technicality rules out cases of this kind.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some statement as to how this loss occurred.

Mr. REED. It is impossible to state how the loss occurred. Mr. Thomas had cut off the coupons and put them away for collection and they were lost. This happened over ten years ago and they have never turned up. Under the bill he is to give a bond which will protect the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. What evidence is there that he owned the bonds at all?

Mr. REED. The evidence is that he made the statement to me, and I know him personally to be a perfectly reliable man and one very liable to own bonds.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be some evidence before the House that the party claiming this relief was the owner of the bonds and that the loss actually occurred.

Mr. REED. The correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury shows that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that the bonds were not lost, but the coupons.

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the whole amount is—how much?

Mr. REED. Four hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. Is this bill recommended by any committee?

Mr. REED. No, sir; it has not yet been reported. But I personally know about it and vouch for it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CARLILE P. PATTERSON.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement. I was instructed by the select committee in relation to the late Carlile P. Patterson to submit a report from that committee during the hour under the new rule, but by some inadvertence that committee was not called.

The SPEAKER. It was not called because it was not treated as one of the committees coming within the rule. The language of the rule is "standing committees." The Chair, however, will recognize the gentleman to ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; then I ask to report from that committee a bill allowing the widow of Carlile P. Patterson one year's salary. It is in the line of precedents we have established granting a year's salary to the widows of the deceased ministers to Peru, Chili, and Liberia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PRESCOTT. Yes; I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope this will not be done. We are carrying the rule in reference to such cases a very great way.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

ALASKA.

Mr. YOUNG, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 283) authorizing the printing of the report of the collector of customs in Alaska in relation to that Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF ALLEGHENY RIVER.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask by unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution requiring the Chief Engineer of the United States Army to cause an examination of plans for the improvement of the Allegheny River.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, when the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Chief Engineer of the United States Army be, and he is hereby, required to cause to be examined and to report to the House the various plans for improving the navigation of the Allegheny River, in Pennsylvania, together with such recommendations as may be deemed proper.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object. I think we have had legislation enough on that subject during this session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. We might as well have the regular order.

Mr. LEWIS. I hope there will be no objection to my calling up Senate bill No. 1589 for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

ENSIGN L. K. REYNOLDS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 284) granting permission to Ensign L. K. Reynolds, United States Navy, to accept the decoration of the Royal and Imperial Order of Francis-Joseph from the Government of Austria; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MONTPELIER, VERMONT.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 5390, a bill (H. R. No. 6887) for the erection of a public building at Montpelier, Vermont; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BRATTLEBOROUGH, VERMONT.

Mr. LEWIS also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6788) making an appropriation for the erection of a public building at Brattleborough, Vermont; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. LEWIS also, from the same committee, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 5566) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM MOSS.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6888) making an appropriation to pay William Moss, of Arkansas, for extra mail service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LOUISA F. STONE.

Mr. CHAPMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3325, a bill (H. R. No. 6889) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa F. Stone; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THE LATE CARLILE P. PATTERSON.

Mr. RANDALL, from the select committee in relation to the late Carlile P. Patterson, reported a joint resolution (H. R. No. 285) allowing the widow of Carlile P. Patterson, late Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, one year's salary; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FIFTY-FIRST REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VETERAN VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. WARD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the Senate joint resolution No. 102. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to it by citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania.

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to said regiment by the citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania, which was captured by the confederate forces on May 12, 1864, at the battle of Spottsylvania, Virginia, and subsequently retaken by the United States troops at the fall of Richmond.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PETER MARCH AND OTHERS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to call up for present consideration the bill H. R. No. 1328. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on War Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1328) for the relief of Peter March, Frederick Kimmerly, David Vaughn, Barney Schooley, Eliza Scott, widow of Joseph Scott, Phebe C. Clement, widow of Isaac M. Clement, Frederick Smith, Owen McNabb, and Thomas Miller.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Peter March $126.16;

To Frederick Kimmerly, $273.25;

To David Vaughn, $393.25;

To Barney Schooley, $95.50;

To Eliza Scott, widow of Joseph Scott, deceased, $2,433.25;

To Phebe C. Clement, widow of Isaac M. Clement, deceased, $753.25;

To Frederick Smith, $273.25;

To Owen McNabb, $273.25; and

To Thomas Miller, the sum of $273.25, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; the same being compensation in full for time while held as prisoners of war after being captured from the steamboat Prima Donna, in 1864, as will appear from evidence on file in the Third Auditor's Office, United States Treasury, cases numbered 37736, 39260, 39601, 39639, and 39736.

Mr. McMILLIN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear some explanation of this bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on War Claims. These persons were in the service of the Government, engaged in the transportation of government supplies when captured. In all such cases heretofore the parties have been paid until Secretary Sherman expressed a doubt as to the authority of the Department to pay them. The matter, therefore, was referred to Congress, and having been fully investigated this is the unanimous report of the committee. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] is familiar with the subject.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the report was read or the letter of the Third Auditor which is embraced in the report, I do not think there would be any objection. This is not to pay damages, but is simply to pay these persons their usual compensation while held in captivity—

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As prisoners of war.

Mr. CARLISLE. Similar claims have been paid heretofore. I believe a part of the very crew of this vessel have already been paid by special act of Congress.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is true.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JULIA A. NUTT.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1472) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased. That bill was called up the other day and objection was made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] The objection is now removed by the amendments I propose to offer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Quartermaster-General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to examine, adjust, and settle the claims of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased, late of Natchez, in the State of Mississippi, growing out of the occupation and use by the United States Army during the late rebellion of the property of the said Haller Nutt during his lifetime, or of his estate after his decease, including live stock, goods, and moneys taken and used by the United States or the armies thereof; and full jurisdiction is hereby given to the Quartermaster-General to try and determine the same; and he may consider the evidence heretofore taken on said claim, so far as applicable, before the commissioners of claims, and such other legal evidence as may be adduced before him in behalf of the legal representatives of Haller Nutt, deceased, or in behalf of the United States: Provided, That no part of said claims upon which said commissioners of claims have passed on the merits shall be considered by the Quartermaster-General.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. There were objections made to it the other day. I have conversed with the members who objected. There are certain amendments which they insist shall be placed on the bill, which I will have read, and I think then there will be no objection made. The bill does not appropriate a dollar.

The Clerk read the proposed amendments, as follows:

Insert after the word "examining," in the fourth line, the word "and."
Strike out of said line, after the word "adjust," the words "and settle."
In lines 11, 12, and 13, strike out all after the word "thereof," in line 11, down to and including the word "same," in line 13, namely, these words: "and full jurisdiction is hereby given to the Quartermaster-General to try and determine the same."
At the end of line 17, after the words "United States," insert as follows: "And shall report the facts to Congress, to be considered with other claims reported by the Quartermaster-General."

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That brings the case back to the House after being passed upon by the accounting officers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXTRA PAY TO CAPITOL POLICE.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BREWER. I desire to report back from the Committee on Accounts with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands this is a privileged matter, being a report from the Committee on Accounts.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to all those of the Capitol police on the roll July 1, 1882, one month's extra pay, at the same compensation now paid them by law; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be made immediately available.

Mr. BREWER. I ask that the report of the committee be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 281) to pay the Capitol police one month's extra pay, beg to report that they have considered the same, and report it back to the House with their approval, and recommend that the same do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it is privileged, as it relates to the employés of the House and of the Capitol.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand that these Capitol police are in any sense House employés.

Mr. BREWER. I would say that similar reports from the Committee on Accounts have heretofore been considered privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would call attention to the fact that this joint resolution relates to the Capitol police, not to the employés of the House, which is the distinction the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] makes, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BREWER. Are they not employés of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; but the Chair is willing to hear the gentleman on that subject.

Mr. BREWER. Are they not appointed by officers of the House?

The SPEAKER. They are not, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BREWER. Do I understand, then, that the Chair decides that this is not a privileged report? If so, I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will withdraw his objection. All the employés of the House have had voted them an extra month's pay, and it has been customary and would be but simple justice that the Capitol police should receive the same. They are here more hours than the House employés; they are here nights and Sundays and week days; they have to purchase two suits of clothes a year, and are now receiving $300 a year less than they received some time ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that upon examining Rule XI it discovers that the Committee on Accounts are charged with the duty of considering all matters touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, and paragraph 47 of Rule XI authorizes the Committee on Accounts to report at any time on all matters touching the expenditures of the contingent fund of the House.

This joint resolution authorizes and directs the Clerk of the House to pay all of those Capitol police on the roll July 1, 1882, one month's extra pay. If that is paid out of the contingent fund of the House, as the Chair thinks it is, then it seems to the Chair that under the rule the Committee on Accounts can report this joint resolution at any time, and the right to report at any time carries with it the right of present consideration. The Chair therefore reviews its first impression about the matter, and would hold that this joint resolution is in order. It does not turn upon the question as to whether the Capitol police are officers or employés of the House, but whether they are paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. So that any proposition would now be in order coming from that committee, provided it relates to any expenditure to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House?

The SPEAKER. The complaint of the gentleman is a complaint against a standing rule of the House.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 29, noes 19.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. McMILLIN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BREWER and Mr. McMILLIN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 62, noes 58.

Mr. McMILLIN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will retain their places and continue the count, and members who have not voted are requested to vote.

The count was continued; and the tellers further reported that there were—ayes 84, noes 63.

So the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NEAL. If it is in order I would like to say a word in connection with this joint resolution and to call attention to some facts.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. NEAL. It is in order to move to recommit.

Mr. KLOTZ. Will the gentleman give any reason for that?

Mr. NEAL. I will if the House will give me an opportunity to do so. I move to recommit this joint resolution to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. BREWER. I call the previous question.

Mr. NEAL. I propose to state my reasons for making that motion.

Mr. URNER. Is the motion to recommit debatable?

Mr. NEAL. Certainly it is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] moves to recommit this joint resolution to the Committee on Accounts, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BREWER] demands the previous question on that motion and on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. NEAL. Now, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order pending the previous question.

Mr. NEAL. Then I ask consent to say what this joint resolution is; the reading of it does not show.

Mr. BREWER. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. We want to know the facts.

Mr. NEAL. I will state the facts.

Mr. BREWER. I have stated them.

Mr. NEAL. You have not stated all the facts.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Can the previous question be called upon the motion to recommit and the passage of the joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. At the time the motion to recommit was made the joint resolution had been read a third time, and the question was upon its passage. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BREWER] moved the previous question, which, by the express terms of standing rule XVII, can apply to as many pending propositions as the gentleman desires.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. But before he made that motion the motion to recommit was pending.

The SPEAKER. That motion is pending now.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. But can the gentleman demand the previous question while the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] was on the floor desiring to speak on the subject, and can the Speaker lump the two together and put the question in the way he did?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who makes the motion to recommit does not hold the floor while the question is being stated to the House; and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BREWER] promptly moved the previous question, which is a privileged motion.

Mr. NEAL. I moved to recommit. The Chair recognized me for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly; and that motion is pending because the gentleman was recognized before the motion for the previous question was made.

Mr. NEAL. I did not yield the floor, however, to the gentleman from New Jersey or any other person. I understand that the motion to recommit is debatable.

The SPEAKER. But it is not debatable after the previous question has been ordered on it.

Mr. NEAL. But I did not yield the floor to the gentleman to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could not prevent it. The motion was made and the previous question has been ordered. It can be ordered under the rules upon as many propositions as are before the House.

The question being on the motion to recommit,

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BREWER. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] desires five minutes, I am willing he may occupy that time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 66, nays 81, not voting 143; as follows:

YEAS—66.

The question recurring on the passage of the joint resolution;

Mr. ATHERTON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being—yeas 23, noes 66; more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to make an inquiry—I do not know that it is a parliamentary inquiry. Will the word "police" in this resolution, as technically construed, embrace any of the police here in Washington other than the Capitol police?

The SPEAKER. The language of the resolution is "Capitol police on the rolls July 1, 1882."

Mr. URNER. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that all the other employees about the Capitol have been provided for in one of the appropriation bills. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was decided in the affirmative—yeas 93, nays 57, not voting 139; as follows:

ANNUAL REPORTS OF THE UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) to print 25,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 25,000 copies each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey, with the necessary illustrations and charts; 10,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 5,000 for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 for the use of the United States Geological Survey; the illustrations and charts to be made by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "eleven;" in line 5, strike out "ten" and insert "five;" in lines 6 and 7, strike out "five thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" in line 7, strike out "ten thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" after "survey," in line 8, insert "and one thousand for sale by the Public Printer, at the cost of publication with 10 per cent. added thereto."

Amend the title so as to read, "Joint resolution to print 11,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey."

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF SIGNAL-SERVICE REPORTS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back Senate concurrent resolution that there be printed and bound for the use of the Signal-Office of the Department of War 2,500 copies of the annual report of the Chief Signal-Officer for 1881, with an amendment striking out "2,500" and inserting "10,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. Where does this come from?

Mr. SPRINGER. From the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOLMAN. There seems to be no limit to the printing ordered here. My friend ought to consider whether there will not be some limit to the endurance of the people.

Mr. SPRINGER. The reason for the change is that the Senate passed two resolutions, one for 2,500 copies and the other for 7,500 copies; and this resolution, as amended, is intended to cover both.

I ask the Clerk to read the message of the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 19, 1882.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, a communication from the Secretary of War, dated the 14th instant, and accompanying letter from the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, recommending the passage of a joint resolution, in accordance with the inclosed draft, authorizing the printing and binding of 10,000 additional copies of the latter's annual report for the year 1881.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 14, 1882.

I have the honor to transmit herewith, with the request that it be laid before Congress, a communication from the Chief Signal Officer, dated the 9th instant, recommending the passage of a joint resolution, draught of which is inclosed, authorizing the printing and binding of 10,000 additional copies of his annual report for the year 1881.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
Washington City, January 9, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a joint resolution of Congress intended to authorize the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, with the request that you transmit it to Congress with such favorable recommendation as you may deem proper.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. HAZEN,
Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen., Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A.
The Honorable SECRETARY OF WAR.

Joint resolution authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print and bind, for the use of the Signal Office, 10,000 additional copies of the annual report of the Chief Signal Officer for the year 1881; and the Public Printer is authorized to contract for the illustrations with the person now furnishing the illustrations for the Congressional edition.

Mr. HOLMAN. The recommendation is a very mild one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will repeat the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "2,500" and inserting "10,000" in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to hear some explanation of this.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the vote is taken on the amendment I desire to make an explanation which will take but one moment. The Senate passed a resolution on this subject of printing the reports of the Signal Service Bureau; one for 2,500 copies and another for 7,500. Instead of passing both those resolutions the House committee has recommended the amendment of one of them so as to make the number correspond with the number provided in the two resolutions which the Senate has passed. The Senate first passed one for the printing of 2,500 copies and found that was not enough to make the exchanges required by the bureau.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. What was the number printed last year?

Mr. SPRINGER. The same as is now provided for, 10,000 copies. General Hazen came before the committee and represented that 10,000 copies was the smallest number he could possibly get along with to meet the demand. They must be sent to all the Signal-Service stations of the United States, where they can be referred to in making up reports in reference to the weather, storms, &c.

Mr. CANNON. How large a book is this?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have an estimate here of the amount of printing, but I cannot tell just now the precise number of pages.

Mr. CANNON. How many stations are there in the United States?

Mr. SPRINGER. I cannot state the exact number. But I may say there are exchanges made with all the important libraries of Europe and all the public libraries of the United States where persons are engaged in the investigation of these subjects. The reports go to the scientific people, and are not distributed by members indiscriminately as other documents are. They are entirely for the use of the Signal Service, and they are only sent to persons engaged in scientific pursuits. It is a valuable book to those engaged in this particular branch of investigation. I think gentlemen will bear me out in the statement that no expenditure the Government has made is so beneficial to science as that for reporting the observations of the Signal Service.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask my friend from Illinois a question. If you cut off members and Senators from making the distribution, which is very proper, I think, is not an edition of 10,000 copies for the stations, which number between 300 and 400 all told in the United States, a very large edition to print?

Mr. SPRINGER. I get my information from General Hazen. He stated he had over 10,000 names on his list of scientific persons and institutions of learning and libraries, together with his own corps, and he required this number. It is upon that statement our committee make its recommendation; and the Senate committee have made the same recommendation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. Upon that question the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has demanded a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 30, noes 11.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we should have a quorum to pass this.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point that no quorum has voted upon the amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. SPRINGER. As a quorum does not appear to be present I will withdraw the report and will call it up to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RYAN. I think there is a quorum present and suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that he proceed with his resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. We might perhaps get a quorum, but I am willing to let the resolution remain as unfinished business.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the understanding we will have a little rest in this attempt to deplete the Treasury by unnecessary printing, I withdraw the point as to a quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman should consider that the more printing there is the more knowledge is disseminated.

Further count not being called for, the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn, Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 720) to fix the compensation of the master armorer at the national armory in Springfield, Massachusetts; and
A bill (H. R. No. 6687) for the manufacture of salt in the Indian Territory.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. CHAPMAN to print in the RECORD some remarks on House bill No. 5899. [See Appendix.]

AMERICAN FORESTRY CONVENTION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the proceedings of the American forestry convention, held at Cincinnati in April, 1877, be printed under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed, of which 1,300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House, and 1,100 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of M. M. Walker & Co. and others, merchants, manufacturers, and business men of Dubuque, Iowa, praying for the passage of the Lowell bill, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable the members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Whereas the commercial community of the country represented in their various boards of trade, chambers of commerce, commercial exchanges, &c., in all sections, by their representatives in convention assembled January 19 and 20, 1881, declared themselves in favor of the passage of the Lowell bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; and

Whereas the following organizations, representing the greater portion of the capital of the country embarked in commercial pursuits, were represented by delegates in said convention, and indorsed said bill in preference to all others, namely: Board of Trade, Trenton, New Jersey; Chamber of Commerce, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Board of Trade, Cincinnati, Ohio; Board of Trade, Providence, Rhode Island; Oil Exchange, Olean, New York; Philadelphia Cotton Exchange; New England Shoe and Leather Association, Boston, Massachusetts; Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade, New York; Western Iron Association, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Convention of Merchants, Rochester, New York; Manufacturing Chemists' Association of United States; Mercantile Jobbers' Association, Philadelphia; Commercial Club of Boston; Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, Baltimore; Board of Trade, Baltimore, Maryland; National Boot and Shoe Jobbers' Association, United States; Dover Board of Trade, New Hampshire; Chamber of Commerce, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; National Board of Trade, United States; Merchants' Board of Trade, Denver, Colorado; New York Produce Exchange; Board of Trade, Burlington, Iowa; New York Board of Trade and Transportation; New York Merchants' Club, New York; New York Chamber of Commerce; Boston Board of Trade; Boston Merchants' Association; New Orleans Cotton Exchange; Little Rock Cotton and Produce Exchange; Charleston Chamber of Commerce; Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, Georgia; Worcester Board of Trade; Scranton Board of Trade, Pennsylvania; Minneapolis Board of Trade, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Philadelphia Maritime Exchange; Association of Manufacturers of Textile Fabrics, Philadelphia; Portland Board of Trade; New Haven Chamber of Commerce; Philadelphia Board of Trade; Shoe and Leather Board of Trade, Baltimore; Peoria (Illinois) Board of Trade; Therefore,

The undersigned, with the fullest faith in the intelligence, experience, and honest purposes of the business men composing said associations, earnestly petition your honorable bodies for the early passage of said bill and protest against any measure that will extend to the courts large discretionary powers; that will elevate the judge above the law; that will withdraw the management of the assets of a bankrupt from an assignee chosen by the creditors, and vest such power in a receiver appointed by the courts, entailing litigation and expense, and opening a door to corruption and delay in the distribution of insolvent estate.

CATHARINE HARRIS.

Mr. CHAPMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6890) for the relief of Mrs. Catharine Harris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at three o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITION, ETC.

The following petition and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. J. S. ROBINSON: Papers relating to the pension claim of E. D. Wheeler—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARNER: The petition of T. M. White and A. B. Woodard, executors, &c., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 3, 1882.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, in response to the Senate resolution of the 15th instant, a report of the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, July 29, 1882.

JULIA A. NUTT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1472) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 2, after the word "examine," to insert "and," and in the same line to strike out "and settle;" in line 9, after the word "thereof," to strike out all down to and including the word "same," in line 11; and in line 16, after the word "States," to insert "and shall report the facts to Congress, to be considered with other claims reported by the Quartermaster-General."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That bill was considered by the Senate Committee on Claims and reported favorably to the Senate, and it passed the Senate. I have examined the House amendments and I move that the Senate concur in them.

The amendments were concurred in.

THE FRANKLIN PAPERS.

Mr. HOAR. I omitted yesterday by accident to have read and printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of State in regard to the Franklin papers. I ask leave that it may be printed in the RECORD now. It is not necessary to read it. It is very short; only a page and a half.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Leave is granted.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 22, 1882.

Sir: I have the honor to invite your attention to a subject which was presented by this Department for the consideration of Congress during the early part of the present session, that is to say, the acquisition by the United States, by purchase, of the collection of original papers and of printed books relative to Benjamin Franklin which have been offered to this Department by their owner, Mr. Henry Stevens, of London, at the price of £7,000, with a view to their being deposited with the national archives.

The papers and correspondence concerning this subject, comprised in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 21, a copy of which is transmitted herewith, were referred to the Committee on the Library of the Senate on the 30th of December of last year; and on the 1st of May last Mr. Senator HOAR, on the part of that committee, made a report in favor of the purchase. Attached to that report was an amendment providing for the necessary amount for the purchase to be added to the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, which was referred to your committee by the President of the Senate. A copy of the said report (S. No. 504) will also accompany this letter.

As the period during which this extraordinary and most desirable collection may be acquired is limited, I venture to urge that the report of the Library Committee recommending the purchase be considered by you. The subject has been discussed by that committee, and if approved by the Committee on Appropriations I trust the proposed amendment will be inserted. The sentiment of the scholars of this country has been expressed in the form of memorials addressed to Congress by historical societies, and there is a general feeling of interest in behalf of this measure.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of T. M. White and A. B. Woodard, executors of Reuben Woodard, deceased, praying compensation for property furnished the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of ex-soldiers and citizens of Penn Yan, Yates County, New York, praying the passage of a bill giving a pension of $40 a month to soldiers or sailors who lost an arm or a leg during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAINT JOSEPH.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 929) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA MILITARY DISTRICT.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6520) in relation to land patents in the Virginia military district of Ohio, and instruct me to report it without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALABAMA MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Public Lands have also had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4757) to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands, and instruct me to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not like to make an objection to the bill, but my attention has been called to it by a newspaper publication which is before me, and I suppose this is the same bill to which it refers. I should rather like to read the bill before it is acted on.

Mr. PLUMB. A similar Senate bill has been before the Senate on a report from the Committee on Public Lands for a long time. It received the favorable consideration of the present Secretary of the Interior, of the present Commissioner of the General Land Office, and of the predecessor of the present Secretary of the Interior. It is in precise accord with the policy which was adopted in regard to similar lands in Missouri and Kansas in 1876, and according to the opinion of all the official people of whom I have spoken it is necessary to prevent fraudulent entries and the inducements to frauds which are said to exist under the present condition of things.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know that I understand it, but as it has been represented to me I feel that it ought to challenge the consideration of the Senate before it passes.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt that some publication may have been made about it. I have been solicited in various ways in regard to it; and after investigating the matter very thoroughly I am satisfied that true public policy requires the passage of this bill to rid all that section of country of the controversies which exist in regard to this land, and which have been voiced I have no doubt in the publication of which the Senator from Minnesota speaks.

Mr. WINDOM. I know very little about it.

Mr. PLUMB. The Secretary of the Interior says, under date of the 10th day of July, 1882, "the bill meets my entire approval, and I hope it will become a law."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota object to the consideration of the bill at this time?

Mr. WINDOM. I think it had better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill has gone over twice. Every time it is called up objection is made to its consideration.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not care to have it go over, but I want to read the findings of the grand jury on this subject. I will not ask that the bill go over.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that the cases referred to in that statement have all been reserved in the Land Office, and are under consideration. There are over three hundred and fifty such cases that this bill does not affect in any way, either by confirming their entries or anything of the sort, leaving it entirely to the Land Office to consider all the cases. It is a very great hardship upon the people of Alabama, because it shuts out from settlement a large and valuable tract of country, which is surrounded by land-grant railways. The bill proposes to have the land sold at public sale, so that there can be no combination but may be fair competition in the sale; and the Government will probably realize a considerable amount of money from the sale.

The present Secretary of the Interior, his predecessor, Mr. Kirkwood, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have looked into this question very narrowly and very closely, and they have made every provision that is at all necessary for the protection of the Government. I assure the Senator that I would not advocate a bill here which would have a tendency to prevent a full and fair investigation of any fraudulent entries whatever, if any have taken place. The whole question is reserved in the bill itself. This bill has been framed with the most exact care; it was really drawn up in the Department itself, as indicating not merely the public policy on the subject, but as providing for every possible contingency. Mr. Teller expresses himself in the strongest possible terms.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall not object to the present consideration of the bill, but I want to understand it fully before it is passed.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no doubt about its being right.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have received a full statement from a citizen of Alabama, and also a letter from a gentleman in a Northern State who, from his peculiar studies, if I should name him, the Senate would know is quite familiar with the question, both of them most earnestly protesting against the bill as an injustice, as opening to settlement by these plastered certificates a body of exceedingly valuable mineral lands. In short, I do not pretend to tell from memory now the argument, though I can get it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The merits are not open to discussion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall not attempt to discuss the merits of the bill, but I feel bound in the interest of the public to object to its consideration to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over on objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I will withdraw the report and make it to-morrow, and in the mean time Senators can examine the matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will look over it by to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the bill passes from the attention of the Senate, the Senate will excuse me for making one observation. The Secretary of the Interior knows perfectly well that there are certain men who are exploiting upon this land, trying to make a speculation out of the land of the United States. He has been in a long controversy about it, and he recommends this bill, not for the purpose of healing up any false entry or protecting any man in the world who may have been guilty of a fraud, because the bill leaves that entirely open, so that all these things will be investigated in the Department. He thinks the best thing to do with these coal lands, which have been heretofore reserved, is to dispose of them at public sale. These lands have been reserved for a good many years now, as many as seven, eight, or ten years, under the coal-land law, and not one foot of that land has ever been entered as coal land, and not one foot I suppose ever will be.

Mr. PLUMB. I will withdraw the report I have made and present it to-morrow, and in the mean time everybody interested can look up the report made by the Committee on Public Lands and all the documents in the case.

Mr. WINDOM. My only purpose is to understand it, and I want to have the bill printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed and recommitted to the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the report.

INDIAN BUREAU ACCOUNTS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1364) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts in the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury, to report it favorably and without amendment. A bill identical with this was reported favorably from the Committee on Claims by the present Secretary of the Interior on the 1st day of February last. If there is no objection I ask that the bill may be considered at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move that the bill (S. No. 172) to authorize the auditing of certain unpaid accounts of the Indian Bureau by the accounting officers of the Treasury, which is identical with the bill which has just passed the Senate, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 2164) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe, to report it back with the amendments submitted by me yesterday, modified somewhat; and I ask for its present consideration. It will be seen by the reading of the bill that it is very carefully drawn to protect the interests of the Government and to prevent the consolidation of telegraphic companies, to prevent any watering of stock.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Has that bill been placed on our table so that we can read it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported yesterday and recommitted.

Mr. VAN WYCK. We were so much engaged yesterday that I had no opportunity of seeing it. I shall object to that bill until I can have an opportunity of examining it.

Mr. LAPHAM. I prefer that it shall not go to the Calendar. I will withdraw the report until to-morrow morning; and I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator from New York that he have the bill printed with the amendments as modified, and recommitted to the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that is done, it will be subject to a single objection whenever it is reported. If it is put on the Calendar it will be in order to have is taken up on motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Nebraska asked that the bill be printed. It has been already printed as reported yesterday.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not ask that it shall be printed again, but I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill. I have felt that in this bill there is no protection where protection is needed. It seems to me it is organizing another telegraph company to combine in the future with another telegraph company, and the people will receive no benefit at all from the combination, and the company will increase the rates just as land telegraph companies do.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator has felt that, he has felt it without having read the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very likely. I want to see it.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator will look he will find that this bill does provide against all those things, that it prohibits the watering of stock, prohibits combinations, authorizes the Secretary of State to fix the rates for the Government, and provides that Congress shall hereafter have authority to pass a general bill regulating rates, and it in every way conforms to what I know to be the wishes of the Senator.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My friend says the rates for the Government are fixed; are the rates for individuals fixed?

Mr. WINDOM. I say the bill expressly reserves the right of the Government to fix the rates by a general bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I want to say to my friend that although the right to fix rates affecting the public may be reserved it will amount to nothing. You reserved in 1864 that right over the national railroad lines to the Pacific, and you have never exercised it to this day, and never will.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator would hardly expect to have everything provided for on this bill, in the last days of the session.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I prefer to have the rates fixed now in this bill, and when the rates are fixed I shall have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to say to the Senator from Nebraska before this bill goes out of reach that I think it is the most important bill in reference to the transoceanic telegraph business ever presented to the Senate, and it will bring down the rates of telegraphing to ten cents a word if we can pass the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will you put in the bill what the rates shall be? Will you fix the rates in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I merely want to explain my position on the matter. I find we have done nothing of that kind, and while we have been organizing telegraphs upon the land the rates have been continually increased; and now I ask gentlemen to designate a list of rates in this bill.

Mr. LAPHAM. I think if the Senator from Nebraska will hear the bill read he will be satisfied by the reading that there is no possible objection to it. It is a short bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read for information.

The Acting Secretary read the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I see nothing at all in that to meet the objection I made. The public are not protected there.

Mr. WINDOM. The amendments have not yet been read.

Mr. BAYARD. The amendments do protect them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The public?

Mr. BAYARD. Perfectly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I still insist on my objection, and I desire to be understood as objecting. I have no objection to the amendments being read, however.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendments be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The first amendment is in section 1, line 13, to strike out the words "agreement as to rate" and insert "combination to establish rates;" so as to read:

And provided further, That no amalgamation, combination to establish rates, union, or sale of cable interests established under this act shall be made, &c.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not see any protection in that. This is not probably the time to discuss it, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the bill is objected to, and it goes over.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Government is protected, but not the public.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to take the bill up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order if any Senator objects. It is morning-hour business, and a single objection carries it over.

Mr. LAPHAM. I shall move to take it up as soon as the morning hour is over.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator in charge of the bill will allow me, I will suggest an amendment that will meet the objection of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Nebraska has not heard the amendments of the committee read.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed they were read.

Mr. WINDOM. One was read, and the Senator objected before the others were read.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if this amendment meets his objection?

The rates charged upon said line for messages for individuals shall not exceed twenty cents for each word.

Will that satisfy the Senator?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let that amendment be referred to the committee and see whether they are willing to incorporate it in the bill, and then let the bill come up with that amendment on it.

Mr. LAPHAM. I should like to have the amendments of the committee read, so that the Senator from Nebraska may see what they are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The remaining amendments of the committee will be read.

The ACTING SECRETARY. The next amendment is, in section 1, line 15, to strike out the word "existing;" so as to read:

Shall be made to any European or other cable companies.

After the word "companies," in section 1, line 16, to insert:

Nor shall there be any fictitious increase or watering of stock; and any violation of the provision of this section shall work a forfeiture of all rights thereunder.

In section 2, line 9, after the word "whatever," to insert:

And in addition the United States Government shall have the right to the exclusive use of a wire at such time as they may require, not to exceed four hours out of every twenty-four, and at such rates as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State, but not to exceed twenty cents per word nor less than ten cents per word.

In section 2, line 18, strike out "the most favored," before "nation," and insert "any other;" so as to read:

Secondly. Citizens of the United States shall enjoy the same privileges as to the payment of rates for the transmission of messages as are enjoyed by the citizens of any other nation.

In section 4, at the end of the bill, add "including the right to fix rates by a general law;" so as to read:

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time is hereby reserved to Congress, including the right to fix rates by a general law.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator from New York if he will include the amendment of the Senator from Maine, or rather if he will protect the public in the same way that he will protect the Government, by saying the rates shall not exceed twenty cents per word?

Mr. LAPHAM. I am not authorized by the committee to accept the amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator will do that and protect the public, then I shall have no objection.

Mr. LAPHAM. I am entirely unadvised as to the rates over the present lines.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it goes over.

Mr. HALE. The rate ought not to be over twenty cents a word, I think clearly.

Mr. BAYARD. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the protection does exist when you expressly reserve the right to fix the rates by general law. I know very little of the cost of this business, but when you reserve the right to fix by general law any excess can be prevented.

Mr. LAPHAM. We do fix the rate as to the Government.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My answer to that is, as I said before, that is no protection to the public. In 1864 you protected the public by reserving the right to Congress to regulate the rates on the Pacific railroads. That never has been done and never will be done.

Mr. BAYARD. Does not my friend think that competition is the best regulation?

Mr. VAN WYCK. We have been told that would be the effect of competition in regard to our land telegraph lines, and yet every organization of a new company under the competition is absorbed by the old one, and the public suffer by the watering of the stock in the increased rate of charges. I say to my friend that will be so here. If you intend to protect the public as you claim you are willing to do, do it here and now by saying to the public they shall be protected in the same way that we protect the Government, and make the rate twenty cents a word.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if we have not had the same experience in regard to competition not only on land telegraphs but on sea telegraphs? We chartered a cable company with the idea that competition would keep down the rates, and the last company chartered was operated for a time, but when they were consolidated within the last two months the rates were at once put up from twenty-five cents to fifty cents a word, so that competition does not accomplish the result. Competition runs for a while, but amalgamation is the end of competition. I agree fully with the Senator from Nebraska that here and now is the place in which to put the limit that shall be charged upon this line for public or private messages, and if we do not do it now we never shall do it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Never.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks for the consideration of the bill. Does the Senator from Nebraska object?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then I ask to have it placed on the Calendar, and I give notice that I shall call the bill up for action to-morrow morning.

Mr. SEWELL. I concur with the Senator from Maine on this question, but as it has passed by I will say nothing further now.

CONDEMNED ORDNANCE FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred certain resolutions and bills of the House of Representatives granting condemned cannon to sundry places, to report them back to the Senate favorably, some with amendments and some without amendments.

Mr. BECK. I hope they will be considered now. There is one for Kentucky, which I should like to have disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These several resolutions and bills reported by the Senator from Missouri will be acted on at once if there be no objection.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6265) donating cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 14 of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Logansport, Indiana, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, which was, in line 12, after the word "condemned," to insert "cast-iron."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6111) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6593) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, which were, in line 11, to insert "cast" after "condemned;" in line 23, to insert "cast-iron" after "condemned;" in line 27, to insert "cast-iron" after "condemned;" in line 30, to insert "cast-iron" after "condemned."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 254) to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to "Tip" Best Post No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, of Montrose, Iowa, one piece of condemned cast-iron cannon (and cannon-balls) or field-piece for monumental purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, which was, in line 7, after the word "cannon-balls," to strike out "or field-piece."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer to 'Tip' Best Post No. 75, Grand Army of the Republic, of Montrose, Iowa, one piece of condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes."

USE OF TENTS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back favorably House joint resolution No. 205 and House joint resolution No. 263, which are resolutions granting the use of tents to soldiers' reunions. One of them is for Iowa and the other for Illinois. They have been amended to correspond with the rule of the Senate on the question. I ask for their present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 263) granting the use of cannon, tents, and muskets at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs were, in line 4, after the word "depot," to strike out "or arsenal;" after the word "such," in line 6, to strike out "cannon;" in line 7, after the word "tents," to strike out "muskets, and so forth;" after the word "said," in line 8, to strike out "cannon," and in the same line, after the word "tents," to strike out "muskets, and so forth;" in line 11, to strike out "arsenal," and in line 14, after the word "said," to strike out "arms, ammunition, and camp equipage" and insert "tents;" and at the end of the resolution to add "of arms allowed by law;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient quartermaster's depot, to be used at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882, such tents as can be conveniently spared; said tents to be returned after holding of said reunion in like good condition as when received: Provided, That all transportation of said articles to and from the place of the reunion to the depot shall be without expense to the Government: Provided further, That the adjutant-general of the State of Iowa, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said tents in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State against its quota of arms allowed by law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution granting the use of tents at soldiers' reunions to be held in the State of Iowa in the year 1882."

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 205) granting the use of articles, tents, &c., at a soldiers' reunion to be held by the Soldiers' Reunion Association of the State of Illinois in the year 1882.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 4, after the word "depot," to strike out "or arsenal;" in line 7, before the word "tents," to strike out "cannon," and after the word "tents" to strike out "muskets;" in line 11, to strike out "arsenal;" in line 14, after the word "said," to strike out "arms, ammunition, and camp equipage" and insert "tents;" and at the end of the bill to add "of arms allowed by law;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to send from some convenient quartermaster's depot, to be used at said soldiers' reunion to be held in the State of Illinois in the year 1882, such tents as can be conveniently spared, said tents to be returned after holding of said reunion meeting in like good condition as when received: Provided, That all transportation of said articles to and from the place of the reunion to the depot shall be without expense to the Government: Provided further, That the adjutant-general of the State of Illinois, or other proper accounting officer, shall receipt for said tents in the name of said State, and that such of them as shall not be returned shall be charged to said State against its quota of arms allowed by law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

MAJOR W. R. KING.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to say to the Senate that there are four or five other bills granting condemned cannon to cemeteries and national associations. They have been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with slight amendments, just the same as were made to these resolutions. If it is the pleasure of the Senate that they should be considered, I would make that suggestion. It will only take a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 2092) for the relief of Major W. R. King, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its passage at this time.

I have the report from the Engineer Department detailing all the facts of this robbery, and also the report of the House committee stating the facts as they appear. I have also the indictment of Ryan for this robbery and the recovery of $1,270 by garnisheeing a bank in Nashville, reducing the amount stolen or robbed from this man by that amount. Major King is the engineer in charge of the Muscle Shoals and Tennessee River improvement. He had drawn his draft on the Treasury of the United States for this $5,240.18, to pay the workmen at the Muscle Shoals, and had put it in the hands of his assistant to draw the money for him and go to the different parts of the work and pay the men. He had paid some of them, but just before reaching the main body of the men, three armed men on horseback overtook him, drew their pistols upon him, and robbed him of all the money except a little which he had in his vest-pocket, amounting to the sum named in the bill.

Major King, immediately on receiving information that his assistant had been robbed, made pursuit and tracked these armed men and pursued them to Nashville, Tennessee, where one of them was captured, and from him $1,270 was obtained, which has been paid back to the Government.

Major King, of course, is responsible for the loss of this money, although it was lost by his assistant in passing along the bank of the canal, some eighteen miles from Major King's headquarters. The papers are here, the affidavits and the indictment of Hill by the United States court show all these facts, which may be read to the Senate. The committee of the House and the committee of the Senate are unanimous in the opinion that the balance of this money should be refunded to Major King, as it was lost without negligence on his part.

Mr. BECK. I think this bill ought to pass, and therefore I do not rise to object to it after the statement made, but I rise to say that I have endeavored for a long time to have the Calendar called. There has not been a case regularly called on the Calendar which has been reported since the 19th day of April. Five or six quite important cases to which there is no objection I think have been reported by myself, and I have urged in every way to get them acted on. I cannot do it without having a general scramble every day.

Now, I hope and trust we shall devote an hour or two to-day to the cases on the Calendar, beginning at the very first case. After this bill passes I hope nobody will ask for anything but the Calendar, so as to give all a chance. That is all I wish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Michigan?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 2092) for the relief of Major W. R. King. It proposes to pass to the official credit of Major W. R. King, disbursing officer for the Tennessee River improvement, the sum of $3,970.18, that being the unrecovered balance of $5,240.18 of public funds forcibly taken from A. G. Smith, receiver of materials on Muscle Shoals Canal, in the State of Alabama, by William Ryan and two other armed robbers, on the 11th of March, 1881, and for which sum King is accountable.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution providing that the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve o'clock m., Saturday, August 5, 1882.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) to print 11,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve has arrived. The question is, Will the Senate continue the morning hour until the morning business is finished?

Mr. MORRILL. I want to take up a bill, and then I will consent. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is entitled to preference over anything else, and it is not through.

Mr. MORRILL. I give way for that, but I want to take up a bill immediately afterward.

Mr. ANTHONY. I rise to morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the morning hour be extended until the morning business is finished? The Chair hears no objection, and morning business will be received.

PRINTING OF AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives for the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, have instructed me to report it with amendments and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed 300,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881; 214,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 56,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 30,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

The first amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line 3, to strike out "300,000" and insert "200,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. The resolution from the House provides for 300,000 copies; the Committee on Printing recommend that it be cut down to 200,000, and we cut down the distribution to Senators and to Representatives and to the Commissioner of Agriculture one-third from what the House proposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much was it last year?

Mr. ANTHONY. Three hundred thousand.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment of the committee will not be concurred in. This is a valuable publication to the agricultural interests of the country, which is appreciated by them, and which is of importance to them, and I do not think we had any surplus last year. It is proposed to cut down the Agricultural Report 100,000 copies below what was printed last year. The House passed a resolution authorizing the printing of the same number authorized last year and the year before, and the year before that, I believe.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope that Senators who vote against this reduction will hold their peace about the extravagance of the public printing. This resolution as it came from the House will cost $219,000, which is about the whole cost of the printing that the Committee on Printing have recommended for the use of Congress during this session, thus doubling the amount. I think that some of those Senators who are complaining so much of the extravagance of the public printing now have an opportunity to air their economy and their virtue.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing what the difference in cost will be between 200,000 copies and 300,000? The type-setting is the same.

Mr. ANTHONY. In such long numbers the Senator is aware the cost of composition is a very small proportion compared with the whole cost. The expense of printing the usual number, 1,900, is $13,697, and each additional thousand costs $682. We have cut the House resolution down by about $68,000.

Mr. COKE. I hope the amendment will not be made. Of all the publications of the Government the constituency that I represent appreciate the Agricultural Report more than any other; and if any reduction is to be made at all in the expenditures for public printing, my people are concerned that it shall not be made by cutting down the numbers of the Agricultural Report that are printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Everybody is in favor of economy in the public printing, but people differ very much as to the objects to which the economy shall be applied. Yesterday nearly a majority of the Senate, or a very large minority, opposed the cutting down of the number of the report of the Geological Survey, and I confess that I think that is a work of equal merit with this, and indeed of greater merit.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he is not satisfied that there are more of the American people interested in the Agricultural Report than in any other public document that is printed under the orders of Congress?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yet, Mr. President, a great many of these documents find their way to the second-hand bookstores where they are sold for ten cents a copy.

Mr. COCKRELL. So you find of every other.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is true.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the books do find their way there it is the fault of somebody. I could distribute ten times as many as I get, and profitably, too. If we are going to cut down on anything let it be something else than that, because 50 per cent. of all our people are farmers, and if we are going to cut down on anything let it be on something else besides that. These books are probably more read than any other work that comes from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. ANTHONY. Could not the Senator distribute Webster's Dictionary, and the best of all books, the Holy Bible? Would he recommend that they be printed at Government expense?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I would recommend the Bible for Rhode Island if you cut down this thing for my country. This ought not to be cut down.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think if the Senator prefers the Agricultural Report to the Bible I will not dispute his judgment in the matter.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let Rhode Island have the Bible.

Mr. HAWLEY. I concurred with my distinguished colleague on the Printing Committee in making this report, and among the reasons were such facts as these: in regard to one of the late editions of this report, 300,000, the Printer found, when he thought he had 300,000 delivered, that owing to an accident of overturning and injuring certain copies, or some miscount, he was four or five thousand behind, and instead of going to work and printing that number more, he went to one of the second-hand book dealers here and gave him about ten cents a copy for a number of the identical edition, some of the earlier copies which had been delivered here. He went and bought them and filled out the number. That dealer will sell you a car-load of reports for ten cents apiece, or even for five cents apiece. They have been sold by the wagon-load from three to four cents apiece for old paper.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut why, then, the Government does not purchase all the publications needed from this second-hand dealer?

Mr. HAWLEY. You can get a great part of them in that way.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then there is no use in printing any. Let us buy from him. Mr. President, the statement that is made by the Senator from Connecticut is true in part; but I assert without fear of contradiction that you cannot point your finger to a single publication of this Government that you cannot buy at a second-hand bookstore. Take the geological reports, take the medical statistics of the Provost-Marshal-General's Office, take the Medical and Surgical History of the Rebellion, and you can find them all there. That objection is not legitimate to this class of publications, because it applies to all the publications of the Government.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator is to a large extent correct. Of course some copies of all books get there some time or other, but it is more marked in the case of some than others; and where there is such an extraordinary margin as in the case of this report, which costs sixty-eight cents, and which you can buy probably in a short time for ten cents, it shows that a surplus has been printed. If the discount was only 10, 15, or 20 per cent., it would show the ordinary rule of second-hand books.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It shows the fact that the members of Congress, instead of sending these books to their constituents, sometimes make such disposition of them as that they find their way to the old bookstores. I have been here eleven years and I have never yet parted with any book that has been apportioned to me excepting to the people in my State, unless that I believe I gave the superintendent of the document-room some copies of the message and accompanying documents, that I knew my people did not want, and that I did not feel at liberty to send to them. The fault is with members of Congress if they find their way there. The people want the Agricultural Report. While I myself do not believe it is a very valuable work, the great body of farmers do think so, and they want it. I know that I send out no book that is more appreciated by the people of my State. I believe we are doing a great amount of printing; and I am not particular about the number of this book that shall be printed; but I do not want the impression to go out which would be made by the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut—that there has been a surplus of this document. That is not the case. The farmers, instead of taking 300,000 copies, would take a million copies of the book, and would be glad to have them if they could get them.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is not the argument good, then, for printing a million copies?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not ask that.

Mr. ANTHONY. Three hundred thousand copies do not begin to supply the demand, and 3,000,000 copies would not supply the demand. If we are to supply the demand and to treat every man like every other man, then we should print an edition large enough to supply all the farmers in the country. I take it we have not come to that yet. However, Mr. President, we do not expect to carry this amendment. We never have carried it. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Printing, reducing the number of copies from 300,000 to 200,000. The Senator from Rhode Island asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to correct in a measure what was stated by the Senator from Missouri. I agree with him in regard to the Agricultural Report. Many Senators and Members who do not represent districts or States largely agricultural have a surplus of these reports, and, as is customary with Senators, they frequently exchange, and there being a surplus after all such exchanges, it finds its way into the second-hand bookstores; but I think the Senator is incorrect, at least my searching has shown him to be incorrect, so far as the Surgical History of the War is concerned. It cannot be procured here at second-hand stores.

Mr. COCKRELL. Only a few years ago you could not find any ordinary second-hand bookstore in Washington that did not have them, and you could buy them anywhere.

Mr. FERRY. I ask the Senator whether he can see them now and purchase them now. I have sent to different bookstores to purchase them, but could not do it because the pressure for them has been very great. I have exhausted my quota, and I have sought to find others to replace them. I have sought to exchange with different Senators and have been unable. As regards certain publications of Congress they cannot be procured; but it may be the case in regard to Agricultural Reports. My State is largely agricultural, and I cannot get too many of those reports. I am ready to-day to exchange reports or publications which I have in surplus for Agricultural Reports, and I shall be very glad if any Senator has a surplus for him to indicate it, that I may make the exchange; so that I do not believe the amount originally reported in this resolution is too large to supply the demand.

Mr. BECK. I agree with the Senator from Michigan; it is about the only document Congress prints that my people want, and I cannot get enough copies of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand that the amendment if adopted would lessen the number one-third?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the Agricultural Report ought to be generally distributed. It is probably the one more sought for than any other.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then why does not the Senator from Michigan move to increase the number? Three hundred thousand will be but a drop in the bucket to the whole agricultural interest of the country.

Mr. FERRY. I reply to the Senator from Rhode Island that there is a medium. I am not so extravagant as to ask for an excessive number, but I think the amount proposed in the original resolution is not excessive, that it is moderate. Now the Senator wants to resort to a minimum, which will be below the demand. I think the agricultural interests of the country ought to be supplied to the extent of the ordinary legitimate demand. I am voting for that, and I presume other Senators who represent agricultural States will vote to fill the demand for those publications, which are certainly valuable to farmers if they are not to members of Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. The Committee on Printing reduced the number of copies of the Agricultural Report proposed to be printed from 300,000 to 200,000. There has been very great abuse in the publication of this report. The cost of the illustrations in the last Agricultural Report was $98,000, and the illustrations in the present volume will in all probability cost about $60,000. If the number is to be increased 68,000 above that recommended by the committee, I shall move to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Printing, or to amend it so as to strike out the illustrations. They are of no earthly use to the farmers of this country. The committee, however, did not deem it proper to strike out the illustrations in this report, but rather preferred to reduce the number of copies to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Printing, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. HARRIS. My colleague [Mr. JACKSON] is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] upon all political questions. If my colleague were here he would vote, I believe, exactly as the Senator from Kansas has voted, and I desire that the vote of the Senator from Kansas shall remain.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say to the Senator from Tennessee that I understood that pair to extend to political questions, but I will withdraw my vote if desired.

Mr. HARRIS. So I stated. No, I desire the Senator to let his vote stand in this instance, because he voted as my colleague would vote if here.

Mr. VANCE. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] on political questions, but as this does not seem to be one, I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—16.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The other amendments are dependent upon the one just rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. Let them be non-concurred in in gross.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the other amendments to the resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. The last amendment should not be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments except the last will be regarded as rejected. The last amendment will be reported.

The ACTING SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution the committee propose to add:

And $146,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out this resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. That appropriation was made applicable to the reduced number the committee reported. The appropriation should be $219,161.54, the Senate having refused to make the reduction.

Mr. INGALLS. In the other resolutions that have been passed for the printing of extra copies of public documents has an appropriation been made for the expense that is to be incurred?

Mr. ANTHONY. It has in the case of this document.

Mr. INGALLS. I refer to those resolutions previously passed at this session.

Mr. ANTHONY. No.

Mr. INGALLS. Why is it necessary to load up this resolution with amendments that are intended obviously to render it odious?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no such intention as to render it odious.

Mr. INGALLS. Then why is the discrimination made? Why do you pass other resolutions for printing other public documents, leaving the appropriation to occur in a regular appropriation bill, and when this comes up put on an immense appropriation for the purpose of intimidating somebody to prevent him from voting for it?

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, Mr. President, I should not undertake to intimidate the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; I am not in the number.

Mr. ANTHONY. But it has been customary to put in the appropriation for this publication, because this involves about half of the entire cost of the documents that are printed for the use of the Senate, and if it is not put in there will be a deficiency.

Mr. INGALLS. That is no reason, because it is one-half. The fact of its being one-half is no more reason than it would be if it were one-tenth or one-twentieth. There is evidently a desire—I will not say a design—that in some way this shall be made so odious that the Senate will refrain from voting for it in consequence of the enormous amount of the appropriation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, Mr. President, if the Senate is so frightened at the amount necessary to carry out what it has just voted shall be done, be it so; but if the Senate refuses to make the appropriation the probability is that the publication will not be made, because the appropriation for the support of the Printing Office is not sufficient to publish this document.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if it is not the custom of years past to put in the amount?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, it has been done. I do not know whether it has been uniformly done.

Mr. INGALLS. I doubt very much whether it is the custom.

Mr. HOAR. Another question. Is not this a resolution which will pass after the current appropriation bill for the year? Of course it is.

Mr. INGALLS. That is true about every one of the resolutions reported for the past two weeks. They have all been passed since the general appropriation bill was disposed of.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the committee, whether he considers the illustrations in the Agricultural Report of any special value to the farmers of the country? I understand from his colleague on the committee, the Senator from Maryland, that the illustrations will cost at least $60,000, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether these illustrations will be of any particular value whatever to the farming interest of the country?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the opinion of the Commissioner. The text refers to the illustrations, and I think it would be very absurd to print the book without the illustrations. If we are going to print it as we have decided to do—and I certainly submit very obediently to the will of the Senate—I only wish to provide the means for carrying out the will of the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My object was to ascertain whether by omitting the illustrations we might not save a part of the appropriation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly we might, and by omitting half the book we should save part of the appropriation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think the pictures of bugs and ants and such things are of any practical value to the farmers.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say in regard to the illustrations that there has been in past years an extravagance in the illustrations of this publication, and the present Commissioner has been in long consultation with the Public Printer, and with the heads of the bureaus in his Department, and with the Committee on Printing, and has fixed upon about $60,000, which is a great reduction from the former cost, as the price at which the illustrations can be made. I think it would detract very much from the value of the book to leave out the illustrations.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator from Rhode Island will permit me a moment, I beg to suggest that the principal illustrations in the report for 1880 are as to the hog cholera and pleuro-pneumonia, two most important diseases to be eradicated if it can be done, the design being to eradicate those diseases by some method of treatment. That is very important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Printing. The Chair would ask whether money can be appropriated in a concurrent resolution?

Mr. ANTHONY. It should be changed to the form of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Had not this better be recommitted to have the change made?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; the Secretary can make the alteration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be put in the shape of a joint resolution in case the amendment is concurred in. The amendment is to add:

And $219,164.54, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to carry out this resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was concurred in, but ordered to be returned to the House of Representatives as a joint resolution to provide for the printing of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1881, passed by the Senate with an amendment adding the clause proposing an appropriation.

TERRITORIAL JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3506) amending sections 1926 and 1927 of the Revised Statutes so as to extend the limits of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana, have instructed me to report it back and ask for its passage at this time. It is a short bill and can be passed at once.

Mr. MORRILL. I give notice that if it gives rise to debate I shall object.

The bill was read.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the sections be read that are proposed to be amended.

Mr. SAUNDERS. This changes the limit of the justice's jurisdiction from $100 to $300.

Mr. INGALLS. That is of very questionable propriety.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I leave that to the Senate to decide.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not think there is any question about it.

The Acting Secretary read sections 1926 and 1927 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

SEC. 1926. Justices of the peace in the Territories of New Mexico, Utah, Washington, Dakota, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming shall not have jurisdiction of any matter in controversy where the debt or sum claimed exceeds $100.

SEC. 1927. Justices of the peace in the Territories of Colorado and Arizona shall not have jurisdiction of any matter in controversy where the debt or sum claimed exceeds $300.

Mr. SAUNDERS. In the Territories to which the bill applies the limit of the amount to which justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction is $100. It is designed to extend it to $300. I will say that the bill came from the House, and I am authorized by the Committee on Territories unanimously to report it. I also learn that the Delegates of these Territories want it on the ground that courts are not held in some parts of their Territories more than once a year, and their people have no opportunity of collecting debts by course of law unless it is done in this way oftener than once a year, and then if a case goes over it takes two years. So the Delegates have all asked that we should act on the bill of the House favorably. I leave it to the Senate whether it shall be done or not.

Mr. INGALLS. I have had some experience in regard to the practice of the law in Territories before justices of the peace, and I do not think the proposed amendment is beneficent or wise, and I will, therefore, ask that the bill may go over to a subsequent day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MEASUREMENT OF TONNAGE.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back without amendment and favorably the bill (H. R. No. 5841) to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States, and ask for its present consideration. I think it will lead to no debate. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury fully explaining it, which can be read.

Mr. BECK. If that is the bill I think it is, it ought to be passed, and I hope it will be acted on.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have here a letter from Secretary Folger thoroughly indorsing and recommending this bill, but I will not ask to have it read unless some Senator desires it.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the reading of it, because I looked at it last night, and I have talked with some of the best informed men in the House, and all agreed that it was a perfectly proper bill, and would give great relief to American shipping if passed.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. FRYE. I read this bill yesterday, and I want to thank the Committee on Commerce. It is the first gun fired in favor of the revival of American commerce, and it is very welcome music to my ears.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. At the suggestion of the chairman of the committee I ask that this letter of the Secretary of the Treasury shall go into the RECORD. I will not detain the Senate by reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 25, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, inclosing the bill (H. R. No. 5841) to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States, and submitting the same for my consideration.

I would say in reply that most of the maritime nations of Europe in the admeasurement of vessels provide for certain deductions from the gross tonnage of a vessel; the residue after these deductions are made is called the net or register tonnage; but all maritime nations do not agree in the extent of the deductions to be made.

For example, under the laws of Great Britain the following deductions are allowed: first, in all vessels there is deducted the capacity of the space for berthing the crew, unless that capacity exceeds one-twentieth of the remaining tonnage of the ship, then one-twentieth only of the crew space is to be deducted; secondly, in vessels propelled by steam or other machinery the space occupied by the propelling power, namely, the engines or other motor, the boilers, and, in screw-vessels, in addition thereto, the shaft alley or trunk.

A second and more practical rule appears from the inspection of British registers to be allowed by British laws, and to be invariably followed. It is as follows: the tonnage of the actual measured spaces occupied by or required to be inclosed for the proper working of the boilers and machinery, with the addition in the case of ships propelled by paddle-wheels of one-half, in the case of ships propelled by screws of three-fourths of the tonnage of such space, is to be deducted from the gross tonnage.

This last rule is practically identical with the so-called "Danube rule," adopted by the international commission at Constantinople in the year 1873. France, Spain, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland observe rules similar to those of Great Britain in their deductions from gross tonnage. According to the British rules no deduction is made for the spaces in a steam-vessel occupied as permanent coal-bunkers.

The rules adopted for deductions by the German Government, Norway, Italy, and Austria-Hungary differ in some respects from those authorized by the British rules. They are as follows: in all vessels the crew-space is deducted as by the British rule, and, in addition thereto, in vessels propelled by steam or other power, the actual tonnage of the spaces used for propelling power, namely, the engine-room, boilers, shaft alley or trunk, and, in addition thereto, the tonnage of the spaces occupied as permanent coal-bunkers. It is reported by the surveyor of customs at New York that the largest deductions from the gross tonnage are allowed by the British rules.

The rules of admeasurement adopted by most European powers are based on what is technically known as the "Moorsom system," which was adopted by the act of Congress of May 6, 1864, and reproduced in section 4153, Revised Statutes, but without making an allowance for any deductions similar to those allowed by the maritime nations of Europe.

In consequence of this omission, it is the practice at various ports of the United States, under article 137 of the customs regulations of 1874, to add to the net tonnage register of vessels of foreign nations, as expressed in their documents, the amount of the deductions made under their respective laws and not authorized by the admeasurement law of the United States.

It is customary, also, under treaty conventions, to accept the tonnage measurement of foreign vessels as expressed in their registers, in everything except the amount of the deductions, without a readmeasurement in this country. The deductions for tonnage, as expressed in the bill, seem, in the opinion of this Department, to allow in as clear and express terms as possible the deductions which may reasonably be allowed, if any deductions are to be made; and they may properly be inserted before the last paragraph of section 4153, Revised Statutes, beginning with the words "the register of the vessel shall express the number of decks."

I would suggest, however, the addition to the last paragraph of section I of the bill, in line 30, the following words: "But the outstanding registers or enrollments of vessels of the United States shall not be rendered void by the addition of such new statement of her tonnage, unless voluntarily surrendered, but the same may be added to the outstanding document, or by an appendix thereto, with a certificate of a collector of customs that the original estimate of tonnage is amended."

The second section of the bill proposes to repeal section 4154, Revised Statutes. The section in question carries into the Revised Statutes from the general collection act of March 2, 1799, the old system of measurement in force before the Moorsom system was adopted, and is incompatible with the provisions embodied in section 4153, Revised Statutes. Two entirely different systems of measuring vessels are not required, and should not stand together in the same statute-book.

The substitute for the present section 4154, Revised Statutes, proposes by authority of law to guarantee the acceptance of the tonnage measurements of foreign vessels on the exhibition of their certificates of registry, without a readmeasurement at a port in this country. The registers of the vessels of many foreign nations are thus accepted under the present practice at ports of entry by virtue of treaty conventions. The proposed section simply puts in the form of a statute that which, as regards many foreign vessels, is in force by treaty, but tenders the acceptance of the register to all nations that will extend a similar favor to this country. At the same time the amended section does not exempt foreign vessels from readmeasurement should it be expedient or for the interests of the revenue to require it. The second section may properly be adopted as it stands.

Unexpected details in regard to the form of making the changes in the registers of vessels may arise which may make it advisable for this Department to issue special regulations on the subject. The third section is therefore proper as far as it goes. But I think a provision for the admeasurement fees should be added in the following terms, after the words, in the third line, third page, "provisions of this act," namely: "And he shall establish and promulgate a proper scale of fees to be paid for the readmeasurement of the spaces to be deducted from the gross tonnage of a vessel on the basis of the last sentence of section 4186 of the Revised Statutes, beginning with the words 'but the charge for the measurements'."

I have thus far considered particulars in the form of the bill. As a matter of policy, some points touching its operation should be called to your attention.

First. A change in the law will entail a partial readmeasurement of all vessels of the United States; that is, vessels registered, enrolled, or licensed. All parts of the vessel to be deducted from the tonnage will need to be readmeasured. This will carry with it the expense of such measurement, which will in any event be but a small portion of the cost of the measurement of the entire vessel. The maximum cost of the admeasurement of a vessel depends upon the number of transverse sections into which she is divided under sections 4153 and 4186, Revised Statutes. The greatest number of parts that can thus be made in a vessel is sixteen, and fees are exacted at the rate of $1.50 per section.

Secondly. All the registers, enrollments, and licenses will need to be modified, entailing a collector's fee in every case for a certificate of twenty cents.

On the other hand, all registered vessels of the United States, in foreign countries as well as at home, would have the advantage of the reduced tonnage tax, (thirty cents per ton per year,) to the deductions made for the deducted spaces, and all classes of vessels in the United States that pay wharfage, in part, in proportion to tonnage measurement, would reap a profit corresponding to these deductions. In screw-steamers the space occupied by the propelling power varies between 13 and 20 per cent. of the gross tonnage, and in paddle-wheel steamers the variation is between 20 and 30 per cent.

Steam-vessels would, of course, profit more than sail-vessels by the contemplated deductions.

No enrolled and licensed vessels except those employed on the northern lakes would derive any advantage from the proposed deductions except in wharfage, and perhaps in pilot charges. But the wharfage charge alone on the western rivers is supposed to be considerable, and steamboat owners are generally desirous of a low estimate on the tonnage of their vessels for that reason.

While the shipping of the country gains by these deductions, the loss to the revenue from the tonnage tax of thirty cents per ton (collected once a year) would not probably exceed 20 per cent. of the amount collected from both foreign and domestic vessels. The total amount of this tax collected from all vessels up to the close of the last fiscal year was over a million and a half of dollars. The total amount collected from vessels of the United States only, for the same period, was but a little in excess of a quarter of a million.

I think the loss of the revenue likely to arise from an abatement in the tonnage tax, even if it were as much as 20 per cent. of the gross amount collected, should not be objected to the passage of the bill. But it must be remembered that under treaty stipulations any deduction from our own tonnage tax will need to be granted in the same way or rate to the vessels of most foreign nations.

The sole question of importance is whether the expense of partial readmeasurements will be a burden to the shipping interested likely to be more than compensated in the lapse of time by gains from the deductions.

It is my opinion that the profit from the deductions will outweigh the inconvenience of the expense, and that a change in the system of admeasurement may with advantage be made as contemplated. But I submit the question to the judgment of the committee.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. H. F. PAGE,
Chairman of Committee on Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF GEORGE P. MARSH.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 99) allowing the widow of George P. Marsh, late minister to Italy, one-half year's salary, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. I think there will be no objection to it when it is read.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH EUROPE.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know whether what I am about to ask is strictly morning business. I wish to ask consent of the Senate to pass the telegraphic bill reported a while ago. The Committee on Foreign Relations will accept the limitation of twenty cents per word, and as the charges are now fifty cents it will be a very great service to the Government if we can pass the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. I object, and call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is in order.

INSPECTION OF FOREIGN PRIVATE STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4684) to amend section 4400 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels, to report it with amendments, and recommend that the bill as amended be passed. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend and enlarge section 4400 of the Revised Statutes by adding thereto the words:

And all foreign private steam-vessels carrying passengers from any port of the United States to any other place or country shall be subject to the provisions of sections 4470, 4471, 4472, 4473, 4479, 4482, 4486, 4488, and 4489 of this title, and shall be liable to visitation and inspection by the proper officer, in any of the ports of the United States, respecting any of the provisions of the sections aforesaid.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 8, after "sections," to insert: "4417, 4418, 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424."

Mr. INGALLS. That seems to affect a great many sections of the statutes, and I hope we shall have the benefit of an explanation before we are called upon to vote on it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will state to the Senator that this bill passed the House and came to the Senate, and we have added important amendments. The bill was introduced by a member from New York, and it refers to foreign steam-vessels, brings them under our inspection laws, makes them subject to the same provisions that our own vessels are, so far as they are prescribed in these sections.

Mr. INGALLS. How does it change existing law?

Mr. McMILLAN. Foreign steam-vessels are not subject to these provisions at all now.

Mr. INGALLS. Does this propose to subject them to these provisions?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. In what particulars?

Mr. McMILLAN. In regard to the articles of freight they shall carry, that are specified in these sections, combustible matter, &c. It applies the inspection laws of our country to foreign steam-vessels when they enter our ports.

Mr. INGALLS. Putting them on the same footing with domestic vessels?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir; the same provisions that our own vessels are subjected to.

Mr. INGALLS. And makes no other changes in the law?

Mr. McMILLAN. It provides for the appointment of inspectors by the Secretary of the Treasury to perform the duties of inspection of these foreign vessels. The Secretary of the Treasury has communicated to the Senate Committee on Commerce a letter in which the sections referred to here are mentioned in substance, and if the Senate desires it that letter can be read, which will give full information on this subject.

Mr. FRYE. As I understand to-day, Great Britain, France, and in fact every foreign country compels every ship from any other country to comply strictly with its own laws.

Mr. McMILLAN. Their inspection laws.

Mr. FRYE. And our country is the exception. We have stringent laws contained in this chapter about our passenger steamships, exceedingly stringent in every particular, and the same laws not applying to foreign vessels there is a very serious discrimination against ourselves and in favor of others. Take, for instance, the matter of life-boats and life-rafts. Our laws require $25,000 worth more on a 4,000-ton American steamer than for an English steamer carrying our passengers. It seems to me that this is the second gun, for which I want to thank the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN. The reasons for this bill were presented in another place very forcibly, and have presented themselves to the Senate Committee on Commerce. We have made these amendments all in accordance with the suggestions of the Secretary of the Treasury, and they are in the direction of perfecting the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. INGALLS. It is a great misfortune that these very important measures are postponed until a period so late in the session that they must either be passed on a very cursory examination or at the suggestion of the committees that report them. I have no doubt from the statement of the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Maine that the general purport of this bill is wise and just, but it affects a great number of sections of the Revised Statutes; it relates to an exceedingly important subject, and we are compelled to take the statement, brief and cursory, of the Senator from Minnesota, or else it must go over to another session.

Mr. McMILLAN. The letter of the Secretary can be read.

Mr. FRYE. It takes well-devised laws for the security of passengers under our statutes, and applies the same statutes to foreign steamers carrying our passengers.

Mr. INGALLS. I say I have no doubt that the statement of the Senator from Maine is correct, but of course none of us have had the opportunity of verifying it. I spoke of it as a vice that general legislation, that these important measures are brought in here reported from a committee and consideration asked without debate or argument.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been watching for some time for an opportunity to introduce an important amendment on a bill of this kind, but I think it is too late now to do it. I supposed all along that we should have some bill from the Committee on Commerce applying the inspection laws of the United States to foreign vessels. I also wish at a proper time to introduce a proposition to exempt vessels built in the United States and engaged in the foreign trade from all taxation to which foreign vessels are not subject. That is an important proposition.

Mr. McMILLAN. That will properly come up perhaps on the bill to amend the navigation laws. There is such a bill pending in the House of Representatives, as I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. I only desire to say that I have prepared myself when the matter is presented to show that the present laws are very unjust against vessels of the United States now engaged in the foreign trade. The great obstruction, it seems to me, to the security of our foreign commerce in American vessels is the extent of taxation to which our vessels are subject to which foreign vessels are not subject.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Senator means local taxation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I mean local taxation; and I am prepared to show that in the regulation of commerce it is the undoubted right of the Government of the United States to exempt vessels engaged in the foreign traffic on the high seas with foreign countries from local taxation; and if that were done it would give to the American vessels a fair chance to compete with foreign vessels, and, in my judgment, within five years would give us probably one-third or one-half of the carrying trade of the ocean.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have given the subject considerable attention myself, and agree with the Senator from Ohio. It is my wish that such an amendment should be put upon this bill.

Mr. HOAR. I hope not on this bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. This relates entirely to the inspection of foreign vessels.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I remember that some years ago we had a provision requiring steamers carrying passengers to furnish certain patented appliances to aid in the saving of human life; and I would ask the Senator from Minnesota whether those provisions are to be extended to foreign ships coming to this country to compel them to comply with the laws we have in that regard?

Mr. McMILLAN. This will compel them to comply with all such laws as are applicable, under the general provisions embraced in the sections referred to, to our own vessels.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I doubt very much whether we ought to attempt to force upon foreign ships coming to this country the adoption of all our modes of preventing accident, &c.

Mr. McMILLAN. Foreign countries do that to our vessels. We are compelled to submit to their inspection laws.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As to our inspection laws, it is right to extend them to foreign vessels in our waters; but some years ago there was a great controversy in the Senate about compelling steamers carrying passengers to have some patent invention for the purpose of preventing the loss of human life. I doubt very much whether we ought to attempt to force on foreign ships provisions of this kind. Of course it is impossible from a general reference to the statute, without examination, to see how it applies.

Mr. FRYE. There are none of those patents in those sections. They provide for life-preservers, but no particular life-preserver; for fire-extinguishers, but no particular fire-extinguisher. They are not compelled to adopt ours.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the first amendment of the Committee on Commerce, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 16, after "4482," to strike out "4486;" in line 17, after "4488," to strike out "and;" in line 18, after "4489," to insert "4496, 4497, 4499, and 4500;" so as to read:

And all foreign private steam-vessels carrying passengers from any port of the United States to any other place or country shall be subject to the provisions of sections 4417, 4418, 4421, 4422, 4423, 4424, 4470, 4471, 4472, 4473, 4479, 4482, 4488, 4489, 4496, 4497, 4499, and 4500 of this title, and shall be liable to visitation and inspection by the proper officer, in any of the ports of the United States, respecting any of the provisions of the sections aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after section 1, to add:

Provided, Where the term "local inspector" is used in the foregoing sections it shall be construed to mean the special inspectors hereinafter provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint officers, to be designated as special inspectors of foreign steam-vessels, at a salary of $2,000 per annum each, and there shall be appointed of such officers at the port of New York, six; at the port of Boston, two; at the port of Baltimore, two; at the port of Philadelphia two; at the port of New Orleans, two; and at the port of San Francisco, two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section:

SEC. 3. The special inspectors of foreign steam-vessels shall perform the duties of their office and make reports thereof to the Supervising Inspector-General of Steam-Vessels, under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask one or two questions. First, is this a unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. How many new offices will it create?

Mr. McMILLAN. Just the special inspectors enumerated there.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Fourteen.

Mr. McMILLAN. Six in New York. The ports are mentioned in the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I know nothing about it, but it is quite an important bill to be rushed through without anybody seeing it.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, to add as a new section:

SEC. 4. That each special inspector of foreign steam-vessels shall execute a proper bond, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, in such form and upon such conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Although this is a new subject introduced at the last hours of the session—and I am very sorry it is so—it is a bill that has been very fully considered by the Department of the Government having the subject in charge. Congress has never paid much attention to it, but I know that the bill is a very important one, and it applies simply the inspection laws of the United States to foreign vessels. It will involve an expense of from $60,000 to $100,000 a year.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, to add as a new section:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall procure for the several inspectors heretofore referred to such instruments, stationery, printing, and other things necessary, including clerical help, where he shall deem the same necessary for the use of their respective offices, as may be required therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as a new section:

SEC. 6. That the salaries of the special inspectors of foreign steam-vessels and clerks provided for, together with their traveling and other expenses when on official duty, and all instruments, books, blanks, stationery, furniture, and other things necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, shall be paid for by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Will an objection take the bill over until morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. I have consulted with two members of the Committee on Commerce since I last addressed the Chair, and neither of them knows anything about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been considered by unanimous consent of the Senate, and is partially through. The Chair doubts whether one objection would now take it over.

Mr. BECK. I shall not make it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to say, in response to the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky, that there were five members of the committee present on a regular committee day, and a regular notice was issued to every member of the committee, and every member present considered this bill and assented to it upon the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, which is very full. I shall ask to have the letter of the Supervising Inspector printed in the RECORD to accompany this bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is very apparent that this is an important bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Of course it is an important bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It refers to various provisions of the Revised Statutes which none of us have had an opportunity to examine. I have no doubt the committee has given to it a very thorough investigation and is perfectly satisfied that the bill is right; but we are called upon to vote on this important measure without knowing exactly how it may affect the general provisions of the commercial law of the country. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that he have these papers published in the RECORD to-morrow and let the bill go over until to-morrow so that we may be able to examine it to some extent and not vote blindly on the propositions it contains.

Mr. McMILLAN. If it is desired that this bill shall go over I have no objection, certainly. I am obeying the instruction of the committee in asking for its present consideration, it being urged that it is necessary to pass the bill at this time if the amendments are to be concurred in at all at this session. The member of the House from New York City who is strongly in favor of this bill, and who introduced it there, [Mr. COX,] has urged it as a very important matter, both as regards the saving of life and the interests of the country generally.

Mr. BECK. If the letter of the Secretary and the other papers referred to are to be published in the RECORD, and the bill goes over to the House with amendments, that will give them some chance, and I shall not seek to delay a bill said to be important by any objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that the letter of the Supervising Inspector-General of Steamboats to the Secretary of the Treasury and the letter of the Secretary accompanying the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

The letters are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 5, 1882.

SIR: Your communication of the 25th ultimo, inclosing a copy of bill H. R. No. 4684, an act to amend section 4400 Revised Statutes of the United States, was duly received and referred to the Supervising Inspector-General of Steam-Vessels.

I have the honor to transmit herewith his report, containing information and suggestions touching the merits of said bill.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. S. J. R. McMILLAN, United States Senate,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISING INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF STEAMBOATS,
Washington, D. C., June 2, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication dated May 25 from Hon. S. J. R. McMILLAN, chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, addressed to yourself, asking your consideration of "H. R. 4684, an act to amend section 4400, title 52, Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulation of steam-vessels," with a request that you would favor the committee with such information and suggestions as you may deem proper touching the merits of said act and the propriety of its passage. Said letter and bill having been referred to this office, I have the honor to report thereon as follows:

The bill proposes amending section 4400, Revised Statutes, by making foreign private steam-vessels amenable to sections 4470, 4471, 4472, 4473, 4479, 4482, 4486, 4488, and 4489 of title 52, Revised Statutes, and also making such steamers liable to visitation and inspection in any ports of the United States respecting any of the provisions of the sections aforesaid. Section 4470, the first of the sections referred to, contains general provisions against fire on passenger steamers. Section 4471 contains additional security against fire on the same class of steamers when laden with cotton, hay, or hemp. Section 4472 prohibits the carriage of dangerous articles besides specifying the manner in which cotton and hemp must be baled. Section 4473 provides a penalty for failure to bale cotton and hemp as required in the previous section. Section 4479 relates to fire-extinguishers. Section 4482 requires life-preservers or floats for each one of the passengers and crew of steamers.

The sections of the bill so far referred to should no doubt become law; but it is the opinion of this office that these provisions could not be enforced unless sections 4499 and 4500, Revised Statutes, should also be included, as these latter sections provide the only penalties, (with the exception of that provision for failure to properly bale cotton and hemp, contained in section 4473.) For a violation of the sections of law referred to, section 4486 provides penalties for a violation of sections 4484 and 4485, neither of which latter sections is named in the bill. Either this omission of these two sections is an inadvertence which should be corrected, or the section 4486, named in the bill, should be omitted. Section 4488 makes provisions for boats, floats, rafts, and drags. Section 4489 provides penalties for violation of the preceding section. The bill, so far as it goes, would be beneficial, but it fails to meet the greatest evils complained of relating to the lack of inspection of foreign private steamers.

First. Because it makes no provision for the inspection of the hulls and boilers of such steamers. (Sections 4417 and 4418, Revised Statutes.)

Second. No provision is made for a certificate of inspection informing passengers that the steamer has been properly inspected. (Sections 4421, 4422, 4423, and 4424, Revised Statutes.)

Third. No provision is made for the appointment and payment of the salaries of the necessary officers to make the required inspections.

According to the report of the Bureau of Statistics for 1881, there arrived during the year at the port of New York 1440 foreign steamers; at Boston, 334 foreign steamers; at Baltimore, 232 foreign steamers; at Philadelphia, 168 foreign steamers; and at New Orleans, 122 foreign steamers.

Probably dividing the above number of vessels by 6 (as many of the arrivals are repeated visits of the same steamers) would approximately give the number of the different steamers visiting the above ports annually, which would reduce the actual number to be inspected as follows: the port of New York, 240; Boston, 55; Baltimore, 38; Philadelphia, 28; New Orleans, 20.

There were fourteen other ports at which there were from one to twenty-eight foreign steamer arrivals, but in such ports the work of the steamboat inspectors is not so heavy as to prevent their inspecting such steamers without interfering with their legitimate duties. But in the principal ports named, special inspectors should be provided for as follows: New York, 6; Boston, 2; Baltimore, 2; Philadelphia, 2; New Orleans, 2.

Authority should be given the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint these special inspectors and to pay their salaries, — per annum, and necessary traveling and other expenses, from funds to be appropriated from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as it would seem obviously improper that such special officers should be paid from the appropriation for the salaries and expenses of steamboat inspection from funds collected by a tax on American steamboat owners and the licensed officers of such vessels.

Very respectfully,

JAMES A. DUMONT,
Supervising Inspector-General.

Hon. CHARLES J. FOLGER,
Secretary of Treasury, Washington, D. C.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER THE SAINT CROIX RIVER, MAINE.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back with amendments the bill (S. No. 1787) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Saint Croix River between the city of Calais, Maine, and Saint Stephen's, New Brunswick, and recommend its passage as amended. In the absence of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] I give notice that I shall call up this bill to-morrow morning.

COMPANY B, FOURTEENTH INFANTRY.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report favorably the bill (H. R. No. 6517) authorizing compensation to members of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, for private property destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, with two amendments, a proviso to the first section and a striking out of the second section, and as that identical bill has been referred to that committee and reported favorably by them with this amendment, I ask that we concur with the House of Representatives in the passage of this bill with an amendment which the committee has already recommended.

Mr. BLAIR. I object if it leads to discussion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think it can.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not object if we are merely to take a vote, but I object to the consideration of any morning business.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think the bill will take any time.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator does not mean to take time with it, I shall not object if it does not lead to discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The bill was read.

Mr. BECK. I shall object. This case, like a dozen others reported now, is given precedence over hundreds of cases that have been on the Calendar for three months.

Mr. HAWLEY. This case is on the Calendar with a unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs, and has been for some time. The same bill comes from the House passed, unanimously approved by us; and this little amendment sending it back to the House will pass the bill and pay a debt due these thirteen years; and the money has been in the Treasury thirteen years. It is nothing but authorizing the Comptroller to pay the money. The account has been adjusted a long time, twice examined thoroughly by General Meigs, approved by Judge-Advocate-General Holt, approved by Judge-Advocate-General Dunn and by Secretary of War McCrary.

Mr. BECK. I suppose I shall have to do as I always do, try to get at the Calendar and then have to give way. What I want is to get at the Calendar. I have been compelled to be out of the Senate for a month most of the mornings on the Appropriations Committee, and other Senators get other bills through out of order. I am complained of every day for not getting up bills which I cannot have heard. But I will not object to this bill now, though I shall have to object hereafter.

Mr. HAWLEY. The whole case is as clear as a bell.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to cause to be ascertained the actual value of the private property belonging to the officers and men of Company B, Fourteenth Infantry, as well as the company property belonging to that company, and the camp and garrison equipage and stores belonging to the United States, that were destroyed by fire on the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad on the 14th of August, 1869, and certify such values when so ascertained to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, who shall thereupon proceed to state an account in favor of the persons to whom any money may be so ascertained to be due, and the Treasurer is to pay the same, not exceeding $5,723.29.

The first amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs was, at the end of section 1, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall charge the amount so paid to said officers and soldiers to the said railroad company, and retain the same out of any money due or that may hereafter be due from the United States to said railroad company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 2 of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to institute proceedings, either in the courts or otherwise, as he may deem best, to recover for the United States the value of the property so destroyed from the person, company, or corporation found liable therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that House bill No. 6715 be taken up, and if taken up I will only occupy a brief time in making a short explanation.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business will be received. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I give notice that I will object to the passage of any bill whatever, whether it relate to one thing or another, until we take up the bill moved by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as the morning business is over the Senator from Vermont can make his motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object beforehand to the passage of any bill now until the bill referred to by the Senator from Vermont is considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1801) for the relief of Patrick Casey, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6702) to authorize the transfer of the property of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home to the Garfield Memorial Hospital, to report it favorably and with the recommendation that it pass, and notwithstanding the admonition of the Senator from Ohio, I will ask for the present consideration of the bill, to which I am sure he can have no objection. It is a mere formal matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not the slightest objection to the passage of that bill, but I object to its consideration now. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. INGALLS. If that course is to be pursued there may be some music hereafter.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. Is there further morning business?

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2175) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande River at Laredo, Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 104) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Venable; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

T. B. KELLERER.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That $198 be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to T. B. Kellerer, as compensation for performing the duties of messenger of the Senate from December 1 to July 1, and for the difference between his pay as laborer and messenger's pay.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, the morning hour is closed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move now the postponement of all prior orders.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to make a motion for a conference committee.

Mr. MORRILL. If this bill is taken up I will give way.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the title of the bill be reported, that we may know what it is about.

Mr. BAYARD. I have twice given notice of my intention to ask for the appointment of a committee of conference on the message from the House in relation to the Japanese indemnity bill, and I now make the motion that that conference be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the motion?

Mr. BAYARD. My motion was that a committee of conference be appointed on the part of the Senate in response to the message of the House on the Japanese indemnity bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Japanese indemnity bill? Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion is agreed to.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The Senate proceeded to consider the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1052) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate further insist on its amendments and agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. BAYARD. The report of the Senate conferees was submitted to the Senate and adopted a few days ago. Since then the House has sent to us a message that they had received the report of their committee and had appointed the same conferees, still insisting on their disagreeing votes. My proposition now is that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the further conference, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senate which I think may lead to a conclusion on this troublesome question, or at least will enable the Senate to give some expression of its judgment upon one point.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is discussion in order at this time?

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the appointment of a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. WINDOM. I shall take the time of the Senate but one moment. I am satisfied that there can be no agreement, at least with the present conferees, and it will be of no benefit to appoint them again unless we may have some expression of the Senate on the question as to the payment of interest. I wish to submit this proposition: that the vote on the pending motion be taken by yeas and nays, with the understanding that Senators voting "yea" thereby express their assent to the proposition to increase the amount named in the Senate amendment by the addition of 5 per cent. interest upon the amount paid by Japan from the time of such payment until the passage of this bill, and that the Senate insist upon its other amendments. This does not amount to an instruction, but it is simply an expression of the assent of the Senate to the proposition. I ask that the yeas and nays may be taken upon the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in order, in the first place, to submit such a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a mere suggestion.

Mr. WINDOM. What is not in order?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in order for us to entertain a proposition to substitute some other amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not substitute any amendment. I simply ask that the yeas and nays be taken, and that those voting "yea" may be understood as giving assent to the proposition I have stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot understand that at all.

Mr. WINDOM. We will try it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The motion of the Senator from Minnesota is not in order.

Mr. WINDOM. I have made no motion. I suppose the motion of the Senator from Delaware is in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The motion of the Senator from Delaware is simply for the appointment of a committee of conference; it is no agreement to anything at all.

Mr. WINDOM. And on that motion I ask that no Senators vote "yea" except those who agree to the proposition I have stated.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that he can reach his object in a parliamentary way by moving to recede with an amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. That cannot be done under the rule. I make no motion, but I simply ask that Senators who vote "yea" may be understood as giving assent to the proposition I have made.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That certainly is a very strange proposition.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator need not vote "yea" if he does not wish to do so. I do not expect him to vote "yea."

Mr. VAN WYCK. I object to any understanding in voting that way.

Mr. WINDOM. If any Senator who is going to vote "yea" objects to the proposition, then it will not be an expression of the Senate. If every Senator who proposes to vote "yea" is willing to so express himself, then it will indicate the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The proposition of the Senator from Minnesota is perfectly ridiculous. The question is, will the Senate appoint a conference committee? and the Senator wants every man who is in favor of the simple proposition, the courteous proposition, for the appointment of a conference committee, thereby to pledge himself in favor of paying 5 per cent. upon the fund. I am in favor of a conference committee, and I would consider it discourteous to the House if I should not vote for it, but I am not in favor of paying 5 per cent. interest upon the fund; and the Senator has no right to ask any such proposition at the hands of the Senate. It is simply absurd.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the Senator from Missouri is ridiculous himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposition of the Senator from Minnesota is out of order. The only question is on agreeing to the appointment of a committee of conference.

Mr. WINDOM. Have I not a right to ask that that may be done?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it is not a motion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senate the other day adopted the report of the committee of conference, and insisted on its amendments. The Senator from Minnesota asks us to reconsider that before we take any further action.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to ask whether my proposition for unanimous consent is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a motion.

Mr. WINDOM. I can ask unanimous consent for anything. It is not a violation of the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is unanimous consent to it, of course it can be agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There is not unanimous consent. I have already objected.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say a few words on this matter.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I object, unless debate is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama is in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well. It will then be understood that both sides can be heard. I want that understood.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to sitting here and listening to the Senator from Nebraska as long as he wants to talk. I always listen to him with a great deal of interest.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am obliged to you, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. With more pleasure, perhaps, than any other man in the Senate, excepting the Senator himself. The remark I desired to make is this: this bill has been in the hands of a conference committee for a long time, I think for an unnecessarily long time, and I have been disposed to think for an unjustly long time. The bill either has merit or it has not. It either deserves the fair consideration of the Senate, or it ought to be kicked out, and the money covered into the Treasury.

The Committee on Foreign Relations in acting upon this bill have followed, as has been frequently stated here, ten or eleven preceding committees. Some of the gravest Senators in this body, some of the ablest men in this body, some of the best-informed men in this body, have laid down by their votes, deliberately given, upon bills which have heretofore been considered by the Senate what might well have been considered instructions to this committee as to their opinions, to say the least of it. No report has ever been made adversely to the bill in either body of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator suspend for one minute? The Chair did submit the question to the Senate as to whether the Senate would now proceed to the consideration of the question of the appointment of a conference committee asked for by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] but the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] state that they did not hear any such motion. Therefore, the Chair will submit it again.

Mr. BAYARD. It was most distinctly asked for, and it was most distinctly ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. What was ordered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senate should proceed to the consideration of the appointment of the conference committee, but the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Rhode Island did not hear it.

Mr. HARRIS. It is no reason, certainly, because a Senator chances to be inattentive, that we are never to proceed to anything by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, but the Senators did not hear the motion put. Therefore the Chair will put the question again.

Mr. HARRIS. If a Senator was not in his seat, and being in his seat now, desires to have the question again put—

Mr. HOAR. Has the Reporter any note of the matter?

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to ask that question. I did not hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion was put and carried, so the Reporter states.

Mr. SLATER. It was very distinctly put.

Mr. HOAR. This morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was watching carefully, and I did not hear it. I gave notice that I would object to it. I saw the Senator from Delaware rise in his place and say that he desired the appointment of a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Immediately after the Senator from Delaware rose the Chair put the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not hear it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I sat here watching for it all the time. I should like to know when it was done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. The Committee on Foreign Relations have given this subject very careful and elaborate attention, and I may say that they have undertaken to place this case on a ground that is honorable and just to the Government of the United States as well as to the Government of Japan. It was the very first consideration and the highest consideration on the part of the Committee on Foreign Relations that we should arrive at a conclusion upon this subject which would not cast the slightest stain or the slightest reproach upon our own Government or our own diplomatic agents. The committee thought that they had, upon a full and complete investigation of the facts, put it on a ground that would authorize them to report a bill refunding this money to Japan which should be entirely in conformity with the honor of the Government of the United States at the present moment, and also entirely in conformity with the honor of its diplomatic agents, and its Secretary of State, and its President at the time of this transaction.

The report has been standing here now for months. No single fact presented in it has ever been challenged. That report contains the truth of history. Much has been said in debate in the nature of statement which is not in accordance with the report, but no Senator has ventured to challenge the statement of a single fact in the report.

The committee came to a conclusion not in conformity with my views, but in conformity with the views of a majority of that body, that the fund which was in the hands of the Government of the United States, and in the possession or keeping of its Secretary of State, had an ear-mark upon it, which the Government itself had set apart, and which it had accumulated here, buying her own bonds in the market, sometimes at a very considerable premium. The committee regarded that fund as one which ought to be left just where the Government of the United States put it, a fund intact to be returned to Japan in the form and condition in which this Government itself had dealt with it, and had preserved it. It has never been in the Treasury of the United States. No motion has ever been made to convert it into the Treasury; no complaint has been made on the part of Congress, or of either House, as to the conduct of any of the several administrations which have dealt with the fund. It has been left in that plight and condition by the command of Congress after its attention has been drawn to the subject from year to year, and in various official reports and messages.

Among the first views that I ever had of what I might call the sanctity of this fund, of its being a fund set apart, ear-marked, I derived from the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and I was very glad to have such eminent authority to support a view to which I did not at first yield my full assent. But understanding that the leading minds of this body and of the American Government regarded this fund as one ear-marked and set apart by the act of our Government, I felt that it would be some reproach to a preceding administration for a committee to bring in a bill with respect to this fund which should place it upon a different footing from that in which it had been handled by the State Department.

More than that, every President of this Government sustained the action of the State Department on this question, and while your committee were anxious that no stain or reproach or criticism should be passed upon any Department of this Government, they felt that it was incumbent upon them, in order to have this subject fully in view and to preserve the Government against any such imputation, that they should treat the fund, in dealing with it under this proposed law, precisely as the Government had done.

Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into a discussion of this bill. I am merely trying to vindicate the conduct of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I have believed all the time that it was quite possible that the two Houses could concur upon a rate of 5 per cent. interest upon the money which was to be returned to Japan, leaving the money that is to be paid out to the crews of the Wyoming and the Ta-Kiang without interest. While I have felt that was a very serious injustice and a very severe discrimination against our own gallant seamen and sailors, so far as I am concerned personally I have been disposed to yield it. I wish very much that that feature of this bill could pass for the sake of the comfort of a grand old man who now lies upon his bed in San Francisco, the subject of frequent surgical operations of a very painful character, and whose bed-side is watched over by his wife, an old lady who is so blind that she can scarcely distinguish his features, and whose house is filled up with the orphan children of a noble son who perished in the service of the United States within eighteen months past, that house being mortgaged for the bread upon which the family feed.

After Admiral McDougal has illustrated the naval history of this country in the splendid manner in which he has, and which draws the deepest impulses of reverence and gratitude from the heart of an ex-rebel, if you please, I had thought perhaps that those in whose cause and under whose flag he fought at that time might be willing to render to him a little of the relief he deserves and is entitled to, not merely in consideration of his gallant services, but also because of the fact that the three governments with whom we were associated in this matter turned over that $140,000 twenty years ago for the purpose of its being distributed among the crew of the Wyoming and the Ta-Kiang; and so every committee of this body has always said which has touched the question at all.

More than that, there is one fact which has not heretofore been stated in this debate of which I am credibly informed. It is, that the Government of Great Britain took all the money which she received out of this three million of indemnity and divided it among the crews of her ships. She is wiser than we are, I suppose, about matters of that kind. She is more considerate of the men who spread her commerce abroad through the world and defend her flag in all the seas. It may be on that account that that little island has such a queenly control, such imperial control, over all the continents and islands of the earth, so much so that there is scarcely an island or a continent in the world which has not been marked and scarred by the shot and shell from the guns of her brave soldiery and seamen. She may be wiser than we are about this, and I think she is. A man who belongs to the British people, and who is under the direction and guardianship of the British Government, is never neglected and never deserted.

If the Senate and House wish to agree that McDougal and his gallant comrades who are yet upon the earth, and the widows and orphans of those who are dead, shall receive no interest upon this fund upon which we have been speculating, if those whose flag he bore so nobly upon those far distant seas and upon whose history he has placed such renown, are willing that he should suffer in that way, I shall bow in acquiescence to that demand; but the injustice of it I will denounce as long as I live, for it is an act of injustice.

I am persuaded that if the gentlemen who go upon this conference committee do not go as the enemies of this bill, they can agree with the House. If gentlemen feel that they are the enemies of this bill when they go upon that committee, I appeal to them under the rules which obtain with parliamentary bodies that they ought not to accept the trust. Let the bill in some of its forms have friends upon the conference committee, either in the form presented by the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] in the amendments which we adopted here or in the forms suggested by the amendment of the honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] which was lost by a single vote, or in the form reported by the committee originally. In whatever form, if the bill is to have friends upon the conference committee I am sure that the conferees on the part of the Senate can agree with the House.

I have sufficient knowledge and information of the sentiments and opinions of gentlemen who have been upon that committee all this time to feel a perfect assurance in my own conscience that if friends to this measure are put upon the conference the bill will be agreed to by the two Houses, and this subject will be disposed of which has so long vexed us, and vexed only us, for it has not vexed Japan. It has vexed the conscience of the United States from the time that Mr. Seward put upon record the solemn declaration that this money was received without just equivalent. It has vexed the conscience of an honest people as to what disposition we should make of the fund.

It is time that that question was settled, and for my part I have yielded all the opinions I had upon it with reference to the interest that I felt was due to Japan, and also to the Ta-Kiang and the Wyoming. When the final vote came upon the passage of the bill, I yielded all my views upon that question in order that the matter might be settled, and voted for the bill as it was amended on the motion of the Senator from Vermont. But that bill as it passed I think the honorable Senator would not now vote for.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, I would; and I have always stood by it in conference committee as it passed the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Then the Senator would have us throw away the premium upon these bonds and sink it in the sea. Here are bonds amounting now to $1,800,000, which are worth in money, as was stated by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] about 20 per cent. premium. They are not worth anything like that, but they are worth a considerable amount of money, probably not less than $150,000. The bill as the Senate passed it, and I wish the country to know the fact, throws away $150,000 of money, sinks it as if in the sea.

Mr. COCKRELL. How?

Mr. MORGAN. Because there is no provision for the sale of the bonds. They are to be canceled.

Mr. MORRILL. It sinks it in the sea of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Not by any means. The provision is that the bonds as they are to-day with the premium upon them shall be canceled.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does not that extinguish the indebtedness of the United States?

Mr. MORGAN. It does, but at too heavy a cost. We have a right to call these bonds. The bonds cost the Government of the United States at the time they are redeemable and are redeemed only their face, and to-day they are worth $150,000 or $200,000 premium, as the Senator from Ohio said, and if we cancel them to-day we throw away that premium upon the bonds. There is not a little page in the Senate who cannot make the account. There is no man, there is not a negro who waits upon the corridors of this body who cannot state the sum and see that the bill of the honorable Senator from Vermont actually throws away the premium on these bonds, $150,000 or $200,000. The House laughed at us when the bill went there.

The Senator said something about the necromancy of figures. If we have bonds in the State Department to-day, whether they are subject to call or not, and we can dispose of those bonds by selling them in the market exactly as we bought them in the market, (for we did not issue these bonds, but we bought them in the market,) for $150,000 premium, and then call them at their proper time when they are due on their face at par, I should like to hear some Senator dispute the proposition that we throw away all the premium upon the bonds by canceling them.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the rate of interest on them?

Mr. MORGAN. The rate of interest varies. I will send the honorable Senator a table from which he can see the character of all the bonds.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Alabama if we should not lose this very large premium if we gave it away? Could we regain it?

Mr. MORGAN. A man loses nothing who gives away something that he owes. We should lose nothing if Japan had a just and equitable demand upon us for the money. We would know exactly where it was, and therefore it would not be lost. It would be placed there, according to my view of the subject, in accordance with duty and the obligations of honor.

I have now said, without attempting to argue the merits of this question, all that I desired to say to show that the Senate ought to have a full and free conference with the House upon this bill. It is in such a shape and condition that there should be a conference, and it should be a full and a candid conference. If the House can be brought to the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, amending the bill in the particular I have mentioned, to throw away the premium on the bonds and thereby make a clear loss to the Government of a very unnecessary character, I for one should vote for the bill, as I voted for it upon its passage. So I would vote for a bill fixing a rate of 5 per cent. interest. I desire that the question shall be disposed of. Both Houses at this session, and at all previous sessions when they have ever voted, have declared the proposition that the money ought to be returned to Japan.

The question in controversy between us is only whether we shall pay the interest upon it or not. The demand of honor made against this Government, not by Japan but by its own ministers, is one that we have all accorded in; there is no division of sentiment between us on that proposition.

I therefore hope the Senate will insist upon its amendments and that a conference committee will be appointed, and that the two Houses may come to an agreement upon a subject which is so delicate in its nature and so calculated to excite the sensibilities of this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. If we are ready to vote on the question I shall not make the motion I was about to make, to lay the subject on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senate is unanimously in favor of a new conference.

Mr. MORRILL. I take it there is no objection to a conference committee being appointed, but there is objection against any conference such as is suggested by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] in relation to this question. Whenever the question is legitimately before us for discussion on the merits I want to be heard; but I do not think this is the proper time to discuss the merits of the question. If it should ever appear here with a proposition to pay any interest, then I shall ask to be heard at length on the subject; for since the matter was before the Senate formerly I have bestowed a very considerable time in an investigation of the facts, and I am prepared to discuss it with more knowledge on the subject than I had when it was discussed before. I have no objection to the appointment of a conference committee and shall vote in favor of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I trust the Senator from Minnesota will withdraw any suggestion that he made about this matter and simply let the conference committee be appointed.

Mr. WINDOM. I believe my suggestion was objected to, and it could not have any force unless it was agreed by unanimous consent. Therefore it is not before the Senate. But the thing I complain of is that we cannot get an expression of the Senate. The Senate very well knows that the 5 per cent. proposition was defeated by but one majority. We also know that the Senate by a vote of 46 to 6 about a year ago declared in favor of the proposition. I may be mistaken but I have not a particle of doubt to-day that the sentiment of a majority of the Senate is in favor of the 5 per cent. proposition. I have no more doubt that a conference committee will be appointed which will agree to absolutely nothing, notwithstanding that is the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me say to my friend from Minnesota that at the time there was only one difference in the vote, there were at least four members of the Senate who were accidentally absent who would have voted the other way.

Mr. WINDOM. I know that some members of the Senate who voted against it have changed their minds, and believe to-day that the 5 per cent. ought to be given.

Mr. ROLLINS. I am satisfied from what I know of the vote that the friends of the bill suffered more by persons being absent and by pairs than the other side. Since then we have had a statement upon the floor of the Senate from the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] whose vote defeated the 5 per cent. proposition, in which he said that he was in favor of paying 5 per cent. interest. If his vote had been cast in committee for the 5 per cent. proposition it would have been carried. In view of some other facts which have come to my knowledge, I am satisfied that a majority of the Senate is in favor of that proposition. All that the friends of the bill ask, as I understand, is that there shall be without delay, without any purpose to prolong discussion, or anything of the kind, a fair expression of the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the opponents of the bill whether they are willing to in any way take a vote testing the judgment of the Senate on the 5 per cent. proposition?

Mr. MORRILL. Not until after full discussion, and I do not want the discussion to-day.

Mr. WINDOM. From which I infer that they are not willing to take a test vote.

Mr. BAYARD. As this was my motion I propose to restate it. It is that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill and ask for a committee of conference in response to the message from the House. I do not apprehend that there can be an objection made. When the conferees on the part of the Senate have returned and submitted their action to this body the question will be whether the Senate will accept the report or whether they will recede from or adhere to their amendments. That question will come I suppose at the proper time; but the motion I make, I merely wish it understood, is precisely as the organ of the committee, and because it is my duty to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate further insist on its amendments to the bill and agree to the further conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. Let the motion include the authority of the Chair to appoint the conferees.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly. I intended to include that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. BAYARD, Mr. WINDOM, and Mr. SHERMAN were appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills: A bill (S. No. 96) for the relief of Joseph Conrad, of Missouri; and A bill (S. No. 1440) relating to the registration of trade-marks.

The message also announced that the House had accepted the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 47 insisted upon by the Senate, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANK HISCOCK of New York, Mr. G. M. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. S. S. COX of New York, the conferees on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. No. 1255) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 5300) to amend chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, relating to contracts under the War Department;

A bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 34, collection of duties on imports.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing Lieutenant-Commander Charles Dwight Sigsbee, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the Emperor of Germany, and also authorizing Joseph R. Hawley to accept decorations from the Governments of the Netherlands, of Spain, and Japan; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to it by citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move the postponement of the present and all prior orders for the purpose of taking up House bill No. 6715.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What bill is that?

Mr. MORRILL. After the bill is taken up I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to postpone the present and all prior orders for the purpose, as he states, of moving to take up the bill named by him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be reported by its title for information.

The ACTING SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. No. 6715) to correct an error in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MORRILL. It is the knit-goods bill.

Mr. BECK. What has become of the tariff bill? I supposed we were going on with that.

Mr. MORRILL. That will come up after this measure.

Mr. BECK. I shall object to the consideration of this bill until the tariff bill is fairly considered, or I shall insist on the amendments to the tariff bill being placed on this bill or this bill being placed as an amendment on the tariff bill, whichever the Senator likes. He promised to stand by the bill to reduce taxation, and not to go into any single isolated matter. We have been waiting to give him a fair chance to consider the tax bill. The Senator can move the knit-goods bill on the tariff bill as an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a very important bill, which concerns three hundred and fifty-four industrial establishments in this country. I do not think it will take much time. I shall ask to have the bill passed as it came to us from the House, and shall make a very brief statement myself and then listen to any arguments which may be presented upon the other side.

Mr. BECK. Every little thing that there is a special interest to somebody in is pressed ahead of the general reduction of the taxation of the country. I propose to object to any single item on knit goods or anything else being picked out. Let us go on with the sugar tax and Bessemer steel, and salt, and the other things we have in the tax bill, and let this come in, as it properly can, as an amendment to that bill. I hope this proposition will be voted down and the tax bill voted up. That is all I have to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Vermont will agree to take up the tax bill if the Senator from Kentucky is so anxious to get it up.

Mr. BECK. I am not anxious to do anything, but I protest against any little outside thing being taken up to the exclusion of the tariff bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not opposed to taking up and discussing any of these bills, but I have had upon the Calendar passed over without prejudice and subject to call for two or three months a bill of far more importance to the country, to a much larger number of people and of much greater pecuniary interest than the tariff bill, to remedy and to protect our people against annual losses of far greater sums than the proposed reduction of taxation could possibly amount to. The House passed recently a bill that I want to take up in the place of the one introduced by myself which is upon the Calendar and which has been put there by the unanimous report of the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate. The House committee had a bill exactly a copy of the one introduced by me. The committee of the House recommended that by unanimous consent. It was passed by the House by an almost unanimous vote, and it is here now upon our Calendar. I do not believe there is a Senator upon the floor who will vote against the bill.

Mr. COKE. What is the number of the House bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. 896. It is an old bill; it is a bill to protect the domestic animals of the country against contagious diseases. There has been before this Congress from the day we met in December to the present moment no bill of such vital importance to one of the greatest industries of the country as this bill. We have in the United States 40,000,000 cattle, worth upon an average $30 a head, which is $1,200,000,000. These cattle double themselves in a little over two years and a half. The herdsmen and farmers of the whole country are threatened with a most insidious, contagious, and incurable disease, called the lung-plague or pleuro-pneumonia.

Here is a bill prepared by the committees of the two Houses of Congress to avoid all the objections upon the score of economy or stickling upon the score of interfering with State rights. I do hope that my friend from Vermont will allow me to call up the bill. I know it will pass in five minutes, I believe it will receive every vote in the Senate; it ought to do it. It is demanded by the whole country, by every farmer in it, by every man who is interested in cattle, by every man who eats beef or drinks milk, eats butter, or wears shoes, or who drinks milk punch, as is suggested by my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. President, I have been waiting for months to obtain the passage of this bill. It was crowded out at the last Congress. It was then under the charge of my modest friend from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] It is here now at the heels of the session, and I ask the Senate by a unanimous vote to take it up and consider it and pass it right away. It will not take five minutes. It is a very short bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I have already said to the Senator from Kentucky that if the knit-goods bill is taken up I will give way, provided the bill he has in charge does not lead to debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator's bill will provoke a great deal of discussion, while this bill could be passed in half the time we have already consumed as to which bill shall be first considered.

Mr. PLATT. But the Senator from Vermont says he will give way to the Senator from Kentucky as soon as the bill he has moved is taken up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me pass mine right away and I will vote to take up the tax bill.

Mr. MORRILL. It is not the tax bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I greatly prefer taking this bill up at once, because I know it will not consume five minutes, and I know there is going to be discussion on the Senator's bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I had the impression that the Senator from Vermont proposed to take up the bill for the reduction of taxes.

Mr. MORRILL. I do propose to take it up immediately after this bill is disposed of.

Mr. BAYARD. Does the Senator now select the knit-goods bill and ask that to be proceeded with in preference to the tax bill?

Mr. MORRILL. For the moment. I do not think it will take much time. I merely want a vote of the Senate upon it one way or the other.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will take two weeks. We shall never get through with it at this session.

Mr. BAYARD. I had no idea that the Senator had postponed the general question of a tax reduction for a question of amending the tax upon a single article and in a single interest.

Mr. MORRILL. I intend immediately to bring up the tax bill, and shall make a proposition which I hope will be accepted on all sides of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Senate bill No. 593 is upon the Calendar; it has been passed over without prejudice, and is subject to call. I want to postpone that bill indefinitely and have passed in its stead House bill No. 896, which is exactly a copy of the Senate bill. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that his motion is not in order at the present time. The Senator from Vermont has moved to postpone the present order, stating that his object is, if that motion shall be agreed to, to move to take up the bill named by him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Chair will recognize me immediately after the pending order is postponed, I shall be perfectly willing to agree to that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will feel bound to recognize the Senator from Vermont, he having made the motion and stated that he would move to take up the bill named by him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I can be recognized immediately after a vote upon his proposition, I am perfectly willing to consent to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot make any bargain with the Senator. The question is on postponing the pending order.

Mr. BECK. Let us see what it is. Which bill is it that is proposed to be taken up? Let the title of the bill be read.

Mr. HOAR. Is there anything in order except the postponement of the present order? Every Senator agrees to that, I assume. The next question will be on the particular bill to be taken up.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the present order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present order is the Calendar. The motion is to postpone the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. I prefer the Calendar to the knit-goods bill. If the issue is made between the Calendar and the knit-goods bill, which is a bill to increase taxation, and the Senator from Vermont abandons the bill to reduce taxation, then I shall vote for the Calendar against a bill to increase taxation in the interest of a few men.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand the Senator from Vermont to abandon the bill to reduce taxation.

Mr. BECK. He has done it now.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand he is in perfect accord with the Senator from Kentucky, but proposes to proceed with this little bill first.

Mr. BECK. A little bill!

Mr. ALLISON. It will only take a few moments, I understand.

Mr. BAYARD. It is the postponement of a bill to reduce taxation in order to move one to increase it.

Mr. BECK. That is it, with a resolution from the House to adjourn on Saturday, which I presume the Senator from Iowa will accede to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I protest against any assumption of Senators that the tax bill has been abandoned by anybody.

Mr. BECK. The tax bill is not sought to be taken up, and a bill to increase taxation is sought to be taken up in lieu of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The tax bill is sought to be taken up, and I believe by the unanimous voice of this side of the Chamber. I hope the Senator from Vermont will call it up, and take Senators at their word and pass it.

Mr. BECK. That is, the knit-goods bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. The tax bill. I hope the Senator from Vermont will take Senators at their word and undertake to pass the tax bill to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if the Committee on Appropriations (I suppose I have a right to ask the question) have taken any action upon the resolution of the House to adjourn on Saturday?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand that the Committee on Appropriations have any jurisdiction of that question.

Mr. INGALLS. The resolution has not been referred. It lies on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. It lies on the table. The Committee on Appropriations have no control over it.

Mr. BUTLER. I take it for granted, of course, that the Senate will be influenced very much by the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I should think from the statements of Senators on both sides of the Chamber that we ought not to take up that resolution until we can see what progress we can make with the tax bill. I hope that question will be decided before the question of adjournment is decided.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me very important to decide the question of adjournment before the tax bill is proceeded with. If we are to adjourn on Saturday, then it might influence a good many of us in our votes on the other proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator in all seriousness that I do not think we shall be able to adjourn on Saturday.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I desire to say a word or two upon this matter, and to say frankly to Senators on the other side, that the knit-goods bill appeals to me precisely as the news of a flood in the Mississippi Valley appeals to those Senators, or a fire in Chicago, or the yellow fever.

There are manufacturing establishments all over New England; there are manufacturing establishments in my county, which were tolerably flourishing, not extravagantly so, owned by Republicans and Democrats; it is a matter entirely without the distinction of party. By a decision of the Supreme Court that struck them like a flash of lightning they found themselves on hand with goods piled up, orders revoked by telegraph (the Medlicott Mills, as an illustration, in a town near my home, to the extent of $100,000 by a single dispatch) and goods ordered from abroad by cable to take the place of their own.

They had been going on since 1864 and 1867 in perfectly good faith under a uniform interpretation of the statute by the Secretary of the Treasury that no man ever had a doubt about. That interpretation was justified by a decision in the district court in New York in 1877. Sixteen million dollars capital were invested in the manufacture and three hundred and fifty-four establishments had grown up, when, like thunder in a clear sky, came this technical decision piling up their goods and leaving them to dread collapse and even possible bankruptcy if this strange construction of the statute shall not be corrected.

It is not a question of protection or free trade; it is a question of common mercy; that is what it is; common decency and justice. There is nothing of theoretical doctrine in it. I make no claim by reason of the protective theory. I claim an error of revision and a decision thereon that nobody foresaw. I beg you to consider this bill, and if we cannot show you in one hour or one half hour that what I state is true we will give up the case.

Just as good men as you or any of us, all acting in good faith, who had put their money in this manufacture, were struck by lightning, and are waiting to see whether Congress will stop to make of it a matter of theory and controversy. It is a question of humanity.

I do not care what is taken up this moment, but I ask Senators, if it be the internal-revenue bill, to remember us and give us our day, our hour in court. Give us common humanity, just such as we have given you in a thousand cases. The pockets of my people are wide open when your floods, your epidemics, and your fires come, and do not now raise technicalities upon us when some of our best men are in sore distress, on the eve of serious financial embarrassment from causes arising here in Washington, and for which they are in no respect to blame.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to postpone the present order, which is the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Now I move to take up the tax bill, and if it shall be taken up I will make a statement after it is up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation is before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I agreed to give way to the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] provided the bill he wishes to have considered would not lead to debate.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont agreed to give way if the knit-goods bill was taken up.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be plenty of time to consider that bill. Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Kentucky has been acting on the supposition that his bill would come up, and that there would be no opposition to it after the tax bill was taken up. I ask Senators to allow that to be done now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bill I ask to have considered is House bill No. 896.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks that the tax bill, so called, be informally laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object.

Mr. INGALLS. Has the tax bill been laid before the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been laid before the Senate, but the understanding was, and I voted for the motion with that understanding, that House bill No. 896 would be taken up now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island objects.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I trust the Senator from Rhode Island will not object. If this objection is insisted upon it will cause other objections to come in. To save time on the tax bill, and possibly to get to the knit-goods bill, if the Senator from Vermont desires it, I beg the Senator from Rhode Island not to persist in his objection, when there is possibly no objection to the bill itself which the Senator from Kentucky wishes to have considered. There are other questions beside those which the Senator from Rhode Island is championing here.

Mr. ALDRICH. I know no reason why this bill should not be considered after the tax bill is disposed of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Vermont agreed that if I would help him to take up the tax bill he would yield to me.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There is no objection to the bill which the Senator from Kentucky has in charge, while there are a great many objectionable features in the other bill. I trust that the bill will be taken up.

Mr. ALDRICH. In order to save time I withdraw the objection.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw his objection for fifteen minutes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the tax bill will be laid aside informally and the bill which the Senator from Kentucky has indicated will be considered.

CATTLE DISEASES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 896) for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry, to prevent the exportation of diseased cattle and the spread of infectious or contagious diseases among domestic animals; which was read.

Mr. BROWN. I have not the bill before me, and I may not have understood correctly the reading of the first section. If I understood it, however, there is no exception in case a railroad company should ship diseased stock that it may be excused, having no knowledge of the fact that it was diseased.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, that is provided for.

Mr. BROWN. I did not understand it as applying to railroads.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It applies to railroads.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Secretary to read the first section of the bill again.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

That no railroad company within the United States whose road forms any part of a line of road from one State or Territory to another, or from a State into the District of Columbia, or the owners or masters of any steam or sailing or other vessel or boat, shall receive for transportation, or transport, from one State or Territory to another, or from any State into the District of Columbia, any live cattle affected with any contagious or infectious disease, and especially the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia; nor shall any person, company, or corporation deliver for such transportation to any railroad company, or master or owner of any boat or vessel, any live cattle, knowing them to be affected with any contagious or infectious disease; nor shall any person, company, or corporation drive on foot or transport in private conveyance from one State or Territory to another, or from any State into the District of Columbia, any live cattle, knowing them to be affected with any contagious or infectious disease, and especially the disease known as pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend by inserting—

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the bill is amended it is lost, because it will have to go back to the House.

Mr. INGALLS. It ought to be lost if a railroad corporation or anybody else is to be punished for an act which was not criminally performed and which was not wrongful.

Mr. BROWN. I cannot propose to vote for an act which imposes a penalty of $5,000 on a railroad company for carrying diseased stock when it may have no means of knowing that it was diseased.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The first section provides:

Nor shall any person, company, or corporation drive on foot or transport in private conveyance from one State or Territory to another, or from any State into the District of Columbia, any live cattle knowing them to be affected with any contagious or infectious disease.

"Knowing" is the word which covers the point raised by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN. The section applies to any person delivering them to the railroad company, but there is no provision made in regard to the railroad company itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It covers both.

Mr. BROWN. I do not understand that it does.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Kentucky will examine line 7 in section 1 he will find that the criticism made by the Senator from Georgia is correct; that no matter what might be the circumstances under which a railroad corporation should receive this stock, no matter what precaution they might exercise, if they received it and it turns out afterward that the stock is affected with the disease that is attempted to be guarded against in this bill they are liable to the punishment prescribed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that the conjunction connecting the two portions of the first section cover it. The words "knowing them to be affected" apply to the whole section.

Mr. INGALLS. It is not a question of grammar; it is a question of fact.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend by inserting after the word "pleuro-pneumonia," in line 11 of section 1, the words:

Knowing them to be affected with any such disease.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. I do not care a cent about it, except that the bill will have to go back to the House if it be amended. The latter part of the section which I have read applies to the whole section. I do not object to the amendment, except that it will embarrass the bill and require it to go back to the House.

Mr. INGALLS. It would embarrass a great many innocent persons to have the bill passed in the way it stands now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By reading the latter part of the section Senators will see that the whole thing is covered. I call attention to lines 18 and 19:

Any live cattle, knowing them to be affected with any contagious or infectious disease, &c.

Mr. INGALLS. No; the Senator will observe that the semicolon at the end of the word "pleuro-pneumonia," in line 11, closes one paragraph of the bill. That defines the penalties which are to be affixed on the railroad corporation for violating its terms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BROWN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Kentucky will pardon me for making an inquiry with regard to section 6, which provides:

That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture, through said chief of bureau, to prepare such rules and regulations as they may deem necessary for the speedy and effectual suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State and Territory, and invite said authorities to co-operate in the execution and enforcement of this act.

It invites them to co-operate; but suppose the governor and the State board of my State, being satisfied with the excellent rules they already have, decline to co-operate, will then these Federal officers come into the farms of my constituents and go to condemning and quarantining cattle?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course they cannot. That is exactly the reason why they are required to "invite" them. The language would have been very different if it had been intended to give them that power.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from Kentucky how this measure is to be carried out as against boards of health and other designated State officers who have charge of the subject in the different States?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not affect them at all, I will say to the Senator; it merely co-operates with them and gives them the benefit of all the information they obtain.

Mr. SEWELL. If the matter is attended to now in the different States, what is the necessity for an appropriation of $50,000?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because it is not attended to in the different States. I will state to the Senator a single instance which came to my notice last week. The newspapers report that the veterinary surgeon of the State of Maryland reported to the governor that there was no disease in that State. Dr. Law, Dr. Forbes, and Mr. Saunders, the treasurer of the cattle commission, last week went over to Maryland, and within twelve miles of the city of Baltimore they found a herd of nineteen cattle diseased. They purchased one and killed it, and it was found that it was in the last stage of the disease. They brought the lungs to the city of Washington, and I saw them with my own eyes. They learned that fourteen from that herd had been shipped to Baltimore. They went there and found them in the cattle-yard in Baltimore. I have that from the commissioners here, and that occurred only last week.

Mr. SEWELL. The State of New Jersey three years ago, on information of this character, appointed a commission for the purpose of stamping out pleuro-pneumonia in that State. I was instrumental in the passage of a bill by which the State expended $2,500 and over for that purpose, although I believe there was no more pleuro-pneumonia there than there is now, and we have some of it all the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say to the Senator that if he will read the report of the commission he will find that the herds of his State are rotten to-day. There is more of the lung plague in New Jersey to-day than in any other State of the Union.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not want anything done to embarrass the State authorities there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The cities are full of diseased cattle; Alexandria is full of it. Pleuro-pneumonia is existing at this moment in the State of New York, especially in Long Island, and in portions of Maryland, the District of Columbia, and portions of Virginia and Delaware. I have the report of the commissioners, and if Senators had read it I am satisfied there would not be an objecting voice to the passage of this bill.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not think any means can be adopted to stop the disease altogether. There will be pleuro-pneumonia just the same as there will be chicken-pox in children. The question is whether it amounts to so much as these people say it does.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state to the Senator and the Senate that there are two objects in the bill. We do know that the lung plague is the most fatal, the most virulent, and the most contagious of the diseases that afflict the bovine race; that it has exterminated the cattle race in the south of Africa; that it has exterminated the cattle in Australia; that it has nearly exterminated them in Eastern Russia, throughout the steppes of Russia. That is the reason why there is such a demand for American cattle in England. They in the old times got their supplies from those countries.

The lung plague is in Long Island; we know it is in the city of New York and in various other cities. We know it is in New Jersey; we know it is in a portion of Virginia; we know it is in Maryland, in Delaware, and in the District of Columbia, and in nearly all the dairies of this city from which we get the milk we drink every day. We know another thing: that the British privy council have issued an order prohibiting the introduction of American cattle into the interior of England because we have that disease here. We are shipping 150,000 cattle, worth about $15,000,000, to Liverpool and London. We might ship a million cattle just as easy as 150,000, which would bring us $100,000,000; but in consequence of the disease existing in New York and the principal ports of shipment the British Government has prohibited the landing of our cattle, and requires them to be slaughtered upon arrival at the quays of London and Liverpool.

We know that cattle of the same quality taken from Canada to Liverpool sell for $30 or $40 a head more than ours do, because our cattle are not permitted to enter the interior of the country. The butchers and graziers are not permitted to buy them and take them back and sell them, but they are taken with the bruises, fevers, and sores incident from transportation from Chicago or Saint Louis to Liverpool. When they get them resuscitated and cured of those bruises they bring them upon the market. Men engaged in the business have told me that the loss to American shippers is $40 a head in consequence of the suspicion upon our cattle having the disease.

The people of Great Britain are anxious for all the meat they can get, but they desire to protect their own domestic herds against foreign infection. If you can satisfy the British Government that we have no pleuro-pneumonia; that the cattle from Kansas, from Saint Louis, from Chicago, from Louisville, and Cincinnati have been brought from countries where there is no disease, by a route which has secured them from infection, that restriction in the British market will be taken off our cattle.

The object of this bill is to do that. It is to have a commission of competent men whose statements will be of value. Besides that we want to protect the great Northwest from this pestilence. The reason why it has not spread to the West and Northwest in bygone years has been that the current of the cattle traffic has been from west to east, and not from east to west. But the price of beef has gone up, and the cheapness of forage out West has given a market there for the calves that are reared in the dairies of the East, and that is beginning now to be an important traffic, and the pestilential cow-sheds where these calves are born are nearly all infected with this disease. It is to protect the farmers and the graziers of the West that we want this board. Every gentleman in the Northwest, let me say, is as much interested in this matter as I am, although all of them have not given the subject as much attention perhaps as I have.

Mr. President, no more important bill than this has been before Congress this session. I do hope the bill will pass without any further objection.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 3 of the bill. I have no objection to making the necessary provisions for the extirpation of this disease and for the protection of the cattle interests in the United States, and I understood from the representations made by the Senator from Kentucky that the purpose of this bill was to reach that result; but I see by a very cursory examination that the bill bristles with provisions that are exceedingly obnoxious and that will lead to very dangerous consequences in the future.

The section to which I have called the attention of the Senate by my motion to eliminate provides for the organization of a bureau of animal industry inside the Department of Agriculture, which is to proceed to make examination as to the value and the general statistics of the cattle-trade in the country, with the appointment of new officers and the imposition of new duties that can all be performed by the present machinery of that department or some other in this Government.

I am opposed to these continual encroachments by the legislative department for the purpose of creating continually new offices and paying additional salaries without any corresponding advantage that is to be gained. The Senator from Kentucky must be aware by a mere inspection of this section that it has no connection whatever with the subject with which this bill professes to deal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the very object. That section provides machinery to execute the law, and without the section it is no law at all.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us have it read:

SEC. 3. That the Commissioner of Agriculture shall organize in his department a bureau of animal industry, and shall appoint a chief—

Of course that is the first thing—

who shall be a competent veterinary surgeon—

What conceivable reason is there for appointing a chief who shall be a horse-doctor to examine the statistics of the animal industry in this country?—

and whose duty it shall be to investigate and report upon the number, value, and condition of the domestic animals of the United States, their protection and use—

That is to say, you appoint a horse-doctor to report upon the number, use, and condition of domestic animals in the United States. Why, Mr. President, a simple statement of that proposition renders it so preposterous that I am quite confident the Senator from Kentucky will withdraw from it his great support.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Never, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. Further—and also inquire into and report the causes of contagious and communicable diseases among them—

A horse-doctor is usually expected to cure diseases; he is employed for the purpose of treating diseases, and not to examine and inquire into and report upon the causes of those diseases—and the means for the prevention and cure of the same, and to collect such information on these subjects as shall be valuable to the agricultural and commercial interests of the country.

The object of this bill is to prevent the exportation of animals afflicted with pleuro-pneumonia and, if possible, to extirpate that disease, a very creditable object; but in accomplishing that, why do we erect a bureau of animal industry for the purpose of collecting information that is to be valuable to the agricultural and commercial interests of this country? Further than that—

The Commissioner of Agriculture is also authorized to employ two commissioners—

Not content with the chief, who is to be an accomplished horse-doctor, he is to employ two additional commissioners, of agriculture I suppose—one of whom shall be a practical stock-raiser, and one an experienced business man—

What kind of "an experienced business man" is not defined, whether he is to be a man in the dry-goods business, or a man in the apothecary business, or a man in any other form of commercial enterprise in this country, but—an experienced business man familiar with questions—

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know the Senator does not want to mislead the Senate on that subject. Let him read the next line, which says that this business man shall be specially "familiar with questions pertaining to commercial transactions in live stock."

Mr. INGALLS. Exactly; but that is merely one qualifying phrase—whose duty it shall be to advise with regard to the best methods of treating, transporting, and caring for animals, and of providing against the spread of said diseases.

Two commissioners, one of whom is a practical stock-raiser and the other an experienced business man, are to examine into the question of preventing the spread of communicable diseases among live stock! Now we come to the more interesting topic of compensation:

The compensation of said commissioners shall be at the rate of not more than $10 per diem, with all necessary traveling expenses, while engaged in the performance of their duty under this act.

Mr. PLATT. Per diem all the time.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course, per diem all the time and traveling expenses all the time, for they will never cease to be employed.

The salary of the chief of bureau shall be $3,000 per annum.

And this is not enough. We are not only to have this chief of bureau and the two additional ornamental commissioners but—

The Commissioner of Agriculture shall appoint a clerk for said bureau, with a salary of $1,800 per annum; and any services rendered by the National Board of Health—

Which, I think, is stricken out—under the provisions of this act shall be paid for as provided in the act creating and organizing such board.

If in a bill that is designed and intended to control the spread of pleuro-pneumonia and protect the cattle of this country against the danger that may arise from the carrying of these cattle in cars or upon boats, the Senate want to provide for the creation of such a board as this, then they differ very much with me. I am entirely willing to co-operate with the Senator from Kentucky in any legitimate effort he may make to prevent the spread of this disease and to as far as possible extirpate it; but I am not willing to endow the Commissioner of Agriculture with these extraordinary and unheard-of powers with the vast additional expense to be entailed upon this country. I trust the Senator from Kentucky, as the bill has already been once amended, will agree to have this section eliminated, because it does not belong in the bill and has no connection whatever with its provisions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is the very gist of the whole bill, and I want to say to the Senator that when he attempts to assure me that he is willing to co-operate with me I think he does not know himself, and he does not express the feelings of his own heart and the reflection of his own head. I believe solemnly that if the Lord's Prayer were under consideration by the Senate the Senator from Kansas would move an amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to appeal to him? It is very evident this bill cannot pass to-day, if it is ever passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us take the vote right now.

Mr. ALDRICH. If a vote can be taken I have no objection.

Mr. PLATT. I understand the Senator from Kansas to suggest that the provision relating to the National Board of Health had been stricken out. I do not so understand it. What the National Board of Health knows about doctoring cattle I am at a loss to understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That very matter was stricken out in order to meet the objections of the Senator from Kansas made by him at the last session.

Mr. PLATT. But it is in the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Let me understand this. We will confine ourselves to the bill and not to the Lord's Prayer. Are the lines in the bill from line 25 to 27 of section 3 still retained?

Mr. PLATT. There has been no amendment striking them out, and they are in the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood the Senator from Kentucky to say that that provision of the bill had been stricken out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the original bill as drawn it was struck out, and I think as read by the Secretary. Is there anything in the bill about the Board of Health? I think there is one provision which says this commission shall have authority to take the advice of the Board of Health in respect to some matters. I ask the Secretary to read that part of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those lines are in the bill.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

And the Commissioner of Agriculture shall appoint a clerk for said bureau, with a salary of $1,800 per annum; and any services rendered by the National Board of Health under the provisions of this act shall be paid for as provided in the act creating and organizing such board.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The House supposed it might be necessary to consult some doctors of the National Board of Health.

Mr. INGALLS. That adds a new and interesting feature to this bill. I should like to have it stated by the Senator from Kentucky what functions the National Board of Health, which was created, I believe, for the purpose of preventing the spread of epidemic diseases among the human race, is to perform in connection with the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am just informed by a gentleman who is conversant with it over there that the House struck out all that.

Mr. INGALLS. Why is it here? I understood the Senator from Kentucky to call up the House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me answer, sir. You ask me questions and then go on. I understand that it is a clerical mistake here.

Mr. INGALLS. Then the bill is not in a condition to be considered if it is full of clerical errors, and we have no information about how it passed the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can strike that clause out.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the engrossed bill may be brought here, that we may know how it passed the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. As there seems to be some mistake about the bill, I move that its further consideration be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL. Just call up the other bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. It had better be postponed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can have a vote in a minute.

Mr. ALDRICH. If we can have a vote, I shall not interpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can have a vote in a minute.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not see how we can have a vote on a bill that we do not know how it stands.

Mr. INGALLS. So much the better, perhaps.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In line 24, section 3, I move to strike out from the word "and" down to and including the word "board," in line 27 of section 3, because I am informed it was intended to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary has the engrossed bill as received from the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the words:

And any services rendered by the National Board of Health under the provisions of this act shall be paid for as provided in the act creating and organizing such board.

Mr. INGALLS. My motion includes that, because I moved to strike out the entire section.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out from the word "and," in line 24, to the word "board," in line 27 of section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky would be in order first, as he has the right to perfect the section. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. INGALLS. But I moved to strike out the entire section, which includes that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the Senator from Kentucky is first in order. He desires to perfect the section before the question shall be taken on striking out the entire section. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the entire section.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I had an opportunity to examine this bill or hear it read to-day. I agree with the Senator from Kansas, and other Senators who have spoken on this matter, that this is a bill which ought not to pass. It seems to me it is a bill more to create a bureau and fasten a sort of commission on this Government than anything else, and this commission will live a long while after the pleuro-pneumonia has passed. I think we had better bear the pleuro-pneumonia a few years than this commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to strike out section 3 of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. COKE. I hope the motion will prevail. I think this section a most obnoxious feature of a very obnoxious bill. In fact the bill entails a needless expense upon the Government, and if it is passed will hamper the commerce in live stock in a way which will be extremely onerous. It is impossible to put a bill like this in operation without a great deal of machinery, and whenever that machinery is started it will be found an incubus on interstate commerce in cattle throughout this country, especially in the West and South.

I do not believe, Mr. President, in assuming that the people of these United States in their commercial relations with each other are not able to take care of themselves. There are some things which the Government ought to assume the people will do for themselves, and one of those things is that they know how to care for their own interests in raising and carrying on commerce in live stock. They have done it up to this time. Why should they not continue to do it?

In my own State there is a disease called Texas fever among the cattle, called so up North because cattle driven from Texas at a certain season communicate the disease to Northern cattle. This thing has become understood. The people of Texas know that they must not drive their cattle at a time when this disease can be communicated. The people in Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, and other States know that these cattle must not be driven there except at particular times. The people in Texas and the surrounding States have gotten to understand the disease and the remedy, and there is no trouble about it. They regulate it for themselves. If it had been regulated by law there would have been an expensive and cumbersome machinery that would have produced a great deal of friction and a great deal of trouble, while now everything goes along smoothly.

Another thing, Mr. President. After enacting this sweeping law covering the whole country, forbidding commerce in cattle except on certain conditions, demanding that there shall be a penalty on those who violate it, the ninth section remits the subject to the district courts of the United States to be prosecuted whenever a violation occurs. Sir, this will add immensely to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. I am opposed to a further aggrandizement of the jurisdiction of these courts. I have no prejudice against the courts of the United States, but in the States there are courts which ought to exercise all the jurisdiction arising out of the every-day transactions of the people. The States can take care of this cattle-disease question themselves, and their own courts can apply the remedy. When you go into the Federal courts citizens are dragged two, three, four, and five hundred miles from home to answer trivial charges. The course of the Federal judiciary in my State has been one of oppression upon the people least able to bear it. I oppose this bill, then, because of section 9, which multiplies indefinitely the jurisdiction of the Federal courts throughout the United States and makes it possible that every citizen who deals in cattle, who buys or sells or ships a cow or a calf, shall be arraigned in some district court of the United States and carried there for trial on account of it.

Another reason why I object to this bill is that it vests in the Secretary of the Treasury a very extended discretion. I will read:

SEC. 5. That to prevent the exportation from any port of the United States to any port in a foreign country of live cattle affected with any infectious or contagious disease, and especially pleuro-pneumonia, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to take such steps and adopt such measures, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as he may deem necessary.

We are delegating, if this bill is passed, the power to the Secretary of the Treasury to make laws which shall absolutely control the entire commerce of this country in cattle. It does not require him to publish them even. It confers upon him a most dangerous power, one that no man in this country should possess. Sir, we all know it to be a fact that the Secretary of the Treasury cannot give attention to all the details of his office, and this delegation of authority is simply the delegation of an authority to a subordinate, to a clerk perhaps, to make rules and regulations for the government of the vast commerce of this country in live stock. That is what it amounts to. I oppose the delegation of power to commissions; I oppose the delegation of any power that can be exercised by Congress; I oppose the delegation of this power to the Secretary of the Treasury, because it is a power through which he can invade the rights of every man, of every citizen in this country, by regulations that may be oppressive and to the obstruction of the commerce upon which many of our people rely, and upon which their prosperity greatly depends.

I think this bill is an extremely objectionable one. I believe in letting our people alone. I believe that we have too much government. I believe that the people are the best judges of their own interests. I believe that they will prevent the shipping of diseased cattle from one point to another, that they will take care of the health of the live stock in this country better than the Government and a squad of horse-doctors appointed in a bureau here can do. I believe that, and, believing it, shall vote against the bill. If this bill shall pass, the expense of executing the law, the swarm of Federal officials prying into the private business of the people, vexing them with persecutions and harassing them with inspections and troubling them with the delays of red tape in their common daily avocations will greatly overbalance any good it will do.

Let the people alone, and trust them to attend well to their own business and take care of their own interests, and it will be well done; but subject them to the espionage and surveillance of a lot of rapacious officials, who execute the decrees of the Secretary of the Treasury without appeal or redress, as this bill proposes, while the object of the bill will not be attained the people will be infinitely annoyed. This bureau business is overdone. Our farmers and stock-raisers have escaped the clutches of this Briareus thus far, and have not been harassed from Washington except by the tax-gatherer, who is about as much as they can stand, without having superadded an inspector who will examine into every cow trade they may make, followed up by a United States district attorney, perhaps, to drag them hundreds of miles from home to answer a criminal accusation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I felt sure that the Senator from Texas would vote against this bill. He says the good sense and judgment of the people will certainly prevent them from trafficking in infected animals. I want to say to the Senator that to my personal knowledge I have seen cattle brought from his State to the North and killed, tens and tens of thousands of them, that were diseased.

Mr. COKE. That was several years ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are exposed to the same danger to-day. There is no power here given to the Secretary of the Treasury to pass a law, but to make regulations to carry a law into effect. A regulation is merely an arrangement, a provision to carry out a law, and not a law itself. How is the Secretary to do anything unless he has the power to make regulations? You may say to him, "Look and see that these cattle are not going to England affected with disease, and that healthy cattle be not brought in contact with diseased cattle."

How are you going to do it? How are you going to make arrangements with railroads? Can you prescribe them by law? He can send out one of his agents and make an arrangement with a railroad and say, "Now, sir, if you bring from Cincinnati or Chicago cattle to be passed over certain cars and stopping in certain stock-yards, then I will give them a clean bill of health going to Europe." We all know there is no disease on the prairies of the West, but we do know that right along the Atlantic seaboard there is abundance of it, and we all feel who own a herd of cattle that our herds are in danger daily from an infection that may exterminate them, as we know that some of the best herds of cattle, the finest herds in the world, worth thousands of dollars apiece, have been destroyed by this dread scourge, the cattle disease.

I am amazed at the Senator from Texas pretending that there is power granted here to the Secretary of the Treasury to make laws. There is no such power granted in this bill. There is not one single constitutional objection to this bill. The greatest State-rights stickler cannot put his finger on a single provision. All that is in it is to make it acceptable. The bill asks only $50,000, and I say to Senators that they cannot afford to go back to their farmer constituents and say that for the cattle interest, amounting to $1,200,000,000, they were not willing to give $50,000 to aid it.

Mr. COKE. I call the Senator's attention to the language of section 5, referring to the Secretary of the Treasury:

And he is hereby authorized to take such steps and adopt such measures, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as he may deem necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course. How is he to execute the law unless he is to adopt such measures?

Mr. COKE. It does not even provide that he must respect any other act than this act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is bound by all the laws, whether provided for here or not. We do not propose to provide here that he shall respect all other laws. That would be nonsense, and the Senator from Texas is too good a lawyer to contend for such a position as that. It is absolutely ridiculous.

In all candor, Mr. President, I say if there was a constitutional question here, if there was a question involving the interests of the banks, if there was a question involving the interests of railroads or of bondholders, they would have splendid advocacy on this floor; but it seems to me the farmers have but few friends. Ah, Mr. President, I think we have too many of these great lawyers and great financiers, so called, on the floors of Congress. I wish we had more practical, sensible people and less lawyers. We ought to have some lawyers, but not all. When any of your law questions come up or a discussion of the rules, they all make speeches; but when you ask for a small appropriation to protect an interest valued at $1,200,000,000, $50,000 cannot be granted.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a question of order. I withdrew my objection to the consideration of this bill with the understanding that it should be concluded in fifteen minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think we can get a vote in a moment. I do not want to talk more.

Mr. ALDRICH. As all the friends of the bill with the exception of the Senator from Kentucky have deserted it and he is left alone in his advocacy—

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not left alone. I am quite able to meet you all on this subject.

Mr. ALDRICH. If we can have a vote at once, I shall not interpose an objection; otherwise I must.

Mr. HOAR. I rise—

Mr. INGALLS. I have some additional observations I desire to submit. Of course if the Senator rises to a point of order I shall wait for its decision.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir. I rose to address the Senate in favor of the bill. I wish to say that I can complete my remarks within two hours, but if there is to be an immediate vote, if nobody else wishes to speak, I will waive them and not speak at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to strike out section 3.

Mr. ALDRICH. I interpose an objection to the consideration of this bill, supposing there will be further discussion.

Mr. MORRILL. I supposed this bill was before us informally, with the understanding distinctly with the Senator from Kentucky that it was to give rise to no debate, and when it was taken up it was taken up on the condition that it should not occupy more than fifteen minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand this bill was taken up by unanimous consent. If that be true, it is now before the Senate and is the regular order, and it can be disposed of only by a regular motion carried by a majority of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was taken up by unanimous consent with the understanding that if the discussion was to last over fifteen minutes objection might be interposed.

Mr. HOAR. Another bill was laid aside informally for it.

Mr. HARRIS. I am aware of no such understanding as is suggested. The Chair perhaps will know, if the present occupant of the chair was the occupant when the bill was taken up. If the bill was taken up and proceeded with and acted upon by unanimous consent a single objection cannot displace it or dispose of it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to interfere with this bill, because my sympathies are with my friend from Kentucky entirely, but I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee when a measure is taken up and then laid aside informally that another matter may be considered, does he understand that this displaces the matter so laid aside informally?

Mr. HARRIS. So far as to-day is concerned, unquestionably, unless a majority of the Senate shall order otherwise. It would be the duty of the Chair on to-morrow morning, after the routine business of the morning hour was through with, to lay the unfinished business, that measure that was regularly taken up, before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I differ with the Senator from Tennessee in toto. When I have given my assent to such an arrangement I always understand that the measure so taken up temporarily is at the mercy of the right of any Senator to demand the regular order. That has been the understanding of the Senate ever since I have been here.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope that will not be done. We can take a vote on the bill just as soon as we can to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves to lay the bill on the table.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 21; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the motion will be withdrawn and that the Senator from Rhode Island will move to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table and move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn, and the Senator from Rhode Island moves to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am satisfied to make it the special order for to-morrow at two o'clock.

Mr. ALDRICH. I modify my motion according to the wishes of the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the motion now?

Mr. ALDRICH. To postpone the further consideration of the bill until two o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On the suggestion of my friends I agree to the postponement.

Mr. SHERMAN. If we cannot rely on common understandings made in the Senate of the United States on taking up a bill we lose a great safeguard in conducting business. By the vote of the Senate and by unanimous consent the tax bill was taken up—taken up to be considered; and the Senator from Kentucky appealed to the Senator from Vermont to give way for the passage of a bill that he said would excite no objection. There was opposition here to that, and finally he said it would take but a few minutes, and the Senator from Rhode Island then said that if it did not take more than fifteen minutes he would agree that it should be taken up informally. In that situation it was subject to objection at the end of fifteen minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Ohio would state the facts correctly, which I know he intends to do—

Mr. SHERMAN. State them yourself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Vermont and myself had a conversation early this morning on the subject, and I told him I would vote to take up his bill, but I wanted to get my cattle bill in, and I would antagonize it against his bill. He then agreed if I would help him take up his bill that after it was taken up he would informally pass it over for the purpose of considering mine.

Mr. MORRILL. On condition that it would lead to no debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then when his bill came up I went over to him and said, "I have helped you in taking it up; now let it go over informally and let me take up my bill and have a vote on it." He agreed to it. I really did not expect there would be a single opposing vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me go on. Every Senator on this side of the House understood that by general consent the bill was to be allowed to be taken up for a few moments to be tried. At that time the Senate did not know what was in the bill, and it was taken up on the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky that it would not exceed five minutes. The Senator from Rhode Island then said if it would not take more than fifteen minutes he was willing it should be taken up informally, and that was the understanding on this side of the Senate, and I think it was the understanding on all sides of the Senate, that it was to be taken up informally, subject to a call for the regular order at any time after fifteen minutes.

That is all I desire to say. At this period of the session, when understandings are made not by formal vote but by conversation among Senators in open Senate, we ought to stand by them; otherwise it will lead to controversies and difficulties on every bill that comes up. I hope the Senate will stand by the common understanding at the time this bill was taken up. I have no objection to the bill of the Senator from Kentucky, and perhaps shall vote for it, although I am not yet prepared to vote, but I think he will gain time and gain friends for his bill if he will let it go over and call it up to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not understand that there was any agreement about the thing at all among the whole Senate. It was done between the Senator from Vermont and myself. We had a talk about it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I made objection, and I was not bound by any agreement between the two Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I had no conversation with the Senator from Rhode Island on the subject and no agreement with him, and did not know him in the transaction.

Mr. ALDRICH. But I made objection and withdrew it conditionally, on the condition that the bill should not occupy over fifteen minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not hear that. With whom did you make it?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Chair and the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That might be the Senator's opinion and view about it; but it is the first I ever heard of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves to postpone the further consideration of this bill until two o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALDRICH called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That means the defeat of the bill. I understand that perfectly; and I hope the Senate will not postpone it.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAPHAM, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] I do not know how he would vote. I should vote "nay."

Mr. VANCE, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MITCHELL.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—27.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 5380) supplementary to an act approved December 17, 1872, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Ohio River and to prescribe the dimensions of the same;

A bill (H. R. No. 5740) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) to provide for the printing of certain public documents for the use of the two Houses of Congress; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 288) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution to provide temporarily for expenditures of the Government.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask consent to make a report from a committee of conference on the legislative appropriation bill, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Acting Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6244) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 339, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, and 337, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the entire section insert the following:

"SEC. 6. That so much of the funds appropriated by this act for the contingent expenses of the Surgeon-General's and the Adjutant-General's Offices respectively as are or may be necessary to provide stationery, blank books, furniture, and other articles for the use of the clerks and others engaged in those offices on work relating to the settlement of applications for pensions may be used, all or in part, under the orders of the Secretary of War, in either of said offices, as in his judgment the best interests of the service may require. The fourth story and attic of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy building, except such portion as is now within the library of the State Department, are assigned to the War Department for such uses of the Department as in the judgment of the Secretary of War they may be best fitted for; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, to enable the Department to remove from said fourth story and attic the records, documents, and papers now stored there and to rearrange them in other rooms in said Department. That the partition-wall separating the corridors of the first, second, third, and fourth stories of the east wing from the said stories of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy building shall be removed, so as to afford easy access from one wing to the other on the aforementioned floors of said building: Provided, That a joint select committee of three members of the House of Representatives and three Senators, to be appointed respectively by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate upon the passage of this act, shall, on or before the completion of the north wing of the State, War, and Navy building, make examination of said building and set apart such portions thereof for the use and occupancy of the State, War, and Navy Departments respectively as in their judgment the best interests of the public service and the needs of said Departments respectively may require, and upon filing an agreed statement of such partition by said joint select committee in triplicate with the respective Secretaries of such Departments the building shall be occupied as therein provided as soon thereafter as practicable."

And the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
H. G. DAVIS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. G. CANNON,
FRANK HISCOCK,
JNO. D. C. ATKINS,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was agreed to several days ago with the exception of the sixth section, which provided, first, for the transfer of the records of the Surgeon-General's Office to the office of the Adjutant-General in case the Secretary of War should, after examination, find it wise to do so. It also provided as it came from the House that the fourth story and the attic of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy building should be used by the War Department for records of the Department and for clerks in connection with those records. The Senate amended the last provision by leaving the question to the President.

The present provision strikes out all of section 6, and inserts what has been read from the Secretary's desk, which in brief means that the fourth story and the attic of the south wing of the State, War, and Navy building shall be placed in the custody of the Secretary of War, to be used by him according to his own judgment without specifying to what use these two stories shall be applied. It also provides that the contingent fund appropriated in this bill separately for the Adjutant-General's Office and the Surgeon-General's Office may be consolidated in whole or in part and used for either of those offices in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and then finally proposes a joint select committee of the two Houses, to consist of three members of the Senate and three of the House, who shall at a future time, when the north wing of the building is completed, make examination and direct how the whole building shall be used.

That is in substance the provision as agreed upon. I will say that the Senate committee of conference made personal examination of the fourth story of the south wing and the attic, and we became satisfied that these two stories were utterly and absolutely useless for any purposes of clerical force, and in our judgment they are equally useless for any records that require constant examination, but we were willing (and therefore yielded the point to that extent) that the Secretary of War might take these stories and make such use of them as in his judgment would be wise after examination. They are useless because they are not lighted or ventilated and are not habitable. The State Department library, beginning with the third story, runs right to the roof, taking out the best portion of the center of the building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ANTHONY. Did I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that the partition wall in every story of that building is to be opened between the War and Navy Departments and the State Department?

Mr. ALLISON. The first, second, third, and fourth floors.

Mr. ANTHONY. That takes about the whole of it.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not take the lower floor. The committee saw no objection to that.

Mr. ANTHONY. Did not the State Department object?

Mr. ALLISON. We heard no objection from the Secretary of State.

Mr. ANTHONY. I know it was proposed in the time of Mr. Fish and he was very much opposed to it, and I thought for very good reasons.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it may possibly give the State Department some inconvenience, but it will be a great convenience to those who have business with these Departments to pass from one to the other.

Mr. LOGAN. I think it is a very proper thing to do.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will add to what my colleague on the committee has said that it was evidently necessary that there should be a passage between the different Departments. As things now exist I understand you have to go down stairs, go out doors, and then go up again, if you want to go from the War or Navy Department to the State Department. It was believed by the committee that it was proper to make a communication inside of the building somewhere, so that a person can go from one of these Departments to the other.

Now, one word about the use of the building. As my colleague on the committee has well said, it was believed by the committee that there might be some rooms that could be utilized for some purpose, not perhaps for clerks, but for whatever the Secretary of War believed was necessary. It was evident that there was more room than the State Department wanted to use, and the War Department had but little, and it was supposed by your committee that it would be a convenience and perhaps a saving to adopt the measure as reported by the conference.

Mr. DAWES. The meaning of this report is to give to the War Department those two upper stories to use as the Secretary of War pleases, and to give him interchangeably the contingent fund of the Surgeon-General's Office and the Adjutant-General's Office, that he may, if he chooses, consolidate those two bureaus and transfer the clerks and records of one to the other, if he chooses. The difference between this report in substance and in effect and the bill as it came from the House is that the responsibility for making this transfer, if it is made, rests upon the Secretary of War now. Before it was taken off his shoulders by the legislative department. That in substance is the effect of this measure. I desire to say a word or two about the rooms which are by this agreement assigned to the Secretary of War for the purpose of putting clerks into them to do this work.

Personally I would rather be sent to the house of correction, if it is any such place here in this District as they have in Massachusetts. There is a fourth story with two or three large rooms without any windows in them at all. There is on the opposite side of the corridor a large room with one window in it, and the window-sill is a foot above my head. There is alongside of it another room, three times as long as it is wide, with three such windows in it. Then comes the library dome up through, and on the other side are corresponding rooms. The attic which is assigned to him is during the summer season at fever heat, as I am told, as a general thing. Yesterday morning I found it so intensely hot that I could not hold my hand upon the iron roof which comes down on one side within three or four feet of the floor and on the other just above my head, with glass above to light it and with every facility of lenses to kindle whatever may be combustible inside.

These are the rooms which are assigned if the Secretary of War shall deem it wise to consolidate these bureaus. These are the rooms assigned to the clerks and their files who are to facilitate and hasten the completion of the pension work of the Pension Bureau. It is due to the achievement of this grand result of the fourth committee of conference that the Senate should be apprised of what it is. I signed the report and I am exceedingly proud of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the regular order.

Mr. SLATER. I ask to call up—

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot give way to any other business.

Mr. SLATER. I wish to call up a privileged report.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to make a conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a privileged question.

Mr. SLATER. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. DAWES. The conference report of the Senator from Oregon is not privileged at this moment. If it is, I withdraw mine.

Mr. SLATER. Certainly it is privileged.

Mr. DAWES. I do not care to put my report in the way of the report of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SLATER. I ask to call up the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill No. 126, to reimburse the Creek orphan fund, made yesterday.

Mr. HOAR. That report has been made so that the privilege is exhausted. The question was put on taking it up yesterday, and the Senate said no.

Mr. SLATER. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken about that. There was an arrangement whereby it was to be printed, and I was to call it up to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the presentation of a conference report is a privileged question; but whether the Senate will consider it or not is for the Senate to decide. The Senator from Oregon now moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report named by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope, as that is a comparatively small matter, we shall go on with the tax bill and see whether we cannot conclude it.

Mr. SLATER. This is not a small matter. The Senate spent a great deal of time and both Houses have spent a great deal of time on it, and it is but fair that it should be disposed of. I think it was fairly understood yesterday that it should be called up to-day. I so understood myself, and I think that was the general understanding.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know it will lead to debate, and I hope the Senate will not take it up.

Mr. SLATER. I insist on my motion to proceed to the consideration of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will not be in order unless the regular order, being the tax bill, be postponed.

Mr. SLATER. I understand that this is a privileged report made formally yesterday for the purpose of being printed that it might be called up to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion, as he has already stated, that the presentation of it is privileged; but whether the Senate will proceed to consider it or not is not a privileged question.

Mr. SLATER. I hope the Senator will not insist on going through the formality of laying aside another bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I must insist on the regular order because the greater part of the day has already been spent in the various subjects that have been up for discussion. I am satisfied this will take the remainder of the day. Therefore, I must insist on the regular order, the consideration of the tax bill.

Mr. COKE. The report was laid aside yesterday at the request of the Senator from Iowa who had charge of the sundry-civil bill, and I supposed there was a tacit understanding that the report of the Senator from Oregon was to be taken up this morning. I think it was so mentioned at the time.

Mr. SLATER. It certainly was mentioned. It was agreed that, in order to have the Senate understand the report, it should be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. A motion will have to be made to postpone the pending order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read Rule 49.

The Acting Secretary read as follows:

49. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except while the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and, when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report shall immediately be put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. SLATER. No such motion was put yesterday, and it was suggested that the report be printed and called up to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was received, but the question of proceeding to its consideration was not taken. The Chair thinks the Senator from Oregon has a right to have that question determined now.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly; and I hope the Senate will vote against the consideration of that subject now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule requires that the question shall be put and decided without debate. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the conference report presented by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have called for the yeas and nays so that gentlemen on the other side may disclose their position on the tax bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Of course this is a hostile vote.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is not a fair remark. Conference reports have precedence in all legislative bodies.

The Principal Legislative Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.]

Mr. LAPHAM, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I voted, forgetting that I was paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JACKSON.] I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 26; as follows:

| YEAS—25. | | | |
|--------------------|-------------------|-----------------|-----------|
| Bayard. | Farley. | Ingalls. | Vest. |

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 2171) to remove the political disabilities of Frank C. Armstrong, of Maryland.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1226) to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts;

A bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works;

A bill (H. R. No. 4926) for the relief of Charles Kortzenborn; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5653) for the relief of Kirk W. Noyes.

INTERNAL REVENUE AND TARIFF DUTIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5538) to reduce internal-revenue taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, if I can get the ear of the Senate I wish to make a proposition.

It is now quite clear that unless both sides of the Chamber can reach some conclusion unanimously, or nearly so, no general reduction of taxes can take place at this session. I therefore regard it as of very prime importance that we should reach some conclusion by which a considerable reduction in the revenue may take place, and I propose for the consideration of the Senate that we shall take the bill as it came to us from the House, with the amendments as to the time of its going into operation, abandon the subject of the tariff, and include the reduction of the duties on snuff and tobacco from 16 cents to 12, and also include the proposition made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] for a rebate of the tax on tobacco that shall remain in the hands of manufacturers and dealers when the reduction takes effect.

If there can be an agreement to take the bill in that form, if it is any more acceptable than it would be as it now stands, I hope that there may not be a further attempt to amend it except in the direction which I have indicated. It is also very clear that there is not time to go through with the discussion upon thirty-five or forty and perhaps more amendments to the tariff; and if those motions shall be made I shall regard them as an evidence of a determination to consume the time of the Senate without making these reductions as proposed. If Senators are determined to offer these amendments and to discuss them, of course the whole remaining time of the session will be consumed in such discussion and by such amendments.

I therefore make the proposition in good faith that we shall retire from the amendments in relation to the tariff, take the bill as it came to us from the House, with the changes made in the Senate as to the time of its going into operation, and also include a reduction of the taxes on snuff and tobacco, and include also the refunding proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont surely forgets that he has had certain advantages in connection with this subject which he and his party associates denied to Senators on this side of the Chamber. We have not received the aid, Senators, of the reasons, the arguments, the persuasions, and influences that your party caucus has afforded you. This matter is not new to you, but your present proposition is most new to us. You bring it in in the very last hours of the session, heralded by a resolution to adjourn sine die, when information cannot be obtained, when facts cannot be here stated and arrayed for or against your reasons. Why have you waited for eight long months? Why was not this done before? There has been no argument so freely and constantly urged, and, in my judgment, so justly urged as against picking the tariff and internal-revenue systems to pieces, dealing with them piecemeal. I agreed with you when you said that; I echoed your exhortations against such a policy, and I do so now. The very complexity of the business of this vast country, the intimate and dependent relations of all branches of trade and manufacture to each other make it impossible, in my judgment, to deal with this subject intelligently and justly without considering the system as a whole; and you have had, I will not say how long before this session, but you have had the whole of this session since last December and you wait until this hot month of August, within twenty-four or thirty-six hours of the time fixed by your House resolution for adjournment, and then for the first time submit to us the action of your party caucus! and ask us to accept it without debate or even an opportunity for decent consideration!

What reasons have compelled you to that I know not, because I was never a member and am not likely to be of that secret and select assembly of your party; but the fact is that we are now called upon to legislate in connection with the great and important subject of a general reduction of taxation. We all remember when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] rose in solemnity and with tears in his voice about a month ago told us it would be a crime to adjourn this session without reducing the burdens of taxation. We said we thought so, and that we would heartily join you at once in that most desirable object.

This measure from the House was brought over here July 6, on the heels of a resolution to adjourn sine die on the 10th of July. We were made then acquainted with the fact that under the name of a general reduction of taxes it was proposed to relieve a certain class of stamp taxes and the tax on bank capital and deposits and nothing more, and that was to be the great relief so loudly proclaimed and that was the great burden so generously to be taken from the shoulders of suffering American industry. A measure to take the tax off bank deposits had long ago emanated from this side of the Chamber and had been passed without a division. You did not originate that relief but consented to it.

But naturally the measure of relief proposed by the House was considered too absurdly inadequate, too ridiculously petty and parsimonious, to satisfy the public demand for a real reduction of taxation, and therefore it was submitted to your secret party councils, from which it emerged with certain carefully drawn tariff amendments.

You had resolved to confide the question of general tariff reform to a commission, now in session; but notwithstanding that, for one cause or another, you caused the House bill to be amended upon the motion of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] and sent pro forma to the Committee on Finance, who reported it, after a recommitment for the purpose, on July 12, in the precise shape in which the caucus had decreed it.

Why you decided to add the tariff sections I am not permitted to know, but it effectively prevented the separate consideration of the House proposition, which was confined to the bank and stamp taxes, and brought naturally the whole tariff question before the Senate, and threw upon us the responsibility of dealing with it. Now, it seems, you have changed your tactics, and propose to reconsider your decision, and to take from your bill all its features relating to tariff taxes. Possibly some speeches made on this side of the Chamber may have induced you to this.

Your bill was strangely misnamed if it was intended to reduce tariff taxation. The tax on Bessemer steel was reduced $8 per ton, leaving $20 per ton and a higher proportionate duty ad valorem than when it was first imposed; but the duty on iron cotton-ties, an article so essential to cotton culture, was to be doubled, and you cannot well term that a reduction of the tariff.

Whether the proposed change in the sugar tariff was a real and substantial reduction I am yet in doubt. It reduced the present ad valorem tariff 25 per cent., but by the employment of the polariscope wholly changed the mode of assessing duties and certainly added to them on the lower grades of sugar. The Senator from Ohio contended it would not raise the tax very much, but his statements were not assented to by many of the most reliable witnesses, who were dealers and importers of sugar.

I say to you we do not propose to accept your caucus measures in this hasty way without the freest right to debate them and to amend them, and we should be false to our duty if we did. There is no greater public question before this country, and none in regard to which the American people have yet to prepare themselves with care and deliberation than the exercise of this vital power of taxation, to readjust the provisions and burdens of a tariff so utterly out of date, so unequal, so unreasonable, so prohibitory of trade, so full of errors and defects, that to-day we were told by the Senator from Connecticut if it were not amended in a single particular relating to knitted goods it would be an act of cruelty likened by him unto the floods of the Mississippi overflowing and destroying a vast region of industry—a rather extravagant simile, but one nevertheless pronounced with much earnestness and rigor of gesticulation and emphasis.

Yet it seems that upon reflection you propose to let all that go by, you propose suddenly to abandon all tariff reforms, you propose to ignore the labors of your own councils, for an entire session to lay the tariff aside absolutely, let it go and take up this poor little shamed apology for a bill to reduce taxation arranged by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House and sent over here as a sort of tub to the popular whale. Gentlemen, we are not prepared, on the day before that you have fixed for an adjournment sine die, according to the resolution of the House we have just heard, and which lies upon our table, to accept such propositions or to deal in this way with grave public interests. We have been waiting long and patiently, and even now are ready to go into debate and assist in the preparation of proper measures to relieve our people from the burdens of unwise and unnecessary taxation.

We have not embarrassed nor obstructed you in the control and consideration of this most important question, and we are prepared to submit the record of our action to popular judgment, which shall also declare whether you have dealt with such a subject as you should have done, and what measure of credit or discredit is due to you for the manner in which you have exercised your control over interests so important.

We are ready to stay here and consider this bill just so long as your majority shall decide, but you cannot avoid your proper responsibility for the manner in which you have controlled public business.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, allow me to correct, in the first place, an error into which the Senator from Delaware has fallen in regard to the source from which this proposition comes. There has been no caucus so far as I know, and the Senator, therefore, rushes too rapidly in the argument when he assumes that there has been a caucus. This proposition made by the Senator from Vermont is made after full consideration by himself and others connected with this bill. There has been no caucus and no general consideration of the subject.

Now, Mr. President, we have a surplus revenue; we have large, excessive taxation. The House of Representatives, which can alone originate a proposition to throw off taxes, sent us a bill confined to about $26,000,000 of internal-revenue taxation. When that bill came here, I am free to speak my own opinion. It was that we ought to take up that bill and pass it substantially as the House sent it to us, because it was a substantial, real relief to different branches of industries pursued by the people of the United States. But that bill was met at once with a sign of hostility so remarkable that it led to a reconsideration of that question.

When the bill was first considered by the Committee on Finance no amendment was proposed to it except to change the phraseology of the House bill so that instead of taking effect immediately the different sections were postponed to take effect at different dates. Nor did the Committee on Finance propose, when they considered the bill, any changes in the law except those which related to the details of the bill. The Committee on Finance proposed to add to that bill no single item of taxation, and the amendments that were proposed by the Committee on Finance were made without division and by general consent.

Mr. BAYARD. May I say one word?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. If the honorable Senator is here describing what passed in the committee, I must say frankly that I differ with him and I am prepared to state the points of difference in fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot argue on what occurred in committee, but as to what was reported by the committee I can say—

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator is referring to what occurred in committee, and I merely say I disagree with him as to the facts.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I come to a matter of fact that we can discuss. I say the amendments reported by the committee introduced no new topics of discussion.

Mr. BAYARD. Because the caucus forbade it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me get through. I do not pretend to say, nor is the Senator at liberty to say, how many amendments were offered by different persons—by him and his colleagues—to this bill; that I am not at liberty to state. Sufficient to say that the bill was reported back to the Senate with amendments, all of which were concurred in by both sides of the Chamber, I may say, and the action of the committee is now before the Senate. It simply proposed to postpone the taking effect of the repeal for three or four months, in order to meet the necessities of the trade, the match men and others who appeared before us.

Thus it stood when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] notably and many other Senators felt themselves at liberty on this bill to reduce internal-revenue taxation to introduce all sorts of propositions, some of which we believed were vitally destructive to the industrial interests of this great country. Sir, if one of those amendments had passed to make a gradual cutting off by a horizontal slope of the grades of taxation, it would have been utter ruin to great branches of industry in this country, 10 per cent. this year, 10 per cent. next year, upon a tariff that is admitted now to be by the changes of time unequal, and yet those inequalities were to be preserved.

There were thirty-five amendments offered to this bill, most of them relating to external taxes or tariff duties. Then it was, when the manifest purpose of that side of the Chamber was to thrust the tariff question into this bill, that this side did consider whether or not the circumstances of the country justified us in going beyond those measures of reduction which the House had proposed, and the Republicans, you may say in caucus or in conference, whichever you please to call it, did think it wiser and better to remove certain inequalities and incongruities in the present tariff and also to reduce the duty on sugar and on Bessemer-steel rails. It is said that some of these measures tended to raise the tariff; perhaps they did; they tended to equalize the tariff.

There was the tax on cotton-ties, which was far below the other taxes on hoop-iron. It was proposed to make the same duty on cotton-ties, to put on the finished manufactured articles the same rate per pound as was imposed on the raw article from which it was made. Otherwise there would grow up a discrimination against our native industry. So also as to some other amendments that were offered.

In regard to the polariscope on sugar, that was simply to continue the tests that had been adopted by the Treasury Department to avoid fraud; plain, palpable, and undisputed fraud. That was proposed also. The Republican Senators further proposed, you may say as a party, to extend the relief to be granted to the people of the United States from taxes to the amount of about $36,000,000 by throwing off about $9,000,000 of the duty on sugar. Why was sugar selected? That has been sufficiently explained. It was to bring the tax on sugar down to the same relation that it bore to other taxes when the Revised Statutes were enacted. The 25 per cent. additional duty on sugar was put on for a special purpose. It was proposed to repeal that special tax and reduce the tax on sugar to the rates that had been fixed by the Revised Statutes, and which was satisfactory to the trade in Louisiana and everywhere else.

There was the proposition of the Republicans to meet the revolutionary amendments proposed on the other side of the House. Those amendments were based upon the idea that the House proposition was too small, only $26,000,000, therefore they would "go better," as somebody said. They were going to propose a general reduction of the tariff, a reduction of the tax on whisky, and a reduction of the tax on tobacco. We met the proposals submitted by different members on that side of the House in thirty-five different amendments by the proposition to reduce the tax on sugar, and to remove certain incongruities and irregularities in the present code. We were defeated in that. We were defeated by the plausible proposition of the Senator from Kentucky, supported by one or two Republicans, that tobacco and the tobacco growers and the tobacco interests were terribly oppressed by taxation and therefore they must have relief. The other little taxes that had been rather in contravention of the general principle of internal-tax laws should not be repealed until tobacco was relieved!

Mr. BUTLER. Not interrupting the Senator—

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope not. It interrupts me very much.

Mr. BUTLER. I merely—

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot decline to yield.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator upon whose proposition it was that the regulation in reference to the polariscope went out of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already stated that as a part of the proposition made by the Republicans.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely; but upon whose proposition did it go out of the bill? Was it not on the motion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HALE?]? Did not the Senator from Maine make the suggestion to strike out the regulation in reference to the polariscope?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not speak of that now. Certainly he did make that motion; but the trouble was caused by the amendment in regard to tobacco. The Senator from Kentucky desired to reduce the tobacco tax to the amount of $6,000,000 by its reduction to 12 cents a pound. If that was done that was about the amount or a little less than the amount we proposed to reduce the tax on sugar, and it compelled us necessarily to reconsider our position. But, sir, the whole debate on that side of the House was conducted apparently—I do not say with a view, because I am not a judge of the motives of men—with the effect of defeating any reduction of taxation, either internal or external, because it was manifest at this period of the session, with a House reduced almost to a quorum, with the appropriation bills pressing upon us, some of them not yet acted upon, that if these amendments were to be persisted in, if these tactics of delay were to succeed, then there was an end to all hope of the reduction of taxation.

Well, sir, they continued, and that policy continued for about ten days, until finally the Senate was compelled to give way to the appropriation bills in order that the House might not disperse and that they might have some business to go on with. That was the condition of affairs. Sir, if the provisions that have been proposed to reduce taxation are defeated the responsibility will lie at the door of that side of the Chamber, because but for this apparent intention to load down this little tax bill, as they called it, with all sorts of incongruous amendments there would have been no proposition before the Senate except the proposition to repeal those exceptional internal-revenue taxes; but when it was manifest that they intended to press a greater reduction of taxes than we thought safe, then it was that we introduced the proposition to reduce the duty on sugar. That was practically defeated by the proposition to reduce the tax on tobacco, and so the case stood.

The Senator from Vermont who has charge of this bill, in view of the palpable delays that have occurred, in view of the certainty that you have the power to delay action on this bill—no man here denies that you have the power to defeat the bill if you will—in order to come back to the simple proposition upon which we hoped you would unite with us, has proposed to accept the action of the Senate, to take the taxes that are proposed to be repealed by two-thirds or three-fourths of the House of Representatives, to confine our action to those and accept the action of the Senate thus far on the tobacco tax and on the proposition to give a rebate, and there stand and vote for that reduction. But the Senator from Delaware declines the proposition. He says there shall be no relief until this whole subject is gone through; he says they will take up these propositions and discuss them. Well, sir, the inevitable result of that is to defeat the bill. There is enough debate to consume till winter in the proposition for the horizontal reduction of the tariff in two successive periods, cutting off the tail of the dog twice to bring about relief, I suppose, disturbing all the industrial interests of the country. There is enough debate on this proposition, that it seems will be pressed upon us, to keep us here until next winter, and then nothing will be accomplished.

We acknowledge the power of the minority here, almost our equal, because whether there is a majority of the Senate is a question always of doubt and uncertainty. We acknowledge their power; we pay obeisance to it; we respect their power; and now, sir, when we cannot do what we want, we come in and say in behalf of the people of the United States, let us at least agree to reduce these taxes that all concur in reducing to the amount of $26,000,000; let us also give relief to tobacco and tobacco growers and tobacco chewers; let us throw off six or seven million dollars of other taxes; let us refund to the dealers the tax they have paid on that which they are not able to sell before the time the law takes effect. At least the people of the United States will in this way have the benefit of a reduction of taxes to the amount of $35,000,000, and there is no great political victory in it. The Senator from Kentucky and that side of the House may take their reduction on tobacco as their proportion of the bill.

We proposed to repeal all these small taxes; but how was that met? It was met by the assertion that we were taking off bank taxes. Why, sir, they were the only taxes left of the internal revenue, except on whisky, tobacco, and beer. We took a general rule, to repeal the match tax, the tax on proprietary articles, the tax on bank checks, the tax on bank deposits in private banks, State banks, and national banks, thus relieving the internal revenue of all incongruous elements, stripping it and confining it to three leading articles, which by common consent in all nations are regarded as proper subjects of taxation.

I was in hopes my friend from Delaware, whose generally impartial mind leads him to accept a fair proposition, would accept this, and that we might this very afternoon agree upon a bill that would contain substantial reductions of taxation, give substantial relief to the people, and not the work of either party but of both parties, and thus save longer delay and procrastination.

Why, sir, we know by the experience of this morning how difficult it is to get continued action on this tax bill. The report of a committee of conference, the pressing of the House, the pressing of events, the anxiety to get away, all these are aids to that side of the House in their policy of delay and procrastination. We yield to them, but I hope our powerful friends on the other side, when we come here and confess our inability to accomplish this result in the face of their continued opposition, will, when we confess that fact, at least agree that certain of these taxes shall be repealed. If they will not agree to all we propose, let us repeal all which they agree to repeal.

Sir, we make this proposition now to repeal taxes that they have concurred in repealing. When they had a majority in both Houses they proposed at the last Congress such a measure. A kindred proposition was introduced by a distinguished gentleman of the House of Representatives in the last Congress from the State of Kentucky. A kindred proposition was proposed here by the Senator from Kentucky in his place in the Senate. Now, when we propose to take these taxes and wipe them out, and even to join with him in giving relief to tobacco, it seems to me we make a fair proposition which he ought to accept instead of rejecting. If, on the other hand, we must go into a long, prolonged debate over these various propositions, and all these amendments must come up again, and we must discuss them pro and con., then as a matter of course the effect of the conduct of the Senators on that side of the House is to defeat the bill, and we shall have to go back and make the best report we can to our constituents, that although the Treasury is overflowing with money, although we have sought in every way to spend money, spent $20,000,000 for various classes of internal improvements, passed a sundry civil bill amounting to twenty-three or twenty-four millions, yet, with all these boundless expenditures, we have still ample room and verge enough to reduce taxation, but we cannot do it because we cannot get a majority of the Senate to act with us in any scheme for the reduction of taxation.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has made a very remarkable speech, and either he or I misunderstand the facts very much. I agree to all the Senator from Delaware said and said so well in regard to the proposition just made, and have only a word to add in that regard.

The Senator from Ohio spoke of what the object now seemed to be, I have no charges to make against men's motives or intentions; but I think we now see an effort to get the bill out of the Senate altogether in the easiest possible way, and to give the least possible relief.

Finding that if it was continued in the Senate a reduction would be made of 10 per cent. on the tariff, perhaps an amendment adopted that nothing should bear a tariff duty over 50 per cent. ad valorem, perhaps a reduction on Bessemer steel to $14, being still 65 or 75 per cent. of the value of the article, and with the chance of numerous other reductions being made, and taking alarm at the probabilities of the situation, these gentlemen now very adroitly propose to withdraw tariff taxation altogether and to pass the little bill that came from the House with some little amendments and send it back.

What is the meaning of that? I do not speak of the purpose, but what is the meaning of it? To get the question of taxation out of the Senate and make it impossible for the Senate to interfere with the privileges and the monopolies that now exist. These Senators know well that all revenue bills must originate in the House of Representatives, that the Senate cannot consider any such measure that does not come from the House of Representatives, and if they can at once get this bill out of the Senate they will take care that the distinguished gentleman at the head of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House will not make the blunder again of sending over any tax or tariff bill that we can consider at all, and they are more anxious to get the subject away from us for fear we shall do some harm than they are for anything else. Hence the proposition, and if it is agreed to the Senate will never during this Congress see another tax bill that it can touch.

Senators may as well understand that on both sides of the Chamber; and it is because we have for the first time, long delayed as it was, a bill that we can consider; that we have offered measures giving substantial relief to the people, and we do not propose to swap off the rights we have and the rights that our people have even for the sake of a little reduction on tobacco, so that Senators who want to keep up a protective tariff can get it out of our hands and then go and tell the gentlemen of the other House, "for God's sake do not send us anything more here, for these Democrats in the Senate will reduce your Bessemer steel, will reduce your tariff taxation, will make a fight against your protection; we have fooled them once and got the bill out of their hands; do not trust them any more." That is the proposition. That is the effect of it.

The Senator from Ohio undertook to state that this little bill had been discussed in committee, and that no amendments had been offered to it. That is not the fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not say that at all.

Mr. BECK. What did the Senator say? He sought to make the impression on the country that this bill came from the Finance Committee with the consent of that committee without opposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said that all the amendments that were reported to the Senate were amendments concurred in generally. I did not say no amendments had been offered. I knew better.

Mr. BECK. I want the country to know if they understood from the Senator's statement that that was the fact, that it was not the fact, and that I moved to amend the bill on all questions bearing on internal taxation and confined it to internal taxation. I have the amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I am at liberty to speak on a subject of that kind I will say that the Senator from Kentucky was as industrious in committee as he has been in the Senate since, and as fruitful in amendments.

Mr. BECK. That removes therefore any impression that might have been taken up through the country outside of this Chamber by the former remarks of the Senator in regard to what took place in committee. There was an honest, earnest effort made there to reduce taxation upon tobacco and upon distilled spirits, for the extension of the time in bond, and for full consideration of all the questions relating to the internal revenue; and I have the amendments here in my hand to show that that is true. But it is now admitted, and therefore it is not necessary to prove what the admission concedes.

Then the charge that we sought to embarrass the bill by tariff amendments is equally untrue. No tariff amendment was suggested by any member of the Finance Committee. The bill was limited to internal revenue and to the questions then pending in the committee. What happened? They reported their bill after voting down our amendments, on the 6th day of July, 1882. Look at the bill on the table reported by the Senator from Vermont "with amendments." What happened? The Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] on the very next day, before any Democrat had offered an amendment looking to tariff relief, introduced the following amendment:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. PLUMB to the bill (H. R. No. 5338) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, namely: insert the following:

"That the increase of 25 per cent. on the impost duty levied on all molasses, concentrated molasses, tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar, cane-juice, melada, and on sugars, according to the Dutch standard in color, imported from foreign countries, imposed by section 3 of the act of March 3, 1875, being chapter 127, statutes of 1875, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the duty on said articles hereafter imported into the United States from foreign countries be, and is hereby, restored to the rate prevailing before the passage of said last-mentioned act: Provided, That the classification established in the succeeding portion of said section shall not be affected hereby."

That was the amendment of the Republican Senator from Kansas offered on the 7th day of July, the very day after this bill was reported by the Committee on Finance. What happened then? Not another amendment relative to the tariff had been offered up to that time, nor for a day or two afterward. What then happened? The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Ohio, knowing that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas would necessarily call for other amendments looking to tariff taxation as well as internal-revenue taxation, called their party together in caucus.

They did not dare to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, but they wanted their polariscope, their machinery, inserted in it, and they met in caucus, and on the 12th day of July the bill was recommitted, and on the 12th day of July, as the RECORD will show, in less than a minute it was reported back without sending it to the committee-room, giving us no chance to look at it, and then the sugar amendment was inserted in it.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Kentucky means to be accurate.

Mr. BECK. I do, and I am a good deal more accurate than the Senator from Ohio, I hope.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment proposed by me was referred to the committee and acted on before it was brought here into the Senate.

Mr. BECK. The committee was considering it all the time, meeting two or three times a week.

Mr. MORRILL. But this identical amendment was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. It was.

Mr. MORRILL. And considered there and reported, I think at the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, before action was taken as proposed in the Senate.

Mr. BECK. Was not the bill recommitted to the Committee on Finance and reported back in less than three minutes? That is what I said. Is not that true? I want an answer to that. I can bring the RECORD to prove it to be true.

Mr. MORRILL. It was done at the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, in order to have the whole bill in proper form in one print.

Mr. BECK. I do not care at whose suggestion it was done. Was it not done by order of the Republican caucus that met the night before?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; the Republican caucus never considered the question as to reporting the bill at all.

Mr. BECK. Why was it brought in the next morning after the caucus met?

Mr. DAWES. Why should it not be?

Mr. BECK. It ought to have been. You ought to obey orders. The only wise thing in your bill was the amendment of the Senator from Kansas that opened the question and, as I have said more than once, made the miserable little bill respectable and gave jurisdiction to the Senate over all the questions of tariff taxation and enlarged it to an extent that enabled us to look into all those questions. But the caucus when it did meet, and the committee when the bill was recommitted and reported back instantly, not content with repealing that section of the act of 1875 relative to sugar and the reduction of 25 per cent., went into the polariscope as well, providing:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause proper Dutch standards of sugar to be furnished for use in the collection of duties on sugar, and to declare by regulation the true saccharine strength which shall be equivalent to each number of such standard. And in any case where the strength of the imported sugar is, in proportion to its color, above the proper strength for that color by the Dutch standard, duties shall be charged according to the strength, and not according to the color.

And then they added another section, on the 12th day of July, reducing the duty on Bessemer steel from $28 to $20 a ton and increasing the duty on cotton-ties from 35 per cent. ad valorem up to 75 per cent.

What was the meaning of all that, and where is the justification for the charge now being made that we are delaying and protracting? I am not prepared to say that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas was mutilated by a pet measure of the Senator from Ohio, but the Supreme Court and he were at issue on that point for a good while, and the country did not make much by the action he took in regard to it. I think several millions had to be refunded.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Kentucky give way for another correction?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Kentucky stated that the Senator from Kansas proposed the first amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BECK. On the tariff. That is my recollection. If I am mistaken, be it so.

Mr. MORRILL. I have an amendment here, which I will read:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BECK to the bill (H. R. No. 5338) to reduce internal-revenue taxation, namely:

Insert the following:

"That from and after the passage of this act the tariff duty of $28 per ton on Bessemer-steel rails shall be reduced to $14 per ton."

That was introduced and referred on the 28th of June. The other was on the 8th of July.

Mr. BECK. That was long before any report was made by the committee. The bill was not reported by the committee until the 6th day of July.

Mr. DAWES. You started out early.

Mr. BECK. The bill was not in the Senate then. I have never failed to denounce the fraud committed upon the country by those distinguished gentlemen who raised to $28 a ton the duty on Bessemer steel. I think the Senator has heard from me on that before, when I replied to him in January and again in March, and I have sought to reduce it. But the Senator from Ohio was telling about what took place in regard to this bill that came from the House and which was reported back on the 6th day of July.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky if his amendment about Bessemer steel was not pending. I will not say what was done with it in the Committee on Finance, but was it not pending before that committee for some days before any report was made to the Senate upon this bill?

Mr. BECK. If it was introduced on the 28th day of June it was pending before that committee for ten days before any report was made, and they took care to make no report upon it. What I said to the Senator from Ohio was that the first tariff amendment that was brought into the Senate after the report of the committee was made was by the Senator from Kansas, and that amendment necessitated the calling of the caucus, and the day after the caucus met the bill was recommitted and reported back with the sugar amendment in it, and with the polariscope amendment in it, and with the Bessemer-steel reduction or pretended reduction from $28 to $20 a ton in it, and with the effort to increase the duty on cotton-ties from 35 to 75 per cent. in it. I say it comes with a bad grace from the Senator from Ohio now to assert that because we sought still further to amend this bill and to provide that no duty shall exceed 50 per cent. ad valorem, and that we shall reduce 10 per cent. now and 10 per cent. a year from now, we are seeking to delay the bill and seeking to prevent the reduction of taxation, and that we are against the interests of the country because we will not allow him to take out of the Senate this bill with a few little taxes taken off to relieve banks and patent-medicine men, and men who can subscribe to the 2 per cent. fund for the privilege of having relief given to them, and get it back into the hands of the House where it will never be reported, and deprive ourselves of the right to consider anything hereafter, and we are obstructionists if we do not agree to all of his propositions. That is what I am trying to show the absurdity of.

Why, sir, the bill is before us. I admit I want Bessemer steel reduced. I will look and see if I have not proposed many other reductions. What amazes me is the audacity of men who come here and say that they would give relief by restoring the sugar tax to where it was in 1872, by removing the taxation imposed upon it in 1875, on the sinking-fund fraudulent pretense, which has been exposed very often, and yet failing to give us a chance and saying we are obstructionists if we propose to repeal section 4 of that same act, which under that same pretense increased the taxation upon all cotton goods, woolen goods, manufactures of iron, and many other things 10 per cent. above what they were placed in 1872. In 1872 the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Iowa admitted that when the internal-revenue tax on manufactures and the income tax imposed during the war had been abolished common decency required that the tariff taxes should be reduced 10 per cent. as they were in 1872. That 10 per cent. was restored in 1875 and at the same time an additional tax was put upon sugar, and yet because we have an amendment pending now seeking to restore the tax upon iron, upon cottons, upon woollens, and upon other things to what the Republican Congress placed it in 1872, we are revolutionists and obstructionists, and if we do not consent to a bargain to withdraw all these propositions we are to be held up before the country as men opposing relief from taxation.

That is the history of this case. We know that if this bill once gets away from us we cannot do anything more with it. Adjourn now if you like; the bill will be pending in December. Your tariff commission, that I called a fraud from the beginning to the end, an affidavit for a continuance and nothing more, may report, but you do not intend to act upon their report next winter. I intend to have either the knit-goods bill or some other bill here next December, if you do not see fit to press it through now, and we can call it up then and get relief, tariff commission or no tariff commission.

We shall either do what is right now in the way of reducing taxation or we shall hold on to this bill and when we meet here in December have it pending in the Senate. Will any Senator on the other side pretend to say that if we lose hold of this bill now, merely relieving the bankers and the patent-medicine men and a few other things, and send it back to the House, we shall ever get another bill at this Congress before the 4th of March next? No. No matter what the tariff commission reports, do you believe if it will hurt any protected interest or any great monopoly that the Committee on Ways and Means of the House as now organized will pass any other bill and send it to us and give us a chance? No; no man will rise in his place and say so. Therefore I am not afraid to allow this bill to remain until December in the Senate and in the power of the Senate, and then we may defy whatever the packed commission may send us and have a bill before us in which we can incorporate anything they may see fit to report in the way of further reduction.

I do not care if it does go till December if this or some other revenue bill is kept before us. Pass it now with the reductions we want, and then we do not care; and when the 10 per cent. proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] takes effect now, and the other 10 per cent. does not take effect until the 1st of January, 1884, you will have the report of your tariff commission, you will have another session of Congress, you can repeal a part of it if there is anything wrong in it, and all the effective part that goes into effect before January a year is the repeal of the 10 per cent. that was placed on the tariff in 1875, and bringing it back where it was in 1872, and no condition has arisen from 1872 till now that requires any increase of taxation, and no man will venture to say so.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] suggests that we are offering no obstruction. We are ready for the vote whenever full and fair explanations are had, but we neither agree to five-minute rules nor to sticking out and seeking to kill each other by seeing which will live the longest, when sitting night and day with the thermometer at ninety. I think I can hold out as long as anybody else; I do not know whether I can or not, but I can try. I do not propose to do it, however. I am willing to stay until a fair hearing can be had, but not willing to part with all the power we have over this question, either now or at the next session, by sending this poor, little, miserable bill back to the House with nothing in it that the country expects. We have made a good beginning.

I was about to refer to the debates of 1872; I have sent for them. The 10 per cent. we propose to take off now—and I will discuss it fully when the question comes up—was agreed to by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] and the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House. This proposition of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS,] that is to go into effect before a year from the 1st day of next January, these gentlemen agreed to in 1872 and indorsed and said ought to be done.

I have the speech of the then Representative from Massachusetts, Mr. Banks, in 1878, in which he laid schedules before the House as the agent of the woolen manufacturers, the cotton manufacturers, the silk manufacturers, one hundred and twenty of the largest firms in New England, he said, offering a reduction of 20, 30, 40, or 50 per cent., and furnishing the schedules, and telling the Committee on Ways and Means he was authorized by these men, after full consultation, to make that reduction, and that they could all live under it.

I have made no propositions that are not reasonable, and that have not been fully indorsed and sustained by the manufacturers themselves, by the leading industries of the country, and by the leading Republican statesmen who passed the law of 1872.

For these reasons I, for one, object to any bargain about this bill.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, we have had for the last year a surplus revenue gathered from the people of the country of upward of $100,000,000. We shall have for the next year, making every deduction, a surplus revenue, in my judgment, of at least $50,000,000; and here is a proposition offered to the other side of the Chamber to lift from the shoulders of the people burdens estimated at between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000.

The proposition is one in all its details to which nearly or quite every Senator in the Chamber on either side is thoroughly committed. There is no denial on the part of the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Delaware as to the wisdom of each of the proposed reductions, (with the exception of perhaps the reduction of the tax on matches, where the Senator from Delaware looks out for his neighbor, the great manufacturer;) and now how are we met by these leaders of the Democratic party?

There is no reason or statement against the justice of the proposition, but we are met with taunts, sneers, scolding, stump speeches. The Democratic statesmanship says, "We will not lift, having an opportunity, from the shoulders of the American people thirty or forty millions of burdens, because we think perhaps that we may make a point on some political antagonists in regard to the conduct of their caucus, in regard to the time when the proposition was made, in regard to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the conduct of some gentlemen on a particular occasion. We prefer, instead of joining in an attempt to remove these burdens and inconveniences, instead of beginning to wipe out the last vestige of internal-revenue taxation, the last domiciliary visit of a Federal tax-gatherer to the home or the place of business of an American citizen—we prefer to address ourselves to the statesmanlike attempt to find some inconsistency in our political antagonists. And we prefer that evil shall be done and that evil shall continue if we can anywhere throw upon our political opponents the charge of being in any degree responsible for it."

Why, Mr. President, what is the condition on which these Senators say that they will consent to a measure which they concede to be just in itself of a removal of thirty or forty millions of dollars of burden from the shoulders of the American people? The Senate is evenly divided between the two political parties on a strict party vote; the votes counted as Republican and the votes counted as Democratic are precisely equal in number, so that nothing can be accomplished by the Republican party without the assent of their political opponents, or of some one of them.

Now, they say, and we are informed that it is the result of a formal consultation among them in private, that no burden of taxation shall be withdrawn from the shoulders of the American people except upon this condition, that there shall be a reduction of 10 per cent. in the duty on every import, to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1883, and an additional reduction of 10 per cent. to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1884. That enactment, of course, is to be in the nature of a command to the commission assembled to revise the tariff now in session.

What is to be the result? That is a proposition the effect of which, in my judgment, will be to create a business convulsion in this country not equaled by the great convulsions of 1837, or of 1857, or of 1873. The reduction is to extend to all imports alike, to brandy, to diamonds, to champagne, to every luxury, as well as every protected domestic manufacture; and every manufacturer and employer of labor in this country is for the space of at least fifteen months to be conducting his business upon a falling market. The material which he imports, which he requires before he begins his manufacture, is to be taxed at the high duty; the product when ready, after his manufacture is completed, is to be sold at the low duty, and that process is to be repeated on the 1st of January, 1883, and again on the 1st of January, 1884.

Mr. President, there never came out of a lunatic asylum a proposition so monstrous, so indefensible, so destructive as that which is proposed by this party, equal in numbers to one-half the American Senate, as the condition upon which they will permit the burden of thirty or forty millions of taxation to be lifted from the shoulders of the American people.

Why, look at the absurdity of their position in another point of view. There are thirty-five amendments pending, proposed on that side of the Chamber, of tariff legislation in this bill, as I understand, going over, in addition to this 10 per cent. reduction, every item of dutiable articles. Such a bill they propose to send down to the House of Representatives on the 1st of August, or thereabout, after the two or three weeks of discussion which it will require shall be over in the Senate.

There that bill is to go into Committee of the Whole under its rules, and every single item must be the subject of free discussion in a body consisting of nearly three hundred members, indeed more than three hundred entitled to take part in its debates. The Schenck revision of the tariff, attempted in a body where the Republicans had two-thirds majority, occupied that House, day and evening, for between six and eight weeks, and then they were obliged to throw aside the work unfinished when the hot weather of the summer came on. The condition which is proposed is preposterous in the eye of any practical legislator.

Do you think, gentlemen, that your sneers and taunts and stump speeches are going to mislead the American people as to the position of this question? Do you suppose there is an intelligent citizen, intelligent enough to light his pipe with a taxed Delaware match or to purchase his tobacco, who does not know that when we offer to take off these burdens and you meet it by demanding that it shall be only on condition of a reduction of the tariff 10 per cent. and 10 per cent. again and all your other thirty-five amendments, and you meet it then with the further condition that the whole tariff shall be sent to the House of Representatives in the middle of August to be taken up for consideration, do you suppose that there is an American citizen who does not know enough to understand where the responsibility for the failure of this relief from internal-revenue taxation rests?

Mr. President, I do not regret this thing politically. I regret it for my constituents; I regret it in the interest of the tax to the American citizen; I regret it in the interest of the American people; I regret it in the interest of sound statesmanship; but in the interest of the political party to which I belong I rejoice at it. I wish to express, as a Republican, my gratitude to the Senator from Kentucky that whenever my party has shown the least sign of losing in any degree the popular confidence which has upheld it, he has come to its rescue with his leadership of the Democracy.

I remember when we were divided under the administration of President Hayes, and I remember the midnight speech of the Senator from Kentucky, threatening that unless the Executive would consent to the dictation of the Democratic party and surrender his constitutional prerogative the process of legislation should stop; and I remember how the sound sense of the American people came compact and united to the party to which I belong in consequence of that position. I remember again when there came from the State of Kentucky a threat in the ear of the loyal North to wipe out all the war legislation. I remember again, in the midst of the Presidential election, after even loyal Republican Maine had gone wrong, how the voice from Kentucky, in favor of a tariff for revenue only, saved the American people from the sorrow and disaster of a Democratic administration. Again I congratulate, as a politician, the Republican party to which I belong at this simple, cheap, easily-seen-through bluster and blunder with which the Senator from Kentucky has come to our rescue. I am sorry for the tax-payers; I am sorry for sound statesmanship; I am sorry for the inconvenience to the American people; I am sorry that they have got to continue to pour into the Treasury these thirty or forty millions unneeded for another year; but as a Republican I am not sorry.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have only one remark to make in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator took occasion at one time to present, as I thought, on the floor of the Senate some years ago this same argument, and I undertook to tell the Senator in very plain terms what I thought of it, and I am willing to stand on that record. I may have made a great many mistakes, perhaps I have, and he may be very grateful to me. When, to use the eloquent expression of my friend from Delaware, the Senator rises "with tears in his voice" to congratulate the country that they are always safe because I happen to take the position I do, he is entirely welcome to whatever he can make out of that.

As to what his little bill of relief to the tax-payers of the country from thirty-eight or thirty-five millions of taxation means, I hope he will tell the people of Massachusetts that it means to relieve the poor, downtrodden bankers—I cannot quite put it as pathetically as he can—and to relieve the patent-medicine men, and to relieve the men who are making matches, while the men who have to buy them will have to pay about as much for them after the tax is taken off as they are doing now. There is no relief to the poor man. The Bessemer steel that comes into the country now pays a duty of $28 a ton, when it can be bought in the foreign market for $24. Everything may go on, and Massachusetts may hold on to her advantages; and if I am to be responsible because I seek to relieve the people from the burdens they bear, the Senator is entirely welcome to all he can make out of it.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, why not be honest about this thing? The baby, the progeny of the Republican caucus, is about to die, and the Senator from Massachusetts says that he congratulates the country. I have no doubt that that is true. I have no doubt he congratulates himself still more, for I am free to say that a more disreputable offspring never came to trouble a parent than that bill. A more weak, and puny, and feeble, and lopsided concern, or one bearing more evidences of its legitimacy, never squalled in this wicked world than the bill which came to the Senate from that caucus; and I have no doubt that the Senator from Kentucky and anybody else who assists in the obsequies will incur the everlasting gratitude of the Republican portion of this Chamber for putting that child out of this world in which it was too poor and too feeble and too simple ever to live and thrive. [Laughter.]

What are the characteristics and the attributes of this wonderful child, that was to be born for the healing of the taxed people in Israel? It takes off the tax from banks, bank capital, bank deposits, bank checks, patent medicines, perfumery, cosmetics, friction matches, and high, low, jack, and the game. [Laughter.] All those taxes are taken off by virtue of this man child that was born in Israel for the relief of the oppressed people. No wonder it is taken away, even as the fig-tree casteth its untimely figs when shaken by the wind. It is about to die, and the question now is somewhat resembling one of a more serious character that we have been discussing in this Chamber and throughout the American nation with a big N for some time past, as to who shall be responsible for its death. If the responsibility for its death can be fastened on this side of the Chamber, the mourning of its afflicted parents will be like that of David of old, who grieved much while the child was sick, yet rose and dressed himself and rejoiced when it was dead; his sorrow was over.

Mr. President, I am willing to take my share in this infanticide. I am opposed to any relief being extended to that suffering and meritorious class of people that I have enumerated just now, and who are affected by this bill so long as the real suffering of the country is not abated one jot or tittle. So long as the tax-gatherer goes into the cabin of the poor man and demands a tax on the latch he enters; and walks up to the gourd that holds the widow's salt, and hangs by the chimney corner, and levies a tax of 56 per cent. upon the contents; and walks up to the couch where sickened languishes and demands a tax upon the medicine to alleviate human suffering, and the spoon that holds it; so long as the farmer's trace-chains that pull the plow that gives bread to the world; so long as the weaver's shuttle is taxed; so long as the reaper's scythe is taxed; so long as the poor man's wool hat is taxed, and his blanket is taxed 100 percent.; so long as these necessities not only of life, but necessities of the poor man's life, are taxed this way, I am willing to trample one hundred such babies in the dirt every morning as an appetizer for my breakfast. [Laughter.]

Do you want to give any relief to the American people? Then why mock the common sense of mankind in this way? Give us a total abolition of the internal-revenue system. It is a remnant of the war. Wipe it all out and lay your duties upon the products that are imported in this country in such a manner that they will yield the necessary revenue. Wipe it all out and then your banks and bank capital may go; then your patent medicines also may go.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if I understand his position to be this: while he is not contented with the reduction of the internal-revenue made in this bill, if we will add whisky and put on the other things to the tariff that we lose from whisky, he will then be contented? That seems to be his argument.

Mr. VANCE. I said nothing about whisky. The Senator from Massachusetts must be dry. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator state what there is left? I do not want an answer from the comic almanac, but seriously.

Mr. VANCE. No, that is too near home. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from North Carolina, objecting to the relief of the internal-revenue taxation which this bill affords, says he demands that the whole of the internal-revenue taxation shall be taken off, wiped out. What will there be left after this bill passes, except whisky and beer, and the remaining 12 cents on tobacco? The Senator says that he wants the rest of it to be stricken out, and the $145,000,000 which we are raising from that source added to the tariff. That is a pretty serious proposition. It is a proposition made by an American Senator, by a Democratic leader, a free-trader, and that is all there is of it. It does not answer the point to repeat these hundred-times-told old stories from the comic almanac.

Mr. VANCE. The Senator has a wonderful knack of spinning out a question. His question simply was if we abolished all the internal-revenue tax, what would be left? It does not take more than a minute to answer that. There would be nothing left of the internal-revenue tax.

Mr. HOAR. That is what the Senator said he wished to do.

Mr. VANCE. Certainly; if you take it all away there will be nothing left, most assuredly; beyond any doubt. I have no doubt in the world but what if the Senator could have his way there would not be much left in the Treasury. The object of this taxation as kept up upon the tariff is to put nothing into the Treasury, but let all of the duties levied upon imports go to the pockets of the manufacturers. I think that is the game very plainly. But it is plain and palpable to every one that if we reduce the tariff on imports to the revenue standard we will have abundance of funds to carry on the Government and answer every purpose that is required by due economy.

I did not say that I was in favor of abolishing all the tax on whisky. I want it to stay in so long as other things are taxed, and I am not ashamed to say, though I might be accused of having Republican proclivities in saying so, that I have just as much partiality for the men who make and vend and drink whisky as I have for the banks and the friction-match men, and for the men who make playing-cards. I have just as much sympathy for the one as for the other. They are all citizens of the United States, and their industry calls upon the Government for protection in precisely the same way. The idea is that banks have special privileges, and that these other parties do not, except they operate under a patent.

I am willing to give the American people relief right now, and I only speak for myself. The Senator from Massachusetts compliments me in many ways by saying that I am a leader, a free-trader, and so on. I am obliged to him for those compliments, but my only boast is to follow where others lead, if they lead in the right direction.

I say for one, and I speak for myself, that I am not willing for this revenue system to be cut into in this way. I am not willing to make fish of one and fowl of another. I want to see it all go together. I am willing now to vote to abolish the whole system and let the vast army of Republican electioneers and campaigners who travel through the South with pistols at their sides, when a peaceable citizen is not allowed by law to carry a weapon, and who levy heavy burdens upon the people and insult them and ride over them, with privileges to invade their homes and violate their domestic privacy—I say I am willing to see that whole crew cut off, not tinkered with in this way; I am willing to see it doctored as the Dutchman doctored his dog for killing sheep, when he said he cut off a small portion of his tail just behind the ears. I am willing to do that; but if it is not done, then I am opposed to striking out the tax on a part of the articles that are embraced in the internal-revenue laws.

As to whether I shall be held responsible for the death of this infant, I confess my willingness to take my share of the responsibility. When this bill came to us on the heels of an eight months' session, and when we are told that we are to take it just precisely as it suits the dominant party, and offer no amendments to it, we take the responsibility of defeating it. I say upon principle, if it was one of the best bills ever introduced here, I for one would not surrender my right to discuss it and to offer amendments to it and to perfect it according to my notions of what it should be.

I am willing to take all responsibility, but I do not think there will be any doubt about where the responsibility will rest with all men who are outside of a lunatic asylum, it would seem to me. Those who press this bill in this way and at this hour know that the opponents of the bill and those who are friends of the principle of the bill cannot afford to vote for it under the circumstances and to have the gag-law applied in this way. I say I know that all persons who consider these things will be justified in saying that this bill is a tub to the whale. It is a feeble and sickly attempt to meet the crying demand in this country for revenue reform, and it will be seen through as clearly as the tail of a comet, which was once understood to be solid but is now understood to be nebulous.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator is going to speak for any length of time, I ask him whether it would not be more satisfactory to him to go on to-morrow?

Mr. BAYARD. I only wish to occupy the floor for about fifteen minutes.

Mr. LOGAN. I was going to move an executive session.

Mr. BAYARD. I will give way in ten minutes.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it has been nearly two years since the Democratic party had a majority in this Chamber. When I represented at their will the chairmanship of the Committee on Finance, I brought into this body a resolution creating a tariff commission. The Democratic party had control of both Houses of Congress but there was a Republican President. I believed it was competent for him to select, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate, nine men in this country to constitute a non-partisan commission, skilled, disinterested, political economists, who could present a scheme of tariff taxation that would be just to all the interests of this country—oppress none, protect all and yield abundant revenue for all just expenses.

I gave my reasons for supporting that measure then, and my experience since that time has proved to me they were right. But the measure did not become a law, and no such tariff commission as was contemplated by that measure or by me has ever been appointed. The present commission as constituted is a total defeat of the objects originally stated for forming a commission to consider the question of tariff taxation. One of the reasons was, if we could have those questions affecting localities discussed by men who were not locally interested and who would not feel and speak with all the bias and asperity which we see affects Senators in discussing these questions of taxation, we might come to a wiser conclusion.

My experience is verified by the tone of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. I have spoken frequently upon this tariff subject, and I challenge him or any Senator to show that I have ever made a personal imputation upon the vote of any Senator or that he was influenced by anything like a personal or local cause. Yet the Senator found time to refer to me as having stood here to take care, as he said, of a neighbor of mine, who is concerned in the manufacture of matches. The care I took was that which I shall always take, to endeavor to fill the Treasury of the United States with revenues drawn with least pain and distress to the American people. Wherever I can find a measure that will do that I shall vote for it. It is upon no basis different from that that my votes here are given or my arguments made. I found a tax that gave more than three millions and a quarter of dollars annually to the Treasury, which rested upon all classes and distressed none, and hence I preferred the repeal of other taxes that brought no revenue and prohibited commerce.

That Senator and the honorable Senator from Vermont have held up to the country that a horizontal reduction of the tariff of 10 per cent. would be something utterly disastrous and paralyzing to the business of the country. He has declared, and the Senator from Vermont has declared, that it would be the cause of grave disaster if such a thing should take place. This is all extravagant, unwarranted language.

In 1872 the scale of tariff duties in this country was lower than it is to-day—they were greatly increased in 1875—and yet in 1872 a horizontal reduction of the tariff was effected, and I have before me the vote by which it was passed in the House of Representatives. Here it stands in the Congressional Globe at page 3652, May 20, 1872. The yeas were 149, and the nays were 61, and among the yeas were to be found the two honorable Senators who now represent the State of Massachusetts in the Senate, [Mr. DAWES and Mr. HOAR.] I will submit the entire list:

YEAS—MESSRS. AMES, Archer, Banks, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Bigby, Biggs, Bird, James G. Blair, Braxton, Bright, Buckley, Buffinton, Burchard, Burdett, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick B. Butler, Caldwell, Clarke, Cobb, Coburn, Comings, Conner, Cotton, Cox, Crebs, Critcher, Crossland, Darrall, Davis, Dawes, Donnan, Duke, Dunnell, Ely, Farnsworth, Farwell, Finkelnburg, Forker, Charles Foster, Frye, Garfield, Garrett, Giddings, Golladay, Haldeman, Hale, Hancock, Handley, Harper, George E. Harris, John T. Harris, Havens, Hawley, Hay, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hereford, Herndon, Hibbard, Hoar, Holman, Houghton, Kellogg, Kendall, Kerr, Ketchum, King, Lamport, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lowe, Lynch, Manson, Marshall, McCormick, McCrary, McGrew, McHenry, McIntyre, McNeely, Merriam, Merrick, Mitchell, Moore, Morgan, Morphis, Niblack, Orr, Packard, Palmer, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Peters, Potter, Price, Rainey, Read, Edward Y. Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, William R. Roberts, Robinson, Rusk, Sawyer, Seeley, Sessions, Shanks, Sheldon, Shellabarger, Sherwood, Slater, Sloss, Snapp, Thomas J. Spear, Sprague, Stevens, Storm, Stoughton, Stowell, Strong, Swann, Taffe, Terry, Thomas, Turner, Tuthill, Twichell, Tyner, Vaughan, Voorhees, Waddell, Wakeman, Walden, Waddron, Wallace, Walls, Warren, Wells, Wheeler, Whiteley, Whitthorne, Williams of Indiana, Williams of New York, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Winchester, Wood, and Young—149.

YAYS—Messrs. Acker, Adams, Ambler, Arthur, Averill, Barber, Barry, Beatty, Bingham, Austin Blair, Campbell, Carroll, Coghlan, Conger, Dickey, Duell, Eames, Eldredge, Elliott, Henry D. Foster, Wilder D. Foster, Getz, Griffith, Halsey, Harmer, John W. Hazelton, Hill, Hooper, Kelley, Killinger, Lamison, Maynard, McClelland, McJunkin, McKee, Mercer, Benjamin F. Meyers, Leonard Myers, Negley, Packer, Peck, Pendleton, Perce, Aaron F. Perry, Poland, Randall, John M. Rice, Rogers, Scofield, Shoemaker, Slocum, H. Boardman Smith, John A. Smith, R. Milton Spear, Starkweather, Stevenson, Sutherland, Washington Townsend, Upson, Willard, and John T. Wilson—61.

Mr. HOAR. How soon after the passage of the law did the reduction take effect?

Mr. BAYARD. This was on the 20th day of May, 1872. That is the time of the passage of the bill in the House of Representatives for a horizontal reduction of the tariff.

Mr. HOAR. When did the law take effect?

Mr. BAYARD. The law was approved June the 6th, 1872.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will consent to be interrupted, does he not see the difference between one such reduction, or even a total repeal of a duty, to take effect instantly or in a brief time, and a double sliding scale, one to take effect on the 1st of January in future, another to take effect twelve months after, so that every manufacturer has to buy his material at a high duty and sell the manufactured article at a lower one? That is the operation of this proposed reduction.

Mr. BAYARD. Here is the law, and I will read it precisely as it stands.

Mr. HOAR. That took effect within five or six weeks after its passage.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator, then being a member of the House from Massachusetts, together with his colleague, [Mr. DAWES,] voted "yea" on the 20th of May, 1872. On the 30th of June, in the Congressional Globe, page 4088, is found the vote of the Senate on the subject, which stood 49 yeas and 3 nays, among the yeas the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] The list is as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Blair, Boreman, Caldwell, Carpenter, Casserly, Clayton, Cole, Conkling, Cooper, Corbett, Cragin, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Harlan, Hill, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Kellogg, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Norwood, Nye, Osborn, Pool, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Sanlisbury, Sherman, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Trumbull, Vickers, Wilson, Windom, and Wright—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Scott, and Sprague—3.

That became a law and was approved on the 6th day of June. This is the provision of that law respecting the 10 per cent. horizontal reduction.

SEC. 2. That on and after the 1st day of August, 1872, in lieu of the duties imposed by law on the articles in this section enumerated, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise in this section enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, 90 per cent. of the several duties and rates of duty now imposed by law upon said articles severally, it being the intent of this section to reduce existing duties on said articles 10 per cent. of such duties, that is to say.

Mr. HOAR. That went into effect about six weeks after its passage.

Mr. BAYARD. In the same volume is found the report of the committee of conference, at page 4204, signed by—

H. L. DAWES.

WM. D. KELLEY,

M. C. KERR,

Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN SHERMAN,

JUSTIN S. MORRILL,

T. F. BAYARD.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

That was the bill which reduced the tariff 10 per cent. horizontally, precisely as is proposed to-day. Such was the history of the reduction of the tariff in 1872, at which time the general rate of tariff duties was lower than it is to-day.

In 1875 that 10 per cent. reduction was restored, and the tariff otherwise raised, and here to-day, in 1882, when we propose to take it off it is denounced as a measure frightful and dangerous to the business of the country.

To speak respectfully to my associates in this Chamber, they surely are testing the risibility of the American people and their associates when they talk about this thing being a blow at business interests. It is but a moderate, safe, simple, well-approved mode of reducing taxation upon the tariff, which is a short step in the right direction.

The tariff is so egregiously high that the horizontal reduction, unscientific though you may call it, is with our present rate of duties the mildest, the simplest, the safest measure that will not interfere with the present adjustment of trade and manufacture, but reduce everything that is important, both the raw material needed by the manufacturer and the duty upon the manufactured articles that constitutes his protection. Each will be lowered moderately and equitably and revenue will be rather increased.

I do not wish to apply, it is not necessary to apply strong phrases, but it is testing the patience of the public to make such declarations as gentlemen have made on the other side of the Chamber in respect to this reduction, and bringing their statements into ridicule and disrepute.

I have very little disposition for finessing for advantage, either personal or party, upon a question like this. I believe after all we have got to come to the judgment of a deliberate public opinion on this subject. I shall not impugn the motives of those who differ with me as to the wisdom or unwisdom of public measures. If there is any party advantage to be gained by misrepresentation of another's motives or position, I only can say I am not ready to embark in such a contest. If anything is gained by falsely urging a measure before the American people I do not propose to join in that effort. I would rather await that which must come, the deliberate, intelligent judgment upon the acts of public men, the sober second thought of our countrymen.

Mr. HOAR. In alluding to the Senator's opinion upon the matter of taxing matches I made no imputation, and intended to convey no imputation, directly or in any other way, upon his motive. I said that I believed all the provisions of this internal-revenue bill had received the assent of substantially every gentleman on the Democratic side of the Chamber, but it crossed my mind that the Senator from Delaware was an exception, and I qualified my remark by making the exception.

I meant, in alluding to the fact that the Senator was advocating his neighbor's interest, only to call attention to the fact. I meant to impute to the Senator nothing more than what every Senator would expect to do, look out carefully for interests in his State, and so far as that may have an unconscious operation on the mind of the Senator, as it might on any other, it undoubtedly may have had one on his. The Senator will remember, however, that I was replying to the speech of the Senator from Kentucky, a speech in which his associate on that side of the Chamber had imputed to the entire Republican party here a fraudulent purpose, using that word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.]

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask to take from the table the joint resolution sent to us to-day from the House of Representatives continuing the appropriations, and I ask unanimous consent to put it upon its passage.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 288) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution to provide temporarily for expenditures of the Government was read the first time by its title and the second time at length.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. BECK. What is the date fixed?

Mr. ALLISON. The 5th, on Saturday.

Mr. BECK. Does the Senator expect to close the tax bill by that time and have it become a law?

Mr. ALLISON. That seems to be rather uncertain. It is absolutely necessary that the joint resolution should be passed this evening. I ask that it be put on its passage.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not wish to oppose the passage of the joint resolution, but I wish to call attention to the fact that this is the fourth time in the present session when we have been extending the appropriations by joint resolution. It seems to me that the dominant party of this Congress, who have the majority in both Houses, ought to have had the legislation so shaped that we should not have presented this spectacle to the country at this late hour. Four different times since the commencement of the fiscal year we have extended the appropriations so as to enable the Government to be carried on. I think it is an anomaly in the history of the country, at least since I have been in the Senate I have never known it to have been done so often.

Mr. ALLISON. Only once before was it done so often, and that was in 1876, when the Democrats had control of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORGAN. Who had control of the Senate at that time?

Mr. LOGAN. That is immaterial.

Mr. ALLISON. I was merely answering my friend from Delaware.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve m., Saturday, August 5, 1882.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the resolution lie on the table. It is not necessary to make any reference.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. No. 1226) to amend section 4214 of the Revised Statutes, relating to yachts;

A bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of certain laborers employed upon Government works; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5380) supplementary to an act approved December 17, 1872, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Ohio River and to prescribe the dimensions of the same."

The following House bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 5300) to amend chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, relating to contracts under the War Department; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5653) for the relief of Kirk W. Noyes.

The following House bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 34, collection of duties on imports; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4926) for the relief of Charles Kortzenborn.

The bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 171) to provide for the printing of certain public documents for the use of the two Houses of Congress was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KELLÖGG. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at six o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 3, 1882.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. F. D. POWER.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the concurrent resolution fixing the time for final adjournment with an amendment.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives declare their respective Houses adjourned sine die at twelve o'clock m., Friday, August 4, 1882.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was read, as follows:

Insert "Saturday" in place of "Friday."

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York what are the reasons for the amendment?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will state that I believed yesterday it would be possible for the two Houses to adjourn on Friday at six o'clock. But when I come here this morning I find that the sundry civil bill with the Senate amendments has not reached the House from the Senate. I understand that it has gone to the Printer, having been sent to the Printing Office about nine o'clock this morning. It is impossible to have the amendments printed with the bill, I suppose, before five o'clock or six o'clock this evening, and, as the House can see, it will be impossible to consider those amendments, agree upon the bill, and have it engrossed between now and six o'clock Friday.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if he is not willing to allow that resolution to lie on the table for a short time?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not for a moment.

Mr. KASSON. I am asking the gentleman from New York. And I ask him for this reason: there is an attempt to be made this morning in the Senate, as I am informed by the gentleman in charge of the measure, to take up and act on the tax-reduction measure to-day on a proposition to be made; and until that action is had and we are aware of it, I submit that the importance of the measure, which I know the gentleman from New York appreciates, justifies us at least in waiting until we learn what the Senate does to-day on that proposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am unwilling to consent that the resolution should lie upon the table, and for this reason: if the Senate is disposed in good faith to act upon the bill for the reduction of the internal-revenue taxes, it will postpone of its own motion the hour or day of adjournment to a time that will enable that bill to be considered. It is very clear that if we are to remain in session only for the purpose of passing appropriation bills the two Houses can adjourn by twelve o'clock Saturday. Of that I have no doubt whatever. And, as I suggested before, if the majority of the Senate is disposed to legislate with reference to internal-revenue taxes, or customs duties, or anything of that kind, they can control this question by an amendment to this resolution. But I desire to have them meet the question upon this resolution.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, I will say it is peculiarly the province of this House to act upon questions of taxation, both of the imposition and reduction of the taxes. And for us who are the representatives of the people to turn over that responsibility to the Senate, intimating to them that we are willing to adjourn without acting upon a reduction of taxes, admitted on all hands to be necessary, is, I think, an abdication of the proper function of the House of Representatives. That is my objection to acting upon the resolution now.

Mr. HISCOCK. If I may be allowed one word further, I wish to say, although I do not desire to occupy the time of the House, that this side of the House at least will agree with great unanimity that there has been no member upon this side who has been more earnest, and has done more, if you please, to try to force legislation upon the subject of internal-revenue taxes than I have done. But we have reached a point now where it seems to me that a majority of the Senate is indisposed to act in that direction. We certainly have reached a point, at least, where I believe it is proper that the House should force upon the Senate the question of immediate action upon that measure if it is to act at all. I believe we have discharged our duty to the people by continuing this session of Congress to this late date for the purpose and for the sole purpose of forcing legislation, and I am unwilling to continue it further.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, to say that I did not vote for this amendment fixing Saturday. I believe we would do better by fixing Friday at six o'clock so as to spur the Senate up. We can to-night sit all night if necessary, as we do in the short session. But when my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] makes the point that the Senate will take up the taxation question it seems to me to be the ultimate foolishness of legislation to undertake to do that now when the gentleman and his friends at both ends of the Capitol have abdicated in favor of a Long Branch commission. They have given away our powers and our rights to a commission; and they have brought in a little pitiful bill to reduce taxation which amounts to nothing. And we know, and my friend from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] knows, that the Senate has no idea of taking up the taxation question again.

Mr. KASSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I do not know that.

Mr. COX, of New York. You ought to know it.

Mr. KASSON. My authority is the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. Who has been beaten every time on that motion.

Mr. KASSON. By whom? By your friends in the Senate?

Mr. COX, of New York. By the majority of the Senate.

Mr. KASSON. By your side in the Senate.

Mr. COX, of New York. No, sir; my friend from Iowa is mistaken. Now, I beg to say this: I will not antagonize this resolution that comes from our Committee on Appropriations, although I think it would be wiser to pass a resolution to adjourn at six o'clock on Friday afternoon. Nevertheless, as we cannot go ahead with the sundry civil bill, because it is not yet printed, we had better have the previous question called and wind up this profligate Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. The word "profligate" from the gentleman comes with very ill taste.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; not from him.

Mr. HISCOCK. For I say to him that so far as the action of the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, of which he is a member, I am unaware of a single appropriation bill as they stand to-day which contains any provision appropriating money to any amount which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] is not in favor of.

Mr. COX, of New York. I did not vote for your appropriation bills, and the RECORD will show it.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman did not vote for them, then I will say that he failed to be as frank as I trusted he always would be; for in the room of the Committee on Appropriations he certainly has never manifested any opposition to any item in an appropriation bill simply carrying an appropriation of money to any considerable amount.

Mr. COX, of New York. I voted against item after item.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, the gentleman says he voted against item after item; some little, trivial matters.

Mr. COX, of New York. The RECORD will show.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as the gentleman's record is concerned on that question, I am perfectly willing to appeal to my associates on that side of the House.

Mr. COX, of New York. I appeal to the record.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am entirely willing to appeal to every member of the Committee on Appropriations on that side of the House with reference to the economy of every item contained in an appropriation bill.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman seems to feel that the $70,000,000 extra appropriations rests on him; it rests on the majority of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman talks about the excess of appropriation. Let me say to him that $43,000,000 of that excess was for pensions and $10,000,000 to carry out the service of the last fiscal year, and to carry out a service which was not flexible and over which Congress had no control. The changes have been rung upon that matter, and the gentleman understands the fact as well as I do.

Mr. COX, of New York. It is time we adjourned when such sophistries are used here.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HISCOCK. I did not hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. COX, of New York. Only two members of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] seem to have been economists on that committee. The Republican majority ruled the committee, and you have got to take the responsibility of your excessive appropriations, as we did in the last Congress.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. We will take the responsibility.

Mr. HISCOCK. So far as the appropriation bills are concerned, which have come from the Committee on Appropriations, this side of the House is entirely willing to take that responsibility.

Now, one word in reference to our having abdicated, so far as the taxation bill is concerned, in favor of a commission. That is not so. The commission was constituted absolutely for the purpose of considering the question of our customs duties, and is not charged with any responsibility and has no responsibility and no jurisdiction over the subject of internal-revenue taxes, which is the only bill which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] supposes may be taken up in the Senate to-day. I now call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to say for myself, and I think that I can say it for many on this side of the House, that we would naturally vote for the earliest possible time of adjournment. But if that side of the House will give any reasonable assurance that by a moderate extension of the session we can secure a reduction of taxation we are willing to stay here.

Mr. REED. That assurance should come from your side of the House in the Senate. That is where the delay is, and that is where the assurance should come from.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from Iowa—

Mr. RANDALL. I did not hear the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says he could not hear me; I should like to repeat it.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] seem to think that the Democratic minority in the other end of the Capitol controls the action of that body.

Mr. KASSON. The Democratic minority?

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes; minority.

Mr. KASSON. Is not that questionable?

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman announces that he has the authority of the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate for saying that an attempt will be made to take up the tax bill in the Senate before the adjournment. If the gentleman will give us any assurance that such a proposition will be submitted and will receive the support of the Republican side of the Chamber, I can assure him that it will receive almost a unanimous, if not an entirely unanimous vote on the other side. It has been so all the time except when the gentleman in charge of the naval appropriation bill, not on the Democratic side of the Senate, called it up and antagonized the tax bill with it.

Mr. KASSON. Except also, the gentleman will allow me to say, when Senators (and I will not designate them by States) exhausted the time in amendments and speeches.

Mr. CARLISLE. When we pass a tax bill and send it to the Senate, that body has an undoubted right, and it is its undoubted duty, to take it up and consider it in the regular and usual way; and every gentleman has the right to offer amendments and to discuss them. I trust that when the bill shall be taken up in the Senate again (if it should be taken up) those gentlemen who are dissatisfied with the pitiful reduction made by this House will continue to offer amendments until they secure some real relief for the people at large, not a relief confined to special classes in the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KASSON. Your side want that relief on whisky and tobacco.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, it is a notorious fact that the obstruction in the Senate to the bill to reduce taxation has come from the party friends of gentlemen on the other side, and it has been under pretense of discussion, not by discussion itself. Until it was apparent that those gentlemen intended to talk the proposition to death the naval bill was not brought up. It is perfectly useless for gentlemen to imagine that by mere words they can cover up a fact notorious to the whole country—that parliamentary means have been used to defeat the reduction of taxation. For gentlemen to come up here and ask us to give assurances while their own friends resort to these obstructive measures in the other House of Congress is an exhibition of courage which would be sublime if it was not so common on the other side. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. COX, of New York. "A reed shaken by the wind." [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. One word further. As I understand from the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] the Republican Senators are in favor of a bill reducing internal-revenue taxes; and as I understand from the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] the Democratic Senators are also in favor of such a bill. From the statements of these two gentlemen there appears to be great unanimity in the Senate upon this question. Now what I propose to do is to advertise to the Senate that so far as the appropriation bills are concerned they can all be passed between now and next Saturday; and if they choose to postpone the day of judgment—the day of adjournment, [great laughter.]—

Mr. ANDERSON. "Judgment" is right.

Mr. ROBESON, (to Mr. HISCOCK.) That is a good word. Stick to it.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. "Dies ira!"

Mr. KASSON. That is a postponement which would have the unanimous concurrence of the Democracy.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not abandon the word. If they choose to postpone that day and have it the day of judgment, I desire them to understand and the country to understand that the postponement is for the single purpose of considering a bill for the reduction of internal-revenue taxes. I call the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from New York whether he will allow— [Cries of "Regular order!" "Let us vote!"]

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary question. If I understand the proposition made by my colleague, [Mr. HISCOCK,] it is an amendment to the resolution—

The SPEAKER. There is a pending amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want a vote if possible on the original proposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have called the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York stated that he rose to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COX, of New York. Can we get a vote on the original proposition?

The SPEAKER. The amendment is first in order.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to ask a parliamentary question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] It is whether before asking the previous question he will allow this amendment to be voted on—that this Congress ought not to adjourn until a bill has been passed reducing taxation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to debate.

Mr. KASSON. It is not for the gentleman from Illinois to object.

Mr. HISCOCK. I cannot yield for that amendment. I call for the regular order.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations to strike out "Friday, August 4," and insert "Saturday, August 5," was agreed to.

The question recurring on the resolution as amended.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. HISCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) to print 11,000 copies of each of the second and third annual reports of the Director of the United States Geological Survey; when the Speaker signed the same.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a privileged question. My colleague [Mr. FLOWER] on the vote on the river and harbor bill was paired with his colleague, [Mr. SKINNER.] It was not mentioned in the RECORD. Mr. FLOWER would have voted against that bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an explanation in reference to the pair of my colleague [Mr. BELTZHOVER] with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MCCOOK.] It was announced that Mr. MCCOOK was paired with Mr. BELTZHOVER, and that if Mr. MCCOOK were present he would vote against the river and harbor bill. If my colleague [Mr. BELTZHOVER] had been present he too would have voted against the river and harbor appropriation bill. It was unfortunate the fact was not known that Mr. MCCOOK would have voted against that bill, for if that fact had been known a different pair would have been procured for Mr. BELTZHOVER.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a personal explanation for half a minute. I wish to say that on the 7th instant my colleague [Mr. WHITE] delivered some remarks in this House and in addition obtained leave to print in the RECORD. He has retained them for about four weeks, and yesterday I found four columns of matter published in the RECORD not one line of which was uttered on the floor of this House and not one word of which is authorized under the rules. I do not know that I desire to make any reply and now only ask the privilege of printing a reply if I shall see fit to make any. I will not further take up the time of the House and will merely ask that privilege to print.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly. [See Appendix.]

SALE OF OMAHA RESERVATION.

Mr. HASKELL. I submit a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 1255) providing for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

D. C. HASKELL,
J. K. JONES,
O. L. SPAULDING,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. L. DAWES,
GEORGE H. PENDLETON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SCALES. Does the bill come back with the amendment of the House?

Mr. HASKELL. The Senate withdrew their disagreement to the amendment of the House, and the conference report provides for the passing of the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. SCALES. After the action of the House any opposition might be considered factions.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HASKELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH CONRAD.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 96) for the relief of Joseph Conrad, of Missouri, for present consideration.

Mr. McMILLAN. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope that bill will be taken up, in order that I may move as an amendment the Senate bill for the relief of Mark Walker.

Mr. HERR. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee withdraws the demand for the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has not yet said so.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope there will be no objection, as it will afford me an opportunity to pass through the House a very meritorious bill for the relief of Mark Walker.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. HERR. I do not suppose there will be any objection to my making a statement in reference to this bill.

The SPEAKER. Let the bill be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

Mr. ELIS. I hope by unanimous consent the gentleman from Michigan will be heard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That, in view of the long and faithful services of Captain and Brevet-Colonel Joseph Conrad, of the Eleventh Infantry, his total disability by reason of gunshot wounds received in the line of duty and action, while holding the commission of a colonel at the time he was wounded, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to place that officer on the retired list of the Army as a colonel, with the pay and emoluments of a retired officer of that grade.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking the bill from the Speaker's table for present consideration?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I object; we have enough on the retired list now.

Mr. HERR. I desire to state that the bill which I seek to pass is—

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I demand the regular order of business.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. LEWIS. I move to take up for present action the bill (S. No. 159) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to issue to Joseph F. Wilson, of Peoria, Illinois, or his legal representatives or assigns, a number of warrants equal to eighty acres, in tracts not less than the subdivisions provided for in the United States land laws, to be located by the said Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, on any of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States subject to pre-emption or homestead entry, in lieu of the west half of the northeast quarter of section 19, in township 35 north, of range 5 west, situate in Porter County, Indiana, which said tract of land was entered by and patented to Josiah Smith, of Macon County, Missouri, under and by virtue of the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 8, 1872, and March 3, 1873, relating to additional homesteads, and by the said Josiah Smith, after his said entry, sold and conveyed to the said Wilson, and of the title to and possession of which the said Wilson was divested and dispossessed by the judgment and decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, at the November term, A. D. 1880, thereof, by reason of a prior disposal of, or a prior equitable title in and to, said tract of land, as the said court held and decided, to or in persons other than the said Josiah Smith; and the said Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, after the location of the said warrants on such lands as he or they may select, shall be allowed patents for the lands so located. And the lands taken, selected, and located as authorized and provided for by this act shall be in full satisfaction of any claim, right, or benefit which the said Josiah Smith may have, or may have had, under and by virtue of the provisions of the said acts of Congress, as well as in full satisfaction of any claim which the said Wilson, as assignee or grantee of the said Josiah Smith, may have, or may have had, against the United States touching said described tract of land.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that in the report of the committee of the House there is included a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which I ask to have read.

Mr. CONVERSE. It is understood objection is reserved.

The SPEAKER. This is by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONVERSE. I shall object to the bill, but do not object to the reading of the letter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the letter be read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I withdraw my objection until the letter is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill, petition, and other papers in this case were referred by the committee to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who, in his letter of February 24, 1882, to the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing said papers, says:

"The records of this office show that Peter Wimmer made cash entry 1829 of the land in question at the La Porte land office, Indiana, June 5, 1835, which entry was canceled by this office October 17, 1836. It does not appear that the purchase-money was ever refunded, and the tract remained vacant until March 22, 1875, when Josiah Smith entered the same under section 2036 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as an additional homestead, and said entry was patented May 15, 1875."

It seems from the papers submitted to Congress by Mr. Wilson, in his petition for relief, and which were filed in this office January 27, 1882, by Hon. NICHOLAS FORD, chairman of sub-committee private land claims, House of Representatives, that the title to the land in question has been judicially determined in the litigation between Joseph F. Wilson, claiming by deed from the patentee, Josiah Smith, and the equitable owners, claiming by descent under Ruel Starr, who claimed as assignee of the duplicate certificate of entry 1829 from Peter Wimmer.

From the certified record of the case, herewith, it appears that the court on the 23d December, 1880, adjudged that the equitable title to said land was for many years in Ruel Starr, who, at the time of his death, was entitled to have the legal title conveyed to him by patent from the United States, and that at the death of Starr, intestate, in April, 1875, all of his right, title, and interest in the land vested in the equitable claimants under him, and the patent issued to Smith, from whom Wilson claims by deed, conveyed only the naked legal title, and Smith, and those claiming under him, were chargeable with the superior equitable title of Starr, and those claiming under him, and Mr. Wilson was held to be a trustee for claimants under Starr, and it was decreed that the claimants under Starr were entitled to have the legal title conveyed to them by Mr. Wilson within thirty days, and in case of default a special commissioner, Willard C. Nichols, was appointed to make the necessary deed of conveyance; and it was further ordered and decreed that Wilson and all persons claiming under him were forever enjoined from setting up any claim to the land in question. As Mr. Wilson has been judicially deprived of the title to the land derived by him under Smith's entry, and as the favorable action of Congress in the case has heretofore been recommended by my predecessor, I deem it proper to concur in that recommendation, except as to the last clause of the proposed bill, being lines 40 to 43, inclusive, which I respectfully suggest should be stricken out, for the reason that the title derived by Mr. Wilson under Smith's entry, and which it is proposed in that clause to be relinquished to the United States, is the title that has been conveyed by decree of the court to the equitable claimants under Starr. This title being no longer in Wilson, it is clear that he cannot now relinquish it to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

SAINT LOUIS COLLECTION DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee of Ways and Means and to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 34, collection of duties on imports.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the first subdivision of section 2568 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking therefrom the words "in Missouri" following the words "Saint Louis," and by adding to said subdivision of said section as follows: "Saint Louis, as used in this section, shall include Saint Louis, in Missouri, and East Saint Louis, in Illinois; and the surveyor and acting collector for the port of Saint Louis may receive goods, issue landing certificates to carriers, and issue orders to inspectors of customs to open cars containing goods and packages, and generally do and perform all acts necessary to be done and performed by him in East Saint Louis, in Illinois, as well as in Saint Louis, in Missouri."

Mr. MORRISON. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. Let us hear the Secretary's letter first, the right to object being reserved.

The SPEAKER. The letter will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 2, 1882.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant requesting my views on House bill No. 6845, to amend section 2568 of the Revised Statutes so as to include East Saint Louis, Illinois, within the limits of the port of Saint Louis, Missouri.

In reply, I have to say that I see no objection to the measure. On the contrary, from the representations frequently made to the Department regarding the delay and expense to which the business community is subjected by reason of present restrictions in the transportation of bonded merchandise to Saint Louis, Missouri, by rail, I am convinced that amendment is required in the interests of business, and I therefore recommend the passage.

I return herewith the inclosure of your letter.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER,
Secretary Treasury.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, House of Representatives.

Mr. MORRISON. The sole purpose of the bill is to include East Saint Louis, Illinois, and Saint Louis, Missouri, in one district for the collection of duties and for the delivery of imported goods. This is done for the convenience of commerce and to avoid the inconvenience to which merchants and business men are subjected in times when we have what are called "freight blockades" at East Saint Louis and at the east end of the Saint Louis bridge. East Saint Louis has grown into such importance to the commercial interests of that section as to entitle it, as I thought, to be made a port of entry and delivery. But the customs officers and the Treasury Department do not approve the creation of another such port at East Saint Louis, and think that what is proposed by this bill is preferable. It makes East Saint Louis a part of or includes it in the Saint Louis district in the same way that the port of New York includes Brooklyn, New York, and Jersey City, New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH CONRAD.

Mr. HERR. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 96) for the relief of Joseph Conrad.

The SPEAKER. Is this the bill that has been read this morning? Mr. HERR. It is the same bill—the bill (S. No. 96) for the relief of Joseph Conrad, of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been twice read. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. O'NEILL. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, no; let us vote down any amendment.

Mr. HERR. I call the previous question.

Mr. MORRISON. This old man has been shot more than five times. The bill ought to pass.

Mr. O'NEILL. I had the floor, and I move to amend the bill.

Mr. HERR. I have called the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan did not call the previous question till after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] had risen to offer an amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I shall object if there is to be an amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is now too late to object.

Mr. O'NEILL. You can vote down the amendment if you do not like it.

Mr. HERR. I beg the gentleman from Pennsylvania not to insist on his amendment.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army are hereby suspended for the purpose of this section, and only so far as they affect Mark Walker, late a first lieutenant in the Nineteenth United States Infantry; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Mark Walker, late a first lieutenant in the Nineteenth United States Infantry, to the grade and rank of first lieutenant; and that the said Walker shall thereupon be placed upon the retired-list of the Army: Provided, That the acceptance of the provisions of this act shall be a waiver to all right, present and prospective, under the pension laws of the United States. And said Walker shall not receive any pay, compensation, or allowance of any kind prior to his appointment under this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order that it is the substance of a bill now pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL. I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Is it not the substance of a pending bill?

Mr. O'NEILL. It may be the substance of a pending bill, but it is not a pending bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HERR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX, of New York. At the request of several members I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1492) in relation to certain Nebraska lands. I may state that some of my old Ohio constituents are interested.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees under the special rule. But before that call is proceeded with the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. THOMPSON,] who has notified the Chair that he desires to call up a privileged resolution.

ADDITIONAL LABORERS IN FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk. The Doorkeeper of the House reports to me that it is necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ twelve additional laborers in the House folding-room for the purpose of folding speeches, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $720 per annum while employed: Provided, That the said twelve additional employees shall be dropped from the rolls of the Doorkeeper at a period not more than one month after the expiration of the present session.

Resolved, That the resolution of the House of July 30, 1882, providing for the appointment of twelve additional laborers in the House folding-room for the purpose of folding speeches be so amended as to further extend the period of their employment for sixty days.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this regularly before the House? Does it come from the Committee on Accounts?

The SPEAKER. It does not; it may be subject to reference.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it does not come from the Committee on Accounts it is certainly subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. It may be subject to a point of order and have to be referred.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I would like to say a word—

Mr. HOLMAN. I make a point of order on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees under the new rule of the House, and the hour will begin at five minutes past twelve o'clock.

WAR DEPARTMENT CONTRACTS.

Mr. REED, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 5300) to amend chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, relating to contracts under the War Department, and ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 58 of volume 20 of the United States Statutes at Large, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of War to prescribe rules and regulations to be observed in the preparation, submission, and opening of bids for contracts under the War Department," be amended by striking therefrom everything following the words "War Department" and substituting for the parts of the act so stricken out the following words:

"And he may require every bid to be accompanied by a written guarantee, signed by one or more responsible persons, to the effect that he or they undertake that the bidder, if his bid is accepted, will, at such time as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War or the officer authorized to make a contract in the premises, give bond, with good and sufficient sureties, to furnish the supplies proposed or to perform the service required. If after the acceptance of a bid and a notification thereof to the bidder he fails within the time prescribed by the Secretary of War or other duly authorized officer to enter into a contract and furnish a bond with good and sufficient security for the proper fulfillment of its terms, the Secretary or other authorized officer shall proceed to contract with some other person to furnish the supplies or perform the service required, and shall forthwith cause the difference between the amount specified by the bidder in default in the proposal and the amount for which he may have contracted with another party to furnish the supplies or perform the service for the whole period of the proposal to be charged up against the bidder and his guarantor and guarantors, and the sum may be immediately recovered by the United States for the use of the War Department in an action of debt against either or all of such persons."

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] if he will not consent to an amendment to make the subsequent letting also upon notice? I suggest that this difficulty might arise under the bill as I heard it read: if there is a design by collusion to secure a contract from an irresponsible bidder, if the Secretary of War, or whoever else lets out the contract, is authorized to let it out without notice, it may lead to improper practices; and it seems to me that it is important there should be a new notice for bids for the contract to be relet.

Mr. REED. And it might operate in the other direction; it might force the Secretary of War to accept a bid that he did not desire to accept, because he would not have time to give notice. I desire to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] that this bill was drafted at the War Department, and presented by me at their request.

I think if the gentleman will consider the matter he will see that it gives the Secretary power to require such notice and at the same time throws upon him the responsibility. I think the gentleman will meet with difficulties in the other direction which will be quite as serious as those he suggests.

Mr. REAGAN. I think the purpose of the proposed legislation is good, but I think we should require that the letting should be done upon second notice.

Mr. REED. The bill now provides that the contracts may be made upon notice.

Mr. REAGAN. I know it does.

Mr. REED. But even the bill as it stands is not compulsory. It only authorizes the Secretary of War to do so; it does not compel him to do so.

Mr. REAGAN. It authorizes the original contracts to be made upon competitive bids. If the contracts so made upon competitive bids shall be forfeited it does not authorize competitive bidding for a new letting. Now, to authorize the Secretary of War to let contracts to whomever he pleases without competition it seems to me would lead to extravagance.

Mr. REED. I will remind the gentleman that the language of the bill is that "he may require every bid to be accompanied by a written guarantee."

Mr. REAGAN. That is the original bid.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. REAGAN. But after that is disposed of there is no competition required and no guarantee required.

Mr. REED. That would be changing the law throughout.

Mr. REAGAN. If the object is to secure fairness and competition with regard to these bids the law ought to provide for it.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that we are trying to do one good thing, and perhaps it would be desirable not to complicate it by introducing new matter that has not been considered.

Mr. REAGAN. It seems to me this would be doing a very bad thing.

Mr. REED. We are not changing the law in that respect by this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. It would be very easy to arrange it so as to guard the public interest and secure the best contracts upon competitive bids, and it seems to me that is right.

Mr. REED. I would very much rather not do it, for the reason that this bill as it stands now has the approval of the War Department, and I do not profess to be sufficiently acquainted with the workings of that Department to venture to accept such an amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Without any bad purpose, probably, it is the disposition of every Department of the Government to reserve to itself all the powers and discretion it can hold, and it is the business of the Legislature to properly restrain the Departments.

Mr. REED. I desire to say that there is a misprint in line 30 of the printed bill. The word "and" before "guarantors" should be "or;" so that it will read "the bidder and his guarantor or guarantors."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the bill which has been read?

Mr. REAGAN. Unless there is an amendment made to it I must object.

Mr. REED. I do not feel authorized to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. One objection is made. The bill is before the House, and the verbal correction suggested by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] will be made. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know that one objection is sufficient; but I did object.

The SPEAKER. Under this rule four objections are required.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS OHIO RIVER.

The Committee on Commerce was called.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. By direction of the Committee on Commerce, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. No. 5380) supplementary to an act approved December 17, 1872, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Ohio River, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act of Congress approved December 17, 1872, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Ohio River, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same," shall be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out sections 2 and 4 of said act and substituting therefor the following:

"SEC. 2. That every bridge hereafter erected across the Ohio River shall have its axis at right angles to the current at all stages, and all of its spans shall be "through" spans. Every such bridge shall have at least one channel-span placed over that part of the river usually run by descending coal fleets, said channel-span to give a clear water-way between the piers of five hundred feet, measured on the low-water line. Said channel-span shall be at least forty feet above local highest water, measured to the lowest part of the span, and shall be at least ninety feet above low water in bridges built above the mouth of the Big Sandy River, and at least one hundred feet above low water in bridges built below the mouth of the Big Sandy River, measured to the lowest part of the span: Provided, however, That all bridges over the Ohio River below the Covington and Cincinnati suspension bridge shall have, in addition to the channel-span prescribed above, a pivot-draw, giving two clear spannings of one hundred and sixty feet each, measured at right angles to the current at high stages, and located in a part of the bridge that can be safely and conveniently reached at that stage; that said draw shall be provided with suitable rest-piers above and below the pivot-pier, and suitable floats or crib-work connecting said rest-piers with the pivot-pier, to enable boats to pass through said draw with safety; that in case said draw-span is near either shore, the bridge company, by purchase or otherwise, shall extinguish the right of mooring boats or other water-craft to the adjacent shore for a distance of at least seven hundred feet above and seven hundred feet below the bridge; and that said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the stationary spans of said bridge, except when trains are passing over the same; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening said draw before or after the passage of a train: Provided further, That in lieu of the high draw prescribed above, bridges over the Ohio River below the Covington and Cincinnati suspension bridge may be built as continuous bridges, with a clear height of fifty-three feet above local highest water, measured to the lowest part of the span."

"SEC. 4. That any person, company, or corporation authorized to construct a bridge across the Ohio River shall give notice by publication for one week in newspapers having a wide circulation, in not less than two newspapers in the cities of Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and Louisville, for bridges above the mouth of the Big Sandy, and in the cities of Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, Saint Louis, Memphis, and New Orleans, for bridges below the mouth of the Big Sandy, and shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination a design and drawings of the bridge and piers, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of at least one mile above and one mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river and the shore-lines at high and low water. This map shall be accompanied by others, drawn on the scale of one inch to two hundred feet, giving for a space of one-half a mile above the line of the proposed bridge and a quarter of a mile below, an accurate representation of the bottom of the river by contour lines two feet apart, determined by accurate soundings, and also showing over the whole width of this part of the river the force and direction of the currents at low water, at high water, and at least one intermediate stage, by triangulated observations on suitable floats. The maps shall also show the locations of other bridges in the vicinity, and shall give such other information as the Secretary of War may require for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject. Said maps and drawings shall be referred to a board of engineers for examination and report, which board shall personally examine the site of the proposed bridge, and shall hold a public session at some convenient point to hear all objections thereto, of which public session due notice and invitation to be present shall be given to all interested parties; and if said board of engineers reports that the site is unfavorable, the Secretary of War shall be authorized, on the recommendation of said board, to order such changes in the bridge or its piers or such guiding dikes or other auxiliary works as may be necessary for the security of navigation; and the proposed bridge shall only be a legal structure when built as approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this bill in its original form amending the present law as to bridges constructed across the Ohio River was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSEND] and referred to the Committee on Commerce. Having been placed in the hands of a sub-committee of which I was chairman, it was submitted to the Secretary of War, and by him referred to the Engineer Department. The subject was examined separately by General Warren, Major Merrill, and General Weitzel, who reported their conclusions in a document which is before the House. The bill as now presented was then prepared under the direction of the Secretary of War, and is in accordance with recent improvements in engineering as applied to bridges. It increases the spans to five hundred feet, a width which can now be easily constructed, and it improves the law in other directions, protecting the navigation of the river, while imposing no unnecessary hardships in reference to the building of bridges. The bill in its present form is recommended by the distinguished engineers I have named, who understand the Ohio River perfectly, and it has also the approval of the War Department.

Mr. CARLISLE. Does this bill affect bridges already constructed?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It does not.

Mr. CARLISLE. It applies only to bridges hereafter to be constructed?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Yes sir. I will add that it is very necessary the bill should pass at this session, for there are three or four different points on the river at which bridges are shortly to be erected, and I have within a few days received letters from parties at Evansville and several other points on the river, stating that they are waiting for the passage of this bill, so that the bridges about to be constructed may be built in accordance with its requirements.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether this measure is a substitute for the bill introduced by myself?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. I would be very glad if my friend would state the difference between the two bills with reference to the height of bridges.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am not prepared to state that; but I will say that the bill of the gentleman was referred to the War Department, and by that Department submitted to the three distinguished engineers whom I have named, who, after examining the subject, reported this measure as a substitute, increasing the height of bridges above the water, increasing the width of the spans, and amending the bill in other important particulars so as to conform better to the interests of navigation.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. Does not this bill impose much greater hardships upon the construction of bridges than the present law or the bill which I introduced?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It makes changes in several important particulars; it increases the width of the spans. The gentleman's bill, if I remember correctly, provided for spans of four hundred feet; this provides for spans of five hundred feet.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. I will state that my bill was prepared under the advice of one of the ablest of the engineers. I am sorry the committee has not adhered more closely to the terms of the original bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The bill in its present form is in accordance with the report of the three engineers, including General Merrill. It amends and, as they believe, improves the original bill in important particulars, one being the increase of the width of the spans from four hundred feet to five hundred feet, which the engineers say is a requirement not only practicable but right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether the increase in the width of the spans from four hundred feet to five hundred feet is the principal amendment proposed to the present law?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The bill also increases the height of the bridges above the water.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there is an increased height as compared with the present law?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. And an increased width of the main span?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the side spans are diminished in width?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. No, sir. I will state that the bill contains other provisions, imposing such obligations in reference to the construction of bridges as will make them safer and less dangerous to navigation.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. I wish to know whether this bill facilitates the construction of bridges without interfering with the navigation of the river—

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. That was the intention.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. Or whether it is intended to facilitate the navigation of the river without reference to the construction of bridges?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is intended to facilitate the construction of bridges and at the same time to protect the interests of navigation. The distinguished engineers who approved this measure understand the Ohio River perfectly. They have had those two objects in view and have prepared the substitute with reference to them.

Mr. HOLMAN. One further question: to what extent does this bill facilitate the building of bridges or furnish greater facilities in that direction than the present law for the benefit of railroad companies?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. The advance of engineering skill in the last ten or fifteen years, since the passage of the present law, has made it possible to build bridges with wider spans and under conditions more favorable to navigation, while not less favorable to those who desire to construct bridges.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman say that this bill is more favorable to navigation than the present law?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIS. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It is all right and ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill is subject to debate for five minutes?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this bill is less favorable to navigation than the present law I shall feel it to be my duty, representing the interests of the Ohio River, to object to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. No; it is more favorable to navigation and has been constructed in that interest. It was so intended, but it does not prevent the construction of bridges in the proper way. It is intended to relieve navigation from some difficulties under which it now labors.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it protect navigation to a greater extent than the present law?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It does, and it was so intended. I wish the gentleman from Indiana had time to read General Merrill's report on the subject; it is exhaustive and able.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Indiana is directing his inquiry specially to know whether this law protects navigation more or less than the old law.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. It protects it more.

Mr. McLANE. I submit further to the gentleman from Ohio to state independent of that whether the Engineer Department was called on specially to report what would protect navigation?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. That is true.

Mr. McLANE. And the spans and heights in this bill are the spans and heights recommended by the engineers?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. They are.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. We not only desire to protect the navigation of the Ohio River, but we likewise wish to facilitate the construction of bridges across the Ohio River.

Mr. WASHBURN. This bill is primarily in the interest of navigation; that is the object of it. There is no doubt but what it will occasion additional expense to railroad companies and others desiring to build bridges, but it is in conformity with the recommendation of the War Department, and in the interest of navigation. It does not put any onerous obligation on parties desiring to build bridges.

Mr. WILLIS. I only desire to say—

The SPEAKER. The time for debate is exhausted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH PERSIA.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6743) to establish diplomatic relations with Persia, and to ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1675 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "Liberia, $4,000," the words "chargé d'affaires and consul-general at Teheran, Persia, $5,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the accompanying report be read; I understand the salary is fixed at $5,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The salary is $5,000 for chargé d'affaires and consul-general.

Mr. HOLMAN. What necessity is there for including consul-general? We have no commercial relations of any consequence with Persia which would require a consul-general.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The report will fully explain the facts involved.

Mr. CURTIN. Let the report be read.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I believe, Mr. Speaker, it will be much more satisfactory if the gentleman from Wisconsin be permitted to explain the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I can explain it in a moment. The bill provides for a chargé d'affaires and consul-general at Teheran, Persia, at a salary of $5,000. It is recommended by two Secretaries of State, by the ex-minister of the United States at St. Petersburg, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIN,] by our ex-minister, Mr. Foster, and by Mr. KASSON, our ex-minister to Austria; and these gentlemen are all perfectly acquainted with the situation, and the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is unanimous.

The American missionaries were attacked and their lives were in danger, and they had to appeal to the minister of Great Britain, who interfered and saved their lives.

Mr. KASSON, in a letter to the Department of State, sets forth that the trade with Persia is from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 a year; $12,000,000 imports and $7,000,000 exports, and that American cottons may be introduced there, and that American petroleum has already found its way into that country.

In my limited time that is all I can say or desire to say in regard to the bill. The salary is exceedingly low, but the committee did not feel authorized to recommend any higher compensation. If objection is to be reserved, I hope by unanimous consent the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIN,] ex-minister to St. Petersburg, will be permitted to be heard on this question with which he is fully acquainted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] will be heard, the right to object being reserved.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Objections must now be called for. Is there objection? The Chair hear none. There are still left five minutes for debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIN. If we are to continue to extend our relations to foreign countries, surely there should be no objection to our having relations with this the oldest government in the world and a country now growing to great consequence commercially. A glance at the map will show that Persia, lying between the possessions of Great Britain on the east and Russia on the north, is likely to grow in consequence in the diplomatic relations of those countries and others known in diplomacy and the great powers. During my residence in Saint Petersburg the Persian minister, a very intelligent gentleman, approached me twice to urge me to ask my Government to open diplomatic and commercial relations with that country; and I understand the late minister to Russia, Mr. Foster, made a communication to the State Department in which he reflected the wishes of the Government of Persia, and strongly recommended all this bill proposes. The report of the committee sets forth very fully the commerce of this country. I have noted some facts bearing on the importance of establishing relations with it which may be of interest to the House.

I will state to the House that the population of Persia is nearly, if not quite, 8,000,000. Its territory is three times greater than that of France. It has many large and opulent cities. Tabreez has a population of 120,000; Teheran 85,000; Meshed 70,000; Isfahan 60,000; and Yezd 40,000. The foreign commerce is twenty millions per year; the imports twelve and a half millions in round numbers; and the exports six and a half millions. And here is an item in their commerce which may be of consequence and should very properly enter into the consideration of the subject as of commercial importance to this country. They imported into the city of Tabreez alone last year $4,000,000 worth of cotton, mostly grown in the United States, and first shipped to Great Britain and thence to Persia, there manufactured into fabrics. A recent writer says:

Persia can probably never again rule the world as under Cyrus, but the wheel of history will soon bring round the day when its commercial and religious influences will again reach over a hundred millions of people.

The geographical position of Persia is most important. The American missionaries whose labors began in 1834 have done very useful work. When they arrived in the country reading was almost unknown. Now they have flourishing schools at Urumiah, Tabreez, Teheran, and other places. They have introduced printing and made modern Syriac, which is spoken by the Nestorian Christians, a written and printed language, a medium of enlightenment, though before their arrival the existence of this language—which is substantially the same as that used in the beginning of the Christian era, and may have been the language in which the Sermon on the Mount was given to mankind—was unknown to scholars. Ernest Renan, the great French scholar and academician, in speaking of this event, says:

The American missionaries of Persia, who should ever be connected with one of the most striking events in the history of the Semitic languages, undertook to give some regularity to this tongue, which they named Neo-Syriac. A grammar of this language, which now possesses a fairly good literature and journals, was published by Rev. Mr. Stoddard.

This well-authenticated historical fact must be gratifying to American citizens, and our Government should promptly afford protection to those who have done so much in the absence of even friendly officers of the Government. As is shown by the report of the committee, American missions in that country have heretofore been generally under the protection of the British embassy and other officials, who, it will be noted, speak in praise of our country in mission work.

The relations of Great Britain with Persia are seriously disturbed, and the power to protect the subjects of that government is of doubtful tenure.

We have more missionaries there than any other country, and many of the more intelligent of them have expressed their fears of safety if the British protection should be withdrawn from them.

Surely those of our citizens who in self-sacrifice have penetrated the darkness which has covered that historical land, given them the Bible and its precepts, established schools, and revived its literature, deserve the active protection of this Government.

We have commercial relations with that country which if fostered and protected will grow and enlarge.

All the great trading nations of Europe are represented at the capital of Persia by accredited ministers and by consular service at their chief cities, and we, a nation of traders, given to commercial and manufacturing activities, should be represented where others are, and the American citizen be followed by the protection in his life and rights and pursuits where others are.

It is time, full time, this great people should be asserted and their presence felt all over the world. Where the enterprise of the American man calls him let him feel that his Government is around and about him in his protection and his interest, and to that end we should be intelligently represented where the other great powers send their representatives. It may result to our business profit and commerce, independent of the protection demanded by those who are craving our literature and religion, as when we broke the crust of thousands of centuries of caste and superstition and opened Japan to the commerce of the world.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUFFERERS BY EXPLOSION AT PITTSBURGH.

The Committee on Military Affairs was called.

Mr. BAYNE. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up for present consideration from the Committee of the Whole House the bill (H. R. No. 6063) for the relief of the sufferers by the explosion at the United States arsenal at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, September 17, 1862.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the sum of $25,000, in such proportions as he may deem just and equitable, to the following named sufferers by the explosion at the United States arsenal at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on the 17th day of September, 1862, and to such other persons as may, within six months after the passage of this act, make satisfactory proof that they also were sufferers by that explosion, namely: T. J. McKelip, maimed by the explosion; — McCreight, who lost a daughter by it; George D. Clowes, who lost his only daughter by it; Mrs. Mary Clare, who lost a daughter; Mrs. Grace Gillespie, crippled for life thereby; Mrs. Margaret Slattery, who lost two daughters; Mrs. McAfee, who lost her only daughter; Andrew Mc—, who was crippled for life and also lost a daughter; the father and mother of Lizzie and Sadie Maxwell, both killed; Mrs. Anna McKenna, who lost her only daughter; Mrs. Amanda Straub, maimed for life; Mrs. Mary McCarthy, who lost her only daughter; Mrs. Laura Quinn, who had her sight greatly impaired by the explosion; Sarah Moorhead, Annie Brown, Jane Barr, and Maria Miller, four sisters of Hester Hezlip, killed by the explosion; Mrs. Margaret Murphy, who lost her only daughter; Mrs. Ann Croney, who lost a daughter; J. R. Frick, maimed for life, and lost his wagon and four horses by the explosion; A. L. Jones, who lost two nieces whom he was at the time taking care of; Margaret O'Rourke, an invalid, who lost her sister, her only support; and Mrs. Sarah Wolf, a cripple, who lost her sister.

Mr. BAYNE rose.

Mr. DUNN. The bill is still subject to objection as I understand. The SPEAKER. It is. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard in explanation of the bill?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor for five minutes to explain the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to have the attention of the House, because I do not think any gentlemen will object to this bill when they hear the object it contemplates. In 1862 there were engaged in the Allegheny arsenal at Pittsburgh several hundred people, making war preparations, cartridges, fuses, and various other things. Among the large number employed were girls and boys; a great many girls of twelve, fourteen, or sixteen years of age, and quite a number of boys; also a considerable number of men. The amount of work done at the arsenal was very great, and in consequence of the heavy hauling into the arsenal grounds the roadway became deep, and the commandant of the arsenal, Colonel Symonton, ordered that stone should be put upon the roadway to facilitate the transportation of gunpowder and other materials.

The stones placed there were much larger than those ordinarily used for macadamizing purposes, not broken as they ought to have been. Powder leaked out from the wagons that went over the road and got in among the stones. In hauling over that road one of the horses driven by Mr. Frick struck fire from the stones, the fire ignited the powder that had escaped from the wagons, and that powder slowly burned like a fuse until it reached a point where there was some five hundred pounds of powder which had been unloaded from a wagon, and set fire to that, which caused an explosion, and the consequence was that about eighty of these boys and girls and some men and women were killed outright, and some thirty or forty were wounded.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Does the gentleman desire to establish the principle that whenever any man is injured while in Government employment the Government must make a donation to him?

Mr. ERRETT. The accident was the act of the Government.

Mr. BAYNE. The accident was the act of the officer of the Government who had the matter in charge. A protest was made by the very teamster who drove the team over this stone road that an accident would result from the stones and the gunpowder that had fallen there unless some change was made. But no attention was paid to that by the Government officer, Colonel Symonton, and the result was this accident, by which about eighty, as I have said, were killed, I do not know the exact number, and some thirty or forty wounded. The number killed was very largely in excess of the number wounded, which is an extraordinary circumstance, and shows the terrible nature of this explosion.

This bill provides for appropriating $25,000, which is a sum wholly inadequate, and not nearly so much as should be given for the purpose of making provision for those who suffered in consequence of that terrible explosion, and the parents of those who were killed by it. I think if there ever was a bill that appealed strongly to the sympathy and the sense of equity of Congress this bill makes that appeal.

Most of the persons who are now claimants are those whose children were killed, and the claimants are now old and infirm and unable to take care of themselves. They were a poor class of people, all working people, not one of them had property of considerable value or a competence. The condition of these families can very readily be inferred from the fact that boys and girls of from but twelve to fifteen years of age were daily pursuing their avocation in that arsenal. They were rendering, too, most important service to the Government, because that work had to be done, and it was faithfully done by these people. Through no fault of theirs they became the victims of this great destruction of life. I earnestly hope there will be no objection to this bill.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. The gentleman has not yet stated, and I will ask him, whether he was authorized at a meeting of the committee to call up this bill?

Mr. BAYNE. I was authorized at a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs to report this bill and ask for its passage under this rule.

Mr. ERRETT. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. Has the report accompanying this bill been printed?

Mr. BAYNE. It has been.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for explanation has expired. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has been read? [After a pause.] There are six gentlemen objecting, and the bill is not before the House.

OFFICERS AND CREW OF THE MONITOR.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, called up from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 369) for the relief of the officers and crew of the United States steamer Monitor who participated in the action with the rebel iron-clad Merrimac on the 9th day of March, 1862.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Rear-Admiral John L. Worden and the officers and crew of the United States steamer Monitor who participated in the action with the rebel iron-clad Merrimac on the 9th day of March, 1862, including Chief Engineer Alban C. Stimers and Acting Master Samuel Howard, such a sum as shall be duly found by the said Secretary to have been the actual value of the said iron-clad Merrimac and her armament at the date of said action, not exceeding the sum of $200,000.

SEC. 2. That the sum to be thus distributed shall be in lieu of the bounty provided by section 4635 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and shall be distributed in the proportions fixed by law in cases where the capturing or destroying vessel was acting independently of the commanding officer of a fleet, squadron, or division.

SEC. 3. That in case of the death, either before or after the passage of this act, of any person who would be entitled, if living, to share in its benefits, the sum falling due to such person shall be paid to his widow, if living, and if no widow is living, then to his executor or administrator.

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of carrying this act into effect the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose this bill has been reported upon by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, and I would like to have the report read.

Mr. THOMAS. The report is so voluminous that it cannot be read in five minutes.

Mr. CARLISLE. Is there a report of the House committee?

Mr. THOMAS. A memorial by Admiral Worden, for himself and the officers and crew of the Monitor, was referred by the House to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and was fully and thoroughly examined by that committee and an exhaustive report made thereon. Shortly after the bill was reported back to the House a copy of the bill was introduced into the Senate, referred to the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, investigated by that committee, the report of the House committee adopted as the report of the Senate committee, and the bill was reported to the Senate and passed by that body, as I understand, without a dissenting voice.

Mr. McMILLIN. Permit me to correct the gentleman in that respect. I do not know how the vote stood, but I happened to be in the Senate and I heard the Senator from Missouri making a speech which to my mind demonstrated the fact that this iron-clad was never captured by the Monitor, but was blown up by the confederates themselves.

Mr. THOMAS. All the facts are fully stated in the report of the committee. A more meritorious case than this never was presented to Congress.

At the time of the completion of the Merrimac she was the most formidable war-ship in the world. She came out from Norfolk into Hampton Roads, and every one is familiar with the history of the wonderful contest that occurred between the Merrimac and the Monitor; how the frigates Cumberland and the Congress were sunk; how the whole shipping in Chesapeake Bay was in danger of immediate capture by this confederate iron-clad; how the little Monitor came around from New York, an untried and new device, and engaged in a conflict with the Merrimac, and after the most terrible naval battle ever fought drove that confederate iron-clad back into Norfolk, from which place she was never able again to come out to engage in warfare. By the action of the Monitor at that time, winning that great victory, more was done for the suppression of the rebellion, more was saved to the people of this country by preventing the Merrimac from entering the harbors of Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, and New York and laying those cities under tribute, than was done by one hundred thousand men in the field.

More than that, the building of this monitor, together with that battle, brought about a new era in naval warfare and naval architecture. The country reaped the benefit of the defeat of the Merrimac. The war was shortened at least two years by this action. These men simply come in now and ask to have done in their cases what has been done over and over again in similar cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend explain how it happens, if it so happens, that this matter was not adjusted in the proper prize court?

Mr. THOMAS. I am able to explain that. It is because no bill was ever passed authorizing them to go before the appropriate prize court.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was any special act of Congress necessary for that purpose?

Mr. THOMAS. There was, because in this case the destruction was not immediate, but consequential. If the vessel had been captured outright or had been destroyed immediately these men might have proceeded by petition in a prize court. But the destruction was not immediate. The Merrimac was taken to Norfolk in a sinking condition, but it was found she could not be repaired so as to be made effective, and she was then blown up to keep her from falling into the hands of the Union forces.

Mr. McMILLIN. Who blew her up?

Mr. THOMAS. She was blown up by the confederates to keep her from falling into the hands of the Union forces. She was so much damaged, so nearly destroyed by the Monitor, that she could not be taken out through the blockade.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then these parties want pay for a ship that they did not blow up?

Mr. THOMAS. They want prize-money for a ship they did destroy.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate under the rule has expired.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Would it not be proper to put in, by way of amendment, some other vessels they did not destroy?

The question being taken on the consideration of the bill, ten members objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

BURLINGTON, CEDAR RAPIDS AND NORTHERN RAILWAY.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called. Mr. FARWELL, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to call up for consideration the bill (S. No. 265) to provide for the payment of the amount due the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railway Company for transportation of United States mails.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized to pay to the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railway Company the amount due said company for transporting the United States mails between Plymouth, Iowa, and Austin, Minnesota, from January 8, 1872, to May 21, 1876, at the rates of compensation authorized by law between said dates; and the sum of $5,670.40, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for this purpose, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Postmaster-General that the said company actually transported United States mails between the points mentioned in this act during the time stated, for which it has received no compensation.

Mr. FARWELL, of Iowa. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 265) to provide for the payment of the amount due the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railway Company for transportation of United States mails, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following:

The bill provides that the Postmaster-General be authorized to pay to the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railway Company for transporting the United States mails between Plymouth, Iowa, and Austin, Minnesota, from January 8, 1872, to May 21, 1876, at the rates of compensation authorized by law between said dates.

The facts of the case, as shown by correspondence between the committee and the Post-Office Department, are that said railway company operated a route, No. 11012, from Burlington to Plymouth, two hundred and twenty-eight miles, and ran their trains, with mails and agents, beyond Plymouth over the track of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad to Austin, Minnesota, a distance of thirty-two miles.

No compensation has been paid for the service rendered by this company between Plymouth and Austin.

In the opinion of the committee, based upon the facts as stated by the Post-Office Department, the amount allowable for all mails carried between Plymouth and Austin, as a single route, from January 8, 1872, to May 21, 1876, is $11,869 68.
The amount paid the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad Company for Austin and Mason City mails 6,199 28

There is therefore due the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern Railway Company the sum of 5,670 40 attributable to weight of mails carried by that company, and for which, as stated by the Post-Office Department, "no compensation whatever has been allowed."

Under a decision of the Court of Claims, the Post-Office Department is now paying similar claims upon the same basis herein reported, but cannot pay this, as the money has lapsed that was available for the purpose.

The committee therefore recommend that the sum of $5,670.40 be allowed to the company, and that the bill so amended be passed.

The question being taken on the consideration of the bill, eight members objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.

Mr. STRAIT. Under instruction of the Committee on Public Lands, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3699) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands in railroad limits," approved March 3, 1879.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following bill, as reported by the Committee on the Public Lands with amendments:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act entitled "An act to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits," approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That from and after the passage of this act the even sections or the odd sections or parts of sections that may be included within the limits of any grant of public lands to any railroad company, or to any military-road company, or to any State in aid of any railroad or military road, and which are now or may hereafter become subject to entry under the laws of the United States, shall be open to settlers under the homestead laws to the extent of one hundred and sixty acres to each settler; and any person who has, under existing laws, taken a homestead within the limits of any railroad or military-road land grant, and who by existing laws shall have been restricted to less than one hundred and sixty acres, may enter, under the homestead laws, any of the public lands of the United States subject to homestead entry as when added to the quantity previously entered shall not exceed one hundred and sixty acres; and the residence and cultivation of the land embraced in his original entry shall be considered residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon and of the land embraced in his additional or new entry, and shall be deducted from the five years' residence and cultivation required by law.

"SEC. 2. That the person applying for the benefits of this act shall procure a certificate from the register and the receiver of the land district in which his original homestead is situate as to what the records of their office show touching said original homestead entry, and that the same is free from conflict with any other filing or entry; and upon presentation of such certificate to the Commissioner of the General Land Office the said Commissioner shall verify the same and append thereto a certificate specifying the number of acres of land which the person so applying is entitled to enter; and upon presentation of such certificate at any district land office the person named therein shall be entitled to enter the quantity of land certified therein, by legal subdivisions, upon payment of the fee and commissions now prescribed by law in case of homestead entries: Provided, That in no case shall patent issue upon an additional or new homestead entry under this act until the person has actually cultivated and improved the land embraced therein at least one year; and proof of such cultivation shall be the affidavit of two disinterested witnesses of the county in which such additional land is situated, made before the register or the receiver of the United States land office, or the judge or clerk of any court of record of said county.

"SEC. 3. That the register and the receiver shall each be entitled to receive a fee of $2 in addition to the fee now allowed by law for the preliminary certificate required by the second section of this act.

"SEC. 4. That persons who have heretofore made homestead entries of less than one hundred and sixty acres, whose entries were made in good faith but not perfected within the seven years allowed by law, may make a second homestead entry, which entry, together with the original and forfeited entry, shall not exceed one hundred and sixty acres."

During the reading of the bill the hour expired.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this bill, which will come up to-morrow as unfinished business, will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask that the report also be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The report is as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3699) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands in railroad limits," approved March 3, 1879, which was referred to said committee, and report the same back, with the following amendments, namely:

1. Insert after the word "may," in the eighth line, and before the word "shall," in the twelfth line, the words "be included within the limits of any grant of public lands to any railroad company, or to any military-road company, or to any State in aid of any railroad or military road, and which are now, or may hereafter, become subject to entry under the laws of the United States."

2. Add, as section 4, the following words:

"SEC. 4. That persons who have heretofore made homestead entries of less than one hundred and sixty acres, whose entries were made in good faith, but not perfected within the seven years allowed by law, may make a second homestead entry, which entry, together with the original and forfeited entry, shall not exceed one hundred and sixty acres."

Your committee respectfully recommend the adoption of said amendments, and that the bill, when so amended, do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McLANE. As the select committees have not been called and have had no opportunity to avail themselves of the Pound rule, I ask unanimous consent that the select committee in relation to the late Carlile P. Patterson be now called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the select committee named by him be called as under the Pound rule.

Mr. PRESCOTT objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection; when

Mr. BRIGGS renewed the objection.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 2151) to provide for the publication of the Tenth Census;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing Lieutenant-Commander Charles Dwight Sigbee, United States Navy, to accept a decoration from the Emperor of Germany, and also authorizing Joseph R. Hawley to accept decorations from the Governments of the Netherlands, of Spain, and of Japan; and

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the Society of the Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers the stand of colors presented to it by citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania.

MESSAGES ORDERED TO BE PRINTED.

The SPEAKER. The message of the President on the bill to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea and the message on the river and harbor appropriation bill have not been ordered to be printed as documents, as is customary. If there be no objection, they will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HISCOCK. I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendment numbered 47 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6243) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for prior years, and for those certified as due by the accounting officers of the Treasury in accordance with section 4 of the act of June 14, 1878, heretofore paid from permanent appropriations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,

Managers on the part of the House.

E. HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following is the statement accompanying the conference report:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the deficiency appropriation bill submit the following statement in explanation of the conference report submitted herewith:

The effect of the report is to leave the bill in the same condition as when last acted on by the House; namely, the Senate refuses to recede from its amendment numbered 47, giving mileage to Senators for the late extra or special session of the Senate.

FRANK HISCOCK,
GEO. M. ROBESON,
S. S. COX,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will make a brief statement. The matter in controversy between the two Houses is the pay of mileage to the Senate for the extra October session. We report a disagreement, as we have reported it twice before. On previous occasions I have moved to recede from the disagreement of the House. I do not propose to do so on this occasion; but any other gentleman who chooses can make that motion.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman make?

Mr. HISCOCK. To concur in the report.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. HISCOCK. The only disagreement between the two Houses is what has been reported on two previous occasions, the Senate insisting on mileage for the extra October session. The House heretofore has refused to yield on that question.

Mr. VALENTINE. And I shall move that the House recede from its disagreement.

Mr. BURROWS, of Michigan. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. VALENTINE. I have the right to be heard, as debate has not been closed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I for one believe each House should be responsible for its action to the country touching its own pay and allowance. I have believed so during this entire controversy and have so voted. I believe the question of the pay of employes, which has constantly existed, and over which we have wrangled for several sessions of Congress, should cease. I believe the House should be held responsible for the amount it pays its employes and the amount which it votes to itself each session, and I believe the country should hold the Senate responsible for what it does.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection to that, and only make the reply that clearly the law does not give this money to the Senators or else the House would not be required to vote in order to validate it. If the House votes to recede it will, I understand, take its full share of responsibility and will be as much censurable as the Senate. I do not intend to make any more opposition, but shall ask the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is right.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Kentucky insists on the yeas and nays and this is made a party question in the House—

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not a party question and it cannot be made a party question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is to be hoped some Republicans will vote against this "salary grab."

Mr. VALENTINE. The gentleman's objection is on a par with his usual interjections.

Mr. HISCOCK. That remark of the gentleman from Illinois is ill-timed and in bad taste. When it comes down to the charge or insinuation of the kind the gentleman has made I believe the gentleman from Nebraska is the peer of the gentleman from Illinois, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, there are many men at the other end of the Capitol who are the peers of the gentleman from Illinois, and therefore he had better not bandy terms on that question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to say to the gentleman from New York—

Mr. HISCOCK. I apprehend from the fact the gentleman from Kentucky chooses to call the yeas and nays on this question that, so far as he is concerned, he desires to make a party issue of this question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I do not.

Mr. HISCOCK. Hear me through. I know very well there are many members on this side of the House who will not vote in favor of paying this extra mileage to Senators. Knowing that, I believe it is time lost for the gentleman from Nebraska to make his motion; and while I agree with him, we should recede for the reasons already stated. I hope he will withdraw his motion, as nothing can be gained thereby at this time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, the gentleman from New York will allow me to say just this much: I had no purpose of making any party question of this. My friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] made the strongest speech I heard made on this floor against the proposition; and I do not know but there were as many Republicans opposing it as Democrats.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No one put it on party grounds. Mr. HISCOCK. I appeal to the gentleman from Nebraska to withdraw his motion; for it will be lost and it is a waste of time.

Mr. VALENTINE. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I will withdraw the motion; but I believe each House should be held responsible to the country for its action.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call the previous question on my motion to concur in the report.

The SPEAKER. The report recommends nothing. It merely shows a disagreement, and that has been reported to the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move, then, that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Would it not be proper to ask a further conference?

Mr. HISCOCK. On reflection I will include that. I move that the House ask for a further conference.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that is respectful.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HISCOCK of New York, Mr. ROBESON of New Jersey, and Mr. COX of New York.

ELIZA W. PATTERSON.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] advises the Chair that the objection made to calling, in the hour under the special rule, the committee in relation to the late Carlile P. Patterson is withdrawn. Is there further objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to reserve the right of objection till I know what is brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be subject to objection under the special rule. Is there objection to the committee being called? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLANE. I am instructed by the select committee in relation to the late Carlile P. Patterson to call up from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6428) for the relief of Eliza W. Patterson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all national, municipal, and county taxes, general and special, and all interests, costs, and penalties thereon, levied or assessed to and including June 30, 1882, upon the property (in the District of Columbia) now held (or claimed) by Walter S. Cox and others in trust for Eliza W. Patterson, widow of Carlile P. Patterson, late Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, be, and the same are hereby, remitted and canceled: Provided, That any outstanding certificates of sale for taxes in the name of Carlile P. Patterson, late one of the trustees of said Eliza W. Patterson, shall be surrendered and canceled: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to require the District of Columbia or the United States to repay any sums heretofore paid for the purchase of said property at tax sale: And provided further, That the acceptance of the provisions of this act by said trustee and beneficiaries shall be a full release and satisfaction of all claims of every kind on their part for damages of any kind against the United States, the District of Columbia, or the city of Washington, claimed to have been done to said property.

Mr. McLANE. In the limited time allowed under the Pound rule I will not attempt to have the report read. It is a unanimous report recommending the remission of the taxes in question. I prefer to occupy the five minutes first in giving a word of explanation of my own for not more than one minute, and I will then ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to avail himself of the balance of the time to make what explanation he deems necessary.

The bill as reported by the special committee releases the estate of Carlile P. Patterson from all the back taxes due and unpaid, special and general. But after conference with the honorable chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who gave himself considerable trouble to go into this question and visit the property, I propose, on behalf of the select committee, to strike out all of the bill except that which relates to the special assessments and the pains and penalties connected therewith and the interest on the general taxes, leaving the measure of relief which Congress gives to the family of Carlile P. Patterson a remission only of those special assessments and of the pains and penalties. I now beg the honorable gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to make to the House such explanation as he thinks necessary.

Mr. NEAL. This is to relieve the estate of Carlile Patterson of all special taxes, special assessments, and arrears of general taxes. The matter was called to my attention, and I at once stated justice to the people of this District would not permit me to give my consent to it. I went, however, and made a personal examination of the property; and I found that that property upon which a special assessment certificate has been issued of $7,000 and upward, instead of being benefited was actually damaged by the improvement made. Anybody who will go there and examine it will see the property is damaged and not benefited.

I therefore consented, not as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, because the question has not been brought before that committee, the bill was not referred to them, but individually, watching, as I have done for several years past, the interests of the people of this District, and ignoring, so far as the legislation affecting this District was concerned, every other consideration—I consented that the bill should be so amended as that this property should be exempt from the payment of those special assessments.

Then, again, we have passed a bill to remit all penalties and costs upon arrears of taxes and reduce the interest thereon to 6 per cent., provided those arrears were paid promptly by November 1. I find that this property was appraised in 1874 at $226,000. That appraisal has been reduced. While the property remains precisely the same, the city having grown, however, enormously since that date—that appraisal has been reduced by sworn appraisers over $76,000. It seemed to me, therefore, just and right that while these parties might be compelled to pay the taxes, it might be right and just to remit the interest, the penalties having been already remitted. As I understand the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE,] the select committee propose to introduce an amendment to the bill, which in the first place exempts the property from the payment of the special assessments, and in the second place on the payment of the general taxes to remit the interest thereon. It is due, however, to the House that I should frankly state—

The SPEAKER. The five minutes allowed for explanation are exhausted. Is there objection to the bill?

Five members objected.

The SPEAKER. Five members objecting, the bill is not before the House.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. BUCK. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. No. 1440) relating to the registration of trade-marks. The reading of the bill will show what it is, and I think there can be no objection to it whatever.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That nothing contained in the law entitled "An act to authorize the registration of trade-marks and protect the same," approved March 3, 1881, shall prevent the registry of any lawful trade-mark rightfully used by the applicant in foreign commerce or commerce with Indian tribes at the time of the passage of said act.

Mr. VANCE. The Committee on Patents has considered that bill and it has the unanimous sanction of the committee. It is considered right and proper that it should pass.

Mr. BUCK. I will not give an explanation unless some gentleman desires it.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. BUCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX ON PERIQUE TOBACCO.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 390, to amend section 3362 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the tax on perique tobacco. That tobacco is now doubly taxed, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue very strongly recommends the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3362 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "or for export" and before the words "under such restrictions," in the second provision of said section, the following words:

"And perique tobacco may be sold by the manufacturer or producer thereof, in the form of cartridges, directly to a legally qualified manufacturer to be cut or granulated and used as material in the manufacture of cigarettes or smoking-tobacco, without the payment of tax."

Mr. ELLIS. I will make a brief explanation.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Massachusetts. Saving the right to object.

Mr. ELLIS. This tobacco is raised in a little section of Louisiana, at College Point, a section not larger than the District of Columbia. It is raised by about two hundred Acadian farmers, and is used only as smoking-tobacco.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. ELLIS. It is doubly taxed now; it pays two taxes when it should pay only one.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made and the bill is not before the House.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks upon this bill.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.

WEHRLE, WERK & SON.

Mr. RITCHIE. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4435) for the relief of Wehrle, Werk & Son.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to abate internal-revenue taxes, to the amount of $461.87, illegally assessed against Wehrle, Werk & Son in the year 1876, for spirits distilled in the year 1875.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to retain the right to object to that bill until I can hear some explanation.

Mr. RITCHIE. I wish the House would give heed to the reading of the report, and if members will do so I am sure no one will object to the consideration and passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read, reserving the right to object.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the petition of Wehrle, Werk & Son, of Ottawa County, Ohio, asking for the abatement of an internal-revenue tax, submit the following report:

In 1875 Wehrle, Werk & Son were engaged in the business of fruit distilling at Middlebass Island, in Ottawa County, Ohio, and in the tenth internal-revenue district of said State. On the 22d day of June, 1876, said firm was assessed an internal-revenue tax of $583.37 upon a deficiency in the production of distilled spirits for the month of June, 1875, which they allege was erroneous and unjust.

In the survey of the fruit distillery of said firm, made on the 2d day of January, 1875, the brandy-producing capacity thereof from sour wine in twenty-four hours was placed at 373.55 proof gallons, and the number of gallons of sour wine required to produce one gallon of proof brandy was stated to be 5.35 gallons; said survey also stated the number of boilings capable of being made in twenty-four hours to be nine. This was the survey under which the distillery was operated at the time the deficiency occurred upon which the tax sought to be abated was imposed.

The committee find that said survey was erroneous, and the producing capacity of said distillery was therein overrated in the particulars hereinafter named, and that the error in said survey and estimated capacity of distillation from sour wine was unknown to the petitioners until the same was demonstrated by actual production; having never before attempted the distillation of brandy from sour wine, they had no knowledge of the brandy-producing capacity of said distillery from that material, nor of the number of gallons of wine required to produce a gallon of brandy, nor of the number of boilings that could be made per day. The business of said firm theretofore had been the distillation of brandy from grape cheese, and as the survey of said still and its capacity of production from that material had been found to be correct, we see no reason why the said firm should be required to question the correctness of said survey as to the capacity of production from sour wine before entering upon its distillation under the survey. This they did as an experiment in June, 1875, for the period of fifty-one hours; that, as required by law, they made full return of the time employed in distillation, of the quantity of material used, being 1,532 gallons of sour wine, and of the brandy produced, being 248.28 proof gallons, and paid the revenue tax assessed thereon. No one challenges the correctness of this return, and we see no reason to question it. In this connection we may properly quote the letter of Clark Waggoner, esq., collector of internal revenue for the tenth collection district of Ohio, appended to the petition of Wehrle, Werk & Son, as follows:

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE.
COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, TENTH DISTRICT OHIO.
Toledo, June 11, 1879.

Having given considerable attention to this case, and examined the facts herein set forth, I am fully satisfied that the claim of Wehrle, Werk & Co. for abatement of the tax in question is just. It is proper further to state in this connection that I regard that firm entitled to special consideration for business integrity and respect for law.

C. WAGGONER, Collector.

After this practical test of fifty-one hours under the survey, and the demonstration that the actual capacity of the distillery was largely overestimated, the petitioners ceased to operate the same under the said survey.

After the imposition of the tax upon this deficiency of production, application was made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the abatement of said tax. This he declined to do without authority of Congress, saying:
